MISS

FANNY DE BOUFFLERS

(SOPRANO)

For Oratorios, Cantatas, Concerts, Operatic Recitals, &c.

LIVERPOOL MUSICAL SOCIETY.

HANDEL'S "SAMSON."

Principal Vocalists: Miss Fanny de Boufflers, Miss Dora Barnard, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Band and Chorus of 400.

Liverpool Daily Post, October 31, 1894.—"Miss Fanny de Boufflers acquitted herself admirably, singing her difficult music with taste and precision. The famous and trying air 'Let the bright Seraphim' was very successful, and the singer received hearty commendation from her hearers. 'Ye Men of Gaza' was among her best solo work, and also in the duets with Samson considerable success was achieved."

Liverpool Daily Courier, October 31, 1894.—"Miss Fanny de Boufflers, in all the soprano solos, proved herself an eminently qualified artist. Her voice has a good carrying capacity, and she was heard to advantage in all her numbers. The florid passages in 'Ye Men of Gaza' she rendered with considerable effect, while 'Let the bright Seraphim,' one of the most telling airs in the work, she gave with marked ability."

CLECKHEATON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

MENDELSSOHN'S "HYMN OF PRAISE."

Yorkshire Post, December 6, 1894.—"The principals were Miss Fanny de Boufflers, Miss Alice Lamb, and Mr. Iver McKay, who acquitted themselves admirably. In particular might be mentioned the soprano air 'Praise thou the Lord,' and the duets for soprano and contralto and soprano and tenor, all of which were finely sung."

BARNESLEY ST. CECILIA SOCIETY.

HANDEL'S "SAMSON."

Sheffield Telegraph, November 29, 1894.—"The soprano solos were sung by Miss Fanny de Boufflers, and she is to be credited with an excellent interpretation of 'Let the bright Seraphim.'"

Sheffield Independent, November 30, 1894.—"Miss Fanny de Boufflers sang the numbers allotted to her with great care and feeling, the airs 'Ye men of Gaza' and 'My faith and truth' being much applauded."

CLECKHEATON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

ROSSINI'S "STABAT MATER."

Guardian, December 7, 1894.—"The 'honours' of the evening were fairly divided between Mr. Iver McKay and Miss Fanny de Boufflers. The latter sang with great brilliance in the closing air, 'When thou comest to the judgment,' when the high C rang clearly out above the ff accompaniment of band and chorus."

THE SCOTTISH ORCHESTRA.

(MR. GEORGE HENSCHL, Conductor).

Glasgow Mail.—"Miss Fanny de Boufflers contributed much to the enjoyment of the audience. She refused an encore (thrice recalled) for a rendering of the Handelian air 'Let the bright Seraphim,' but on again being enthusiastically recalled after singing 'Should he upbraid,' repeated a portion of it."

Glasgow Herald.—"A soprano of very considerable worth, receiving a most emphatic demonstration of appreciation from her hearers."

SOWERBY BRIDGE CHORAL SOCIETY.

HANDEL'S "SAMSON."

"Of the principals, Miss Fanny de Boufflers took the part of Delilah. Her beautiful articulation in the florid passages of the first song, 'Ye men of Gaza,' placed her first favourite; her singing throughout was splendid. 'Let the bright seraphim,' with trumpet obbligato by Mr. A. Tomlinson, was the success of the evening."—Halifax Courier, December 15, 1894.

"A Booklet" of Press Opinions, Répertoire, Photo, Terms, &c., forwarded on application. Address, CARLTON HOUSE, SAINT JAMES ROAD, LIVERPOOL.

Agent: N. VERT, Esq., 6, Cork Street, London, W.

MISS HONEYBONE

(SOPRANO)

"Miss Honeybone sustained the part of Rebekah, and sang the score allotted to her with grace and sweetness, under the conductorship of Sir Joseph Barnby."—Droitwich Guardian, Sept. 1, 1894.

47, Hampden Street, Nottingham.

THE SOPRANO SOLO BOY!

MASTER

STERDALE BENNETT

(Chester and Leeds Festivals, 1894; Queen's Hall, &c.)
(Pupil of Mr. BENHAM BLAXLAND).

Master STERDALE BENNETT's beautiful voice and artistic singing have, on every occasion, given satisfaction, and he has had an experience (see répertoire) unsurpassed, both in London and the Provinces. Mr. BLAXLAND has also other highly-trained Solo Boys, who hold appointments at leading London Churches, and forty Chorus Boys (available week days). Refined tone, Cathedral style. Boys may be heard by appointment.

From Sir JOHN STAINER to Mr. B. BLAXLAND.

"You deserve warm congratulations on the admirable singing of Master John Sterdale Bennett. He does your training great credit. The child himself has genuine musical feeling, which I trust will be of service to him in after-life."—Nov. 13, 1894.

From Dr. C. H. H. PARRY to Mr. BLAXLAND.

"I am glad to have the opportunity of saying that Master Sterdale Bennett, who sang the part of first child in 'Judith' at the Chester Festival, did it most admirably. It has never been better done. He showed remarkable intelligence, phrasing and expression, and I am also indebted to you for giving him such an excellent idea of it. I am very glad I am going to have him for the 'Shepherd Boy' in 'Job,' at Leeds."—Nov. 10, 1894.

"Writing just after the splendid performance of 'Job,' at Leeds, I am most glad to say Sterdale Bennett acquitted himself surprisingly well in the 'Shepherd's' music, and sang with remarkable intelligence and refined feeling, and gave just the right declamation to give the part its true effect." (Signed) "C. H. PARRY."

"We have great pleasure in cordially endorsing the above."
(Signed) "EDMUND WARD," } Hon. Secs.
"THOS. PIERCY," }
"Leeds Philharmonic Society, Nov. 14, 1894."

Répertoire: Gounod's "Redemption," "Messe Solennelle," "Gallia," "Ave Maria"; Mendelssohn's "Elijah," "St. Paul," "Hymn of Praise," "Lauda Zion," "95th Psalm," "Hear my Prayer," &c.; Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," PARRY's "Judith," "Job," Bach's "Passion," "My heart ever faithful"; Handel's "Messiah," "Largo (Ombra mai fai)," "Holy, Holy," &c.; Spohr's "Last Judgment," "God, Thou art great," "How lovely are," &c.; Haydn's "Creation"; Weber's "Mass in G," Mozart's "Mass in C," Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," Schubert's "Song of Miriam," "Masses in B flat and G," Gaul's "Holy City." Also Masses by various Composers, Selections from Oratorios, Anthems, Ballads, &c.

TRINITY COLLEGE LONDON

FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION AND EXAMINATION.—INST. 1872.

President: SIR RICHARD E. WEBSTER, G.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P.

Warden: PROF. E. H. TURPIN, Mus.D.

Director of Studies: PROF. BRADBURY TURNER, Mus.B.

STUDENTS of the College (Professional or Amateur) can receive instruction in all branches of music under eminent Professors.

LENT TERM begins on Wednesday, January 16. New Students will be admitted on Monday, 14th, and Tuesday, 15th, at 11 o'clock. Both day and evening classes are held.

For a Course of four Studies, a principal one (thirty minutes), a secondary one (twenty minutes), as well as a Theory Class subject and Sight-Singing, Students are charged a fee of FIVE GUINEAS. Students taking two principal Studies (of thirty minutes), a Theory Class subject and Sight-Singing, are charged a fee of SIX GUINEAS. Students may enter for one subject at THREE GUINEAS a Term, for weekly lessons of thirty minutes, in any of the following subjects: Pianoforte, Solo Singing, Organ, Violin, Violoncello, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Harp, Horn, Trumpet, Double Bass, &c., Figured Bass Playing, Pianoforte Accompaniment, or Elocution. The class fee for Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Vocal and Aural Physiology, Voice Production, Acoustics, Elocution, French, German, or Italian, is ONE GUINEA a Term.

The following Scholarships and Exhibitions in connection with the College are open to all-comers: The Henry Smart Scholarship (tenable for three years), The Queen Victoria Scholarship (tenable for three years), The Sir Julius Benedict Pianoforte Exhibition, the Sims Reeves Vocal Exhibition, the College Organ Exhibition, the College Violin Exhibition, the College Viola Exhibition, the College Violoncello Exhibition, and the College Double Bass Exhibition (all tenable for one year), and eight other Scholarships tenable for three years.

The Tuition of the College is intended to serve as a preparative for the Higher and Local Examinations of the College, and for other public examinations, including the examinations for University degrees.

The successful Candidates at the College Examinations entitled to use initials after their names are Licentiates in Music (L.T.C.L.), and Associates in Music (A.T.C.L.) only.

The Queen Victoria Lectures for the Session will be delivered by Professor J. F. Bridge, Mus.D.

Weekly Lectures are delivered by the Warden during Term, and are especially addressed to Students intending to enter for the Higher Examinations. The Lectures are free to all Students.

Students' Concerts are given at the College at Intervals during Term, and usually at the end of each Term an Orchestral Concert is given at Princes' Hall.

The Orchestral Class meets each Saturday during Term at four o'clock, under the direction of Mr. F. Corder.

Prospectuses and all further information may be obtained from the undersigned.

JANUARY 1, 1895.

THE figures which, for some time past, have headed the New Year's number of this journal are steadily creeping on towards the end of the nineteenth century. To the young and ardent they may seem to move slowly; to some of us their advance is all too quick. But the twentieth century stands in general view, and when the 8 disappears for ever from its long-held place in the group, then will come such a time for the stock-taking of humanity as no living man has known. In so vast a computation, the reckoning comprises more than our span of life, and none can check the whole of it at first hand. Just now, happily, the mighty task is not before us. It awaits those who "are alive and remain" five years hence. But it is ours to note the passing of another year, and the coming of its successor—to look, once more, backward upon a path freshly trodden, and forward, with hope and trust, in the direction of a road as yet veiled and unknown. Let us take Longfellow's advice, and "go forward to meet the future without fear, and with a manly heart."

At a moment like the present each man has his own circumscribed duty. It is not for any one to take in the entire vast field of human effort, since the best of us can speak only of the little that happens within the scope of personal observation. In this respect, too, life resembles a battle. Who knows less of a "foughten field" than the individual combatant, seeing only the smoke and hearing only the noise in his immediate vicinity? His story of the conflict is a mere record of personal experiences—a small item in the mass which goes as a contribution to general history. The reflection should teach us to be humble, or, at any rate, to found our pride, if we must have it, upon the common achievement, wherein, as individuals, we bear so small a part. All this holds good with regard to the field of musical activity, in which the writer and the readers of these words take interest—in which, certainly as to some, presumably as to all, a portion of their activities find scope for exercise. It may be said by people who speak before they think, that the field of music is not too large, or the movements within it too complicated, for personal survey and recognition. Some of us, no doubt, do see farther and more intelligently than others, but the man must have miraculous eyes who, while doing that which lies ready to his own hands, comprehends all the forces engaged and watches in philosophic calm the trend of the conflict. Observe that we are carrying the similitude of a battle into the domain of an art which of all arts is, in its essence, the least connected with material interests and with the passions of men. In thus acting we hold ourselves justified. The advance of humanity on every road has to be made by fighting, if not always against active foes, at any rate against inertia. A conflict even more formidable is that internecine struggle between varying methods and differing ideals, for which, in all ages and every department of human effort, men have warred more zealously than against ignorance, the common foe. Who, then, will say that the task of the musical reviewer is an easy one, or that the individual, with his personal share in the work, with his limited purview and large dependence upon the observation of others, can do that which, in effect, is possible only in the calm atmosphere and with the abundant knowledge of a time when present passions and prejudices will no longer sway conclusions?

On the present occasion we make no pretence of surveying musical mankind "from China to Peru." Enough if we glance at the condition of our own country—a small land, geographically, but large enough for the most comprehensive study possible under actual conditions. The year 1894 in England produced no new developments of an epoch-making order; but the fact has not involved disappointment. We move too slowly in this country and, as regards art, are too much lacking in enthusiasm for reasonable expectation of any other result. It is true that on the surface of musical society, or, rather, in the high-pressure regions where men must talk, write, and dispute because that much is expected of them, matters have been lively enough. Musical critics have girded at each other as though to show the public that no fear need be entertained of the union which would make them strong to repress the false and encourage the true. Nor have their polemics, we regret to add, been free from an unworthy personal element—from imputation of disgraceful motives and hardly disguised evidence of rancour, in excuse of which zeal for art cannot be pleaded. This is nothing new. There never was a time, perhaps, when critics did not sneer at each other or bandy hard words, seeing that the atmosphere of music is one in which quarrels propagate readily, seeing also that journalism is a notoriously jealous profession. It seems, nevertheless, that the voice of discord has become intensified of late, and the fact may be due to certain peculiarities of the "new criticism." Let it be understood that we do not indiscriminately censure and repel the new criticism. It has a ludicrous side which sometimes provokes a laugh, and laughter is precious in a strenuous and serious age. But, just because it is new, one should wait and watch. When you make a fresh channel for pent-up waters, the first outflow always runs muddy; clearness and value asserting themselves later. In time, possibly, the case of the new criticism will be analogous; that which is now repellent passing away, leaving for our admiration only that which is attractive. Such, at any rate, is our hope.

In another respect the past year has shown the continued action of forces singularly doubtful in point of worth. As in the apostolic days, some men contend for Paul and some for Apollos; but we must make all men alike before we can hope to banish preferences, especially in connection with an art which appeals so strongly to personal feeling. Nor, for that matter, is it desirable that preferences should cease. What might with advantage pass away is the disposition to belittle another man's hero, not merely because we consider him inferior to our own, but also because the other man thinks him superior. A striking illustration appears in the singular animosity with which, by some people, Mendelssohn is regarded. Although admirers of that master, we do not expect every one to see him in the same light. That would be absurd. There is room for various musical gifts and each may legitimately find partisans, but there is no room for fanatics who go about to demolish all idols save their own. There is consolation, no doubt, in the futility of their efforts. The anti-Mendelssohn crusade, if productive of any results at all, has tended rather to confirm that master in public affection. Natural resentment in view of attacks upon one who, when all is said against him, remains a refined and graceful musician whose works have been, and are, a source of delight to millions—that natural feeling, we say, has so worked in Mendelssohn's favour that now the great mass of the public—the arbiters of fame for the time being—are more firmly attached to him than ever. Would it not be better to cultivate catholicity rather than partisanship? We may not esteem all composers alike, but we may recognise the measure of good which is in each, and at the same time remember that it belongs to no man to regulate the taste of his neighbour.

Coming out of the contentious region into the realm of quiet and steady work, we find that native composers, if they have done nothing to astonish us during the past year, continue to justify public confidence. The great and commanding genius for whom we are all longing—he, the heaven-sent one, whose light shall shine from this northern island to the opposite end of the earth—of him it may still be asked, Where is the promise of his advent? But, failing that brilliant apparition, we are doing pretty well. Our composers cannot be charged with setting before themselves low ideals. They aim high—an indispensable preliminary to making a lofty mark, and they show an equally needful measure of perseverance. This, we know, is not enough. But we may go farther, and, looking at such works as Dr. Parry's "King Saul" and Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "Jeanie Deans," say that, in actual achievement, the year just ended was not barren of reason for some degree of comfortable complacency. There is no need to make comparisons between our own country and others, or it would appear that, at a time when the few remaining great lights are going below the horizon and there are no kindling flames above the eastern hills, we stand, to say the least, as well off as our neighbours. Surely we feel, in the domain of creative art, the stimulating influence of energy and hope. The native composer is up and doing, and no longer apologetic. His imagination is not deadened by despair of encouragement and appreciation. He knows that the great public will, to the best of the light that is in them, give him an intelligent and, certainly, a just hearing, and that any work he may produce will stand or fall upon its merits. To put it shortly and, at the same time, to speak generally, the British composer has now the "fair field and no favour" which, in every department of energy, stands for the British idea of rectitude. It may be said—it is said—that the product of all this energy and all these favouring conditions does not amount to much. That is, to some extent, a matter of opinion and we will not now discuss the proposition, preferring rather to rest upon our faith that so great an awakening of the British musician as is now obvious to all portends the coming of a noble era in our national art. There was a stirring in the valley of dry bones before the breath of life passed over it and men long dead arose.

Hopeful, further—nay, a development to be prized rather as the substance of things hoped for—is the progress made by orchestral organisations and orchestral music during the period of time just closed. Though few of us may, in our haste, pause to measure its significance, we are now witnessing the greatest forward movement that history records of any British art. It is greatest not merely in extent, but in assured promise of priceless results. Once induce the average amateur to hear orchestral music with intelligence and love, and a revolution, as to value incalculable, is effected. That happy achievement cannot be far off, though there is, of course, much to do, and though, for a long time, the general public will be more alive to sensuous effects of sound than to the play of feeling and idea. But, difficulties notwithstanding, no one can watch the progress made all over the country without recognising a great, steady, and well directed advance to the goal which is the desired of every musical enthusiast. The reader shakes his head, perhaps, and is prepared, like Sancho Panza, to retort with a proverb concerning eyes that see, not the things which are, but the things wished for. Of course, every anticipation of events to come involves the prophetic character of him who indulges in it. As regards the orchestral outlook, we are entirely content to risk ours.

The question now arises whether we can find equal satisfaction in the state of music among the masses. From some points of view that is most surely possible. If there be a period in our national history when music was more esteemed and more generally cultivated than now by the bulk of the population, we should like to know the date. It is said that in the "spacious days" of Elizabeth, every gentleman could take his part in a madrigal, but the cultured class is not now in question; we are referring to the multitude, who, in the sixteenth century, were not considered. The multitude of our own day have come into a glorious possession, and await a yet more glorious reversion. It is to them that the wise observer gives the greatest measure of his regard, marking the signs of improving taste, the evidence of growing skill, the lengthening roll of choral societies, the increase of classes for study. We do not under-rate the importance of what is done in the high places of musical society, we cannot over-rate the importance of what is done lower down, for there, with all its vast possibilities and its stupendous strength, as yet so pathetic in its want of exercise, lies the nation. To the musical welfare of the many all can contribute in some measure, and, in connection with this fact, we desire to quote a brilliant passage from an address delivered in Birmingham eighteen years ago by John Morley:—

"We cannot, like Beethoven or Handel, lift the soul by the magic of divine melody into the seventh heaven of ineffable vision and hope incommensurable; we cannot, like Newton, weigh the far-off stars in a balance, and measure the heavings of the eternal flood; we cannot, like Voltaire, scorch up what is cruel and false by a word as a flame, nor, like Milton or Burke, awaken men's hearts with the note of an organ-trumpet; we cannot, like the great saints of the churches and the great sages of the schools, add to those acquisitions of spiritual beauty and intellectual mystery which have, one by one and little by little, raised man from being no higher than the brute to be only a little lower than the angels. But what we can do—the humblest in this great hall—is, by diligently using our own minds and diligently seeking to extend our own opportunities to others, to help to swell that common tide on the force and the set of whose currents depends the prosperous voyaging of humanity. When our names are blotted out and our place knows us no more, the energy of each social service will remain, like the unending stream of one of nature's forces! The thought that this is so may well lighten the poor perplexities of our daily life . . . it lifts us from our feet as on wings, opening a larger meaning to our private toil and a higher purpose to our public endeavour; it makes the morning bright as we awake to its welcome, and the evening like a soft garment as it wraps us about."

Now adieu, Old Year:

When Finis comes, the book we close,
And, somewhat sadly, Fancy goes,
With backward step from stage to stage
Of that accomplished pilgrimage . . .
The thorn lies thicker than the rose!

There is so much that no one knows—
So much unreachd that none suppose;
What flaws! what faults! on every page,
When Finis comes.

With retrospect must ever mingle sorrow for the unachieved and the misspent; but the immediate past, with all its shortcomings, casts upon the near future the light of hope. We do not know what the year just entered upon may have in store, but, as by a natural law, the impetus gathered during that gone by will carry our English music nearer to its destined goal. Let us do nothing to hinder it. That is the moral of the season for every one of us. It is not a question whether this or that critic goes to the left when he should turn to the right, or whether or no he spells art with a capital A; it is not a question whether this or that composer rises or falls in the market. Such petty matters tend to obscure the great issue, and to divert us from the main duty of urging large and liberal views, of pointing out the "good in everything" and opening the eyes of our neighbour to its beauty, of teaching that the whole world is full of music—as indeed it is—with the hearing whereof comes great reward. Let us think more of the art and less of its accessories; more of the goal and less of contending that there is but one road to it—our own. Every man amongst us has much to learn in this respect, and would master the lesson if he rightly comprehended the height and depth of the theme. "Out-topping knowledge," says Matthew Arnold of Skakespeare:

For the loftiest hill
That to the stars uncrowns his majesty,
Planting his steepest footsteps in the sea,
Making the Heaven of Heavens his dwelling-place,
Spares but the cloudy border of his base
To the foil'd searching of mortality.

The heaven-lit summit of the hill of Music may be inaccessible to us, but we may attain "the cloudy border of his base" by mutual help, and the recognition of a common aim.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

FROM MY STUDY.

PIETRO NARDINI, whose portrait is before the reader's eye, belonged to that brilliant band of Italian violinists which flourished in the eighteenth century. Biographers are not of one mind as to the place of his birth. According to Gerber, Choron, and others, he was a native of Leghorn; but Gervasoni, who is said to have made enquiries on the spot, declares that the honour of being his natal place appertains to the Tuscan village of Fibiana. Nardini was born in 1722, and, while still a very young child, became a resident in Leghorn, whither his parents removed. The change had important results, since it placed the boy in a position to indulge an inborn taste for music. Like so many of his eminent musical countrymen, he took naturally to the violin, making such progress that it was thought prudent to place him under the famous master, Tartini, then established at Padua. Young Nardini passed several years with the composer of the "Devil's Trill," but beyond this little is known of his early history. That he old Italian home, and to his venerated master, who was at that time near the end of an illustrious career. In 1770 Nardini became solo violinist and director of the music at the Court of the Duke of Tuscany. In that position he remained some years, and died in Florence, May 7, 1793, at the age of seventy-one. Nearly all accounts of his playing agree that, while not among the most brilliant performers, he was a master of expression and could work at will upon the emotions of those who heard him. In President Dupaty's letters occurs satisfied his teacher may be assumed from the fact that on returning to Leghorn at the age of twenty-four he promptly came to the front as a solo violinist and composer. A very common result followed. At that time, and for long after, the princes of Germany delighted in Italian music and its professors, to the almost complete exclusion, and the entire discontent, of their own countrymen. Hence, when Nardini came under the notice of the Duke of Wurtemberg, that august Serenity offered him an engagement on terms so advantageous that the artist could not refuse. At Stuttgart he remained fifteen years, then going back to his a passage worth extracting: "Ce violon est une voix ou en a une. Il a touché les fibres de mon oreille qui n'avaient jamais frémi. Avec quelle ténuité Nardini divise l'air! avec quelle adresse il exprime le son de toutes les cordes de son instrument! avec quel art, en un mot, il travaille et épure le son!" Rangoni, a contemporary and fellow citizen of Nardini, wrote in 1790 to this effect: "Nardini especially shone in the performance of Adagios, and on hearing him without seeing the performer, the magic of his bow was such that it sounded rather like a human voice than a violin." Fétis bears the same evidence:

"This artist did not shine by prodigies of mechanism in the execution of difficulties. Inferior in that respect to his predecessor, Locatelli, he had, by way of compensation, an admirably pure tone, remarkably like that of the human voice, and in Adagios his touching expression was admired by all." Leopold Mozart said of Nardini: "The beauty, purity, and equality of his tone, and the tastefulness of his cantabile playing, cannot be surpassed, but he does not execute great difficulties." This is Schubart's evidence: "His playing brings tears into the eyes of stony-hearted courtiers—nay, his own tears run down on his violin." From the foregoing testimony it seems clear what manner of artist Nardini was.

The compositions of this master include six concertos and as many sonatas, solos, trios, quartets, and duets. Of these Herr Paul David writes: "Vivacity, grace, a sweet sentimentality, are the main characteristics of his style, which is altogether more modern in form and feeling than Tartini's. His Allegros are often largely developed, and already display the full Sonata form, while his slow movements are not unlike Viotti's. If, nevertheless, the greater part of his works appears to us old-fashioned and antiquated compared with those of Tartini, the reason is that he has neither the depth of feeling, the grand pathos, nor the concentrated energy of his great master." Nardini's works are rarely heard in England, which country, by the way, he does not appear to have visited. Only two have a place in the catalogue of the Popular Concerts—the Sonata in D, played once, over twenty years ago, and a Larghetto in the same key, played twice.

The famous violinist and composer, Arcangelo Corelli, to whom attention is next invited, was born at Fusignano, in the territory of Bologna, in 1653. According to Italian biographers, he was taught counterpoint by Simonelli, of the Papal Chapel, and the violin by Bassani, of Bologna. He is said, but apparently on no authority of weight, to have made an early appearance in Paris, where he excited the jealousy of Lulli and had to depart in consequence. There is more reason to believe that he actually visited Germany and was attached to the Court of the Duke of Bavaria, about 1680. But he did not long remain expatriated. His good genius led him to Rome, where he speedily attracted attention as a composer by issuing (1683) his first set of Sonatas. There, also, he became principal first violin at the opera. Corelli continued to augment the fame accruing to him through his works, the highest point being reached in 1700, when appeared the celebrated and undying "Sonate à Violino, e Violone, o Cembalo, Opera Quinta," dedicated to the Electress of Brandenburg. He was fortunate enough to win the favour of the Mæcenas of his day, Cardinal Ottoboni, and under the protection of that eminent Prince of the Church he lived the remainder of his life. Corelli died in Rome, January 13, 1713, and lies buried in the Pantheon, where a fitting monument, erected near that of Raphael, records his artistic and personal worth. Geminiani, who was one of his pupils, put on record many details of the master's later years, and from him we derive our knowledge of the visit to Naples which caused the Roman artist so much humiliation. Corelli and his companions were fairly outplayed by the Neapolitans, who, at first sight, equally well rendered works which the visitors knew by heart. Other rebuffs of a more personal nature had such an effect that, it is said, the master "stole back to Rome in silence." He seems to have taken rivalry much to heart. When a hautboy player was much applauded in Rome, Corelli retired disgusted from public life, and the success there of Valentini is even said to have hastened his end. All this was in keeping with an extremely sensitive nature. Corelli's highest claim to remembrance and honour comes through his works. "In regard to the peculiar merits of Corelli's productions," says a biographer, "it may be briefly said that his solos, as a classical book for forming the hand of a young practitioner on the violin, have ever been regarded as truly valuable by the most eminent masters of that instrument. . . . Tartini formed all his scholars on those solos, and Giardini observed that, of any two pupils of equal age and ability, if the one were to begin his studies by Corelli, and the other by Geminiani, or any other eminent master whatever, he was certain that the first would become the best performer."

I have found considerable interest in looking through the programmes of some Quartet Concerts given in what may almost be styled the olden time. These sheets were purchased at the sale of the late Mr. Dando's library, and refer to the performances of chamber music which for a number of years were given under his direction. The general remark suggested by them is one I have made on various occasions—namely, that London amateurs, before the days of John Ella and Arthur Chappell, were not without opportunities of hearing the finest compositions played by the best available artists. How many those opportunities were it would surprise not a few to learn.

The first Concert of the long series under consideration took place in Hanover Square Rooms on February 16, 1837—nearly fifty-eight years ago. Messrs. Blagrove, Gattie, Dando, and Lucas formed the string quartet; the other artists being Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Howell, Madame Caradori Allan, and Sir George Smart. The programme, though longer than those in vogue at the present time, was of much the same character. It opened with a String Quartet by Weiss, and closed the first part with the E flat major (Op. 74) of Beethoven. In the second part were Mozart's G minor Quartet, a Sonata for violoncello and double bass by Corelli, and Mendelssohn's Quartet (Op. 13) ("Ist es wahr?"), the last-named being then heard for the first time in this country. The performance began at 8.30 p.m., and single tickets were priced at seven shillings. Two other Concerts were given in the course of this trial season. At the first (March 9) Beethoven's posthumous Quartet in C sharp minor was introduced as a stranger to the English public—an act betokening robust faith and involving some risk. The executants were the four artists named above. A Quintet by Onslow was also given; Madame Dulcken was the pianist, Mrs. Alfred Shaw the vocalist, and the accompanist, Mr. (afterwards Sir) Henry Bishop. At the final Concert (March 30), the same performers appeared, save that Cipriani Potter took the place of Madame Dulcken, and Mrs. Shaw gave way to Madame Caradori. On this occasion Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E major, for organ, was played by Mr. Potter, Mr. Howell taking the pedal part on the double bass. Makeshifts of this, or any other, kind are necessarily inartistic; but the method adopted was, at any rate, nearer the truth than a derangement for pianoforte alone. Spohr's Quartet in C major was a "first time in England" on this occasion, and it is worthy of note that Madame Caradori sang Schubert's "Gretchen am Spinnrade." At a supplementary Concert on April 13, for Mr. Blagrove's benefit, Beethoven's last Quartet (F major, Op. 134) was first heard by an English audience. Moscheles took the pianoforte, Mrs. Bishop and Miss Birch being the vocalists. A curious example of programme music was presented on one of these occasions. Onslow had met with an accident while shooting, and the work referred to (Quintet in C minor) represented his sufferings and recovery, the first two movements depicting pain, fever, and delirium; the third, convalescence; the fourth, cure. The success of the trial season was so great that Messrs. Blagrove, Gattie, Dando, and Lucas returned thanks and promised continuance.

In January, 1838, the two Banisters, Dando, and W. Blagrove started a fourth series of Chamber Concerts at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate. This enterprise must therefore have begun in 1835, and, as it now seems, in a place where its continuance was very unlikely. But the conditions of life in the City were very different then, and Concerts, as will quickly appear, flourished there. These performances went on concurrently with those in Hanover Square, the West End season beginning only a little later. In the opening programme I find Quartets by Haydn and Ries, a double Quartet by Spohr, and Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in D. Mr. W. Sterndale Bennett was the pianist, and one of his songs, "The Zephyr," had a place in the evening's selection. The programme of the fourth Concert contains a curious "note": "Messrs. Blagrove, Gattie, Dando, and Lucas regret that they are deprived of the services of M. Heinemeyer this evening. In his passage from Hamburg he was detained at sea five days, which has so affected his embouchure that, at present, he is unable to perform." Poor Mr. Heinemeyer! it is not difficult to guess the nature of the distress which had so untoward a result. The season of 1839 began with the first performance in England of Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E flat, the programme including, also, Beethoven's Quintet in C and Schubert's "Ave Maria," sung by Miss Masson. At the second Concert, "M. Benedict" accompanied the vocal music, and Mr. Schultz was the solo pianist. Onslow again had a conspicuous place, being represented by his Quintet in E minor. Where is that composer now? In 1839, a favourite; in 1894, forgotten! The vocalists this year included Miss Dolby, Miss Fanny Wyndham, and no less a person than Mr. Balfe, who, at the fourth Concert, sang Weber's "Natur und Liebe" and an air from Spohr's "Jessonda." On the same occasion a new Quartet by Fesca was heard for the first time in public. J. L. Hattton accompanied the songs, but later, at the London Tavern, that versatile musician appeared as vocalist and solo pianist; singing "Largo al factotum" and playing the pianoforte in Hummel's Quintet.

The opening Concert of 1840 brought Hummel's Septet, with Messrs. Card (flute), G. Cooke (oboe), H. Jarrett (horn), Mrs. Anderson (pianoforte), and Lindley (violoncello). Adding Dando and Howell, we get a superb cast of parts, not easily matched even now. Madame Stockhausen, mother of the baritone who was with us some years ago, appeared as vocalist. At the third Concert, Corelli's Trio for two violoncellos and double bass was played by Lindley, Lucas, and Howell, while at the fourth, Miss Susan Hobbs, "from the Bath Subscription Concerts," made her début in London. The services of Mr. J. Bennett were also engaged, it would seem for the first time. A Pianoforte Trio in C minor, by Woelfl, formed part of the selection. Note that, at this time, the season had expanded to six Concerts. At the fifth there was a first performance in England of Beethoven's E flat Quartet (Op. 127), while the programme of the sixth included Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Trio, composed expressly for the occasion, and Mendelssohn's Ottet. Bennett, as may be supposed, took the pianoforte part of his own work. A song from "The Regicide," an opera by Lucas, words by Thomas Oliphant, figured at this Concert; Madame Stockhausen singing:

O whither shall I fly? Will no kind hand
In pity lead me from this scene of woe?
Shall treason stalk triumphant through the land,
And royal blood all unavenged flow?

Passing to the year 1841, I find a list of the performers engaged. Here it is: Mesdames Caradori Allan, Anderson, Woodyatt, Rainforth, Dolby; Messrs. Lindley, Potter, Sterndale Bennett, Benedict, Howell, John Parry, Alfred Novello, H. Bishop, and Hobbs. The programmes of the season, like those already noticed, contain names of composers who have fallen out of favour. Who now cares for Reber and his Pianoforte Trio in E flat, or Romberg and his Quartet in C, or Burgmüller, or Mayseder (as a writer of quartets), or Fesca? At the third Concert Mendelssohn's "new Trio" in D minor had its first performance on English ground, the executants being Madame Dulcken, Blagrove, and Lucas, and I note, at the fourth, a Pianoforte Trio in B flat by Cipriani Potter. I note, further, the introduction, by Miss Rainforth, of one of Löwe's Ballads, "The Goldsmith's Daughter." That composer and his works were not made known to us yesterday. At the first Concert of 1842, Adelaide Kemble sang Meyerbeer's scena, "Le Poëte Mourant"—

Compagnons dispersés de mon triste voyage,
O mes amis, vous qui me fûtes si chers!
De mes chants imparfait recueillez l'héritage,
Et sauvez de l'oubli quelques-uns de mes vers.

Will no one save this scena from oblivion? It is surely worth the notice of artists.

In March, 1842, Mr. Dando announced that he had leased a part of Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate Street, and "carefully, and at great expense, restored to its pristine beauty and elegance that part of it known as the Throne Room, in which, besides other improvements, he has erected a fine organ." From that time onward, over a space of certainly seventeen years, Mr. Dando and his old associates were identified with Crosby Hall. It would take more space than can be spared to go through the remaining programmes as those already noticed have been treated, nor is that course necessary in order to show what good work was done in Richard of Gloucester's throne room. The selections were always of the highest character, and no whit below the standard of those now presented in St. James's Hall. I will, however, run through the pile before me, stopping for a moment at points of particular interest. In May, 1842, Weber's Clarinet Quintet was heard for the first time in this country, the wind instrument player being Mr. Itjen. Other first performances in England were those of Gebel's String Quintet, March, 1843; Spohr's Quartet in B flat, March, 1845; Lachner's Quartet in E flat, February, 1845; Mendelssohn's scena, "Infelice" (vocalist, Miss Messent), March, 1852; Onslow's Pianoforte Trio in G, February, 1856; and Haydn's Quartet in E (No. 8), March, 1867. In February, 1845, I find Mr. Hancock playing the double-bass part in an Onslow Quintet "on his newly-invented Bassodi Camera," whatever that may have been; and in April, 1843, Mr. Dando presented Haydn's "Seven Last Words" in quartet form, but with the addition of the chorales, which were sung by the Misses Williams, Mr. Carter, and Mr. A. Novello; that being, according to the programme, the first public performance under such conditions.

The last of the programmes before me bring us down very near the time when the Popular Concerts were established, and the present order of things took its rise. In putting the leaflets aside, I do so with respect for the earnest and able musicians—nearly all gone to their rest—who prepared the way for chamber music of the best kind in this metropolis and did so much to enlarge the knowledge even of connoisseurs.

X.

MUSICAL MONSTROSITIES.

It may be safely assumed that in every age the evolution of music has been attended with eccentric manifestations and exploits which, so far from assisting in the development of the art, have rather tended to retard and discredit it. To this category, for example, one may refer such a monstrosity as Raimondi's extraordinary triple Oratorio, "Potiphar, Jacob, and Joseph," each part of which was intended to be performed separately, and then the whole three together. Moritz Hauptmann gives an amusing description of this momentous work, which he not unfairly describes as "an illustration of the absurdities a virtuoso may commit when he can do nothing better." The score was five feet high and five feet broad, and although the composition displayed not a little technical skill, it was a melancholy monument of misplaced ingenuity and perverted talent. The annals of music are studded with similar instances of ineptitude. The commonest form of musical monstrosity, we may observe, is perhaps that which consists in attaining extraordinary proficiency on some perfectly worthless instrument, or something which is not a musical instrument at all. In an unlucky moment a man finds out that he can elicit musical notes from, say, a coffee-pot, a hat-box, or a cricket bat, and he forthwith devotes himself with unrelenting assiduity to master the technique of his newly discovered instrument. In some sad cases he resorts to the public exhibition of his talent, and ekes out a precarious livelihood as, say, the champion coffee-pot soloist. Years ago there was one such artist who gave recitals at which he played tunes by rapping with his fist on his chin. We do not purpose to multiply further instances in the past of distorted talent, but to call attention to the latest and most portentous manifestations of musical eccentricity which have appeared in our midst.

We are not aware who was the first man who challenged all-comers to some feat of futile endurance, but we expect that the tendency is to be traced back to the very dawn of the world's history. Some primordial ape, gifted with a singularly prehensile tail, may perhaps have shown off his accomplishment by hanging from a bough for so protracted a period as to inspire the jealousy of his fellows. The spirit of competition is as old as the everlasting hills, but in the matter of mere brute endurance it has happily left music alone until late years. But the enormous recent spread of athleticism, and in particular the organisation of long-distance races—walking, running, and cycling—has excited so potent an influence on the civilised world, that musicians were certain to be infected sooner or later by the record-breaking mania. Early in 1887 an English soldier was reported to have played the piano-forte at Calcutta for twenty-three hours consecutively. We do not know the name of that soldier, and we cannot for the life of us conceive what his commanding officer can have been about. But the fact remains that the recital of his pianofortitude so moved Mr. Napoleon Bird while he was in a barber's shop in Stockport, in the spring of 1887, that in reply to a customer who asked him what he thought of it, he then and there declared his readiness to surpass the military man's efforts without ever resting either hand. A bet of £10 was promptly laid against him, but Mr. Bird won it on June 7 and 8, 1887, by playing twenty-five hours with both hands continuously. This, however, by no means satisfied his soaring ambition, and on October 27 and 28 in the same year, he increased his record to thirty-six and a quarter hours, and was presented with a "massive gold watch chain pendant, bearing the inscription to the effect that the gift came from the public of Stockport," in recognition of his feat. For seven years Mr. Napoleon Bird was allowed to remain in undisputed possession of the long distance championship of the ivories. But within the last couple of months a determined effort to wrest the supremacy from England was made by a German athlete named Berg, yclept "the iron pianist." The credit of England was at stake, but Mr. Bird was equal to the occasion, and at the end of November he entered once more the pianistic arena. The scene of his pyramidal achievement was the Stockport Armoury, and we are assured by the Manchester Courier that it created interest in musical circles, besides exciting the "close attention of the sporting fraternity." Mr. Bird came, and played, and conquered. For forty consecutive hours the dauntless performer kept up an uninterrupted flow of melody with both hands. Herr Berg's repertory, if we mistake not, only comprised 400 pieces; but Mr. Bird played "over 1,000 selections—overtures, operatic pieces, descriptive works, songs, and dances." Furthermore, everything was played without notes, not a single sheet of music being allowed in the bond. But Mr. Bird was happily guarded against the depressing influences of monotony by the organisers of the entertainment. There were Concerts every evening "to increase the variety," and, without breaking the continuity of the performance, Mr. Bird acted as accompanist to the singers "right away on being told what the songs were and the keys in which they were to be played." On one night, as he pathetically put it, "we, or rather they," had a dance from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. His repertory of dance music was by no means exhausted by those four hours, but the dancing licence came to an end at that time, and Mr. Bird had to continue his task without the accompaniment of "twinkling feet." Still he was never alone. He had two doctors, who exchanged duty whilst he played, and he had a professional nurse "who never left me." Well may the poet sing—

O woman, in our hours of ease
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please;
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou.

For the professional nurse was charged with the duty of ministering to the wants of Mr. Bird "according to a diet which had been carefully prescribed," and which included "roast fowl, dry bread, brandy and soda, lemonade and iced water, and, after thirty-two hours' play, a dozen oysters." He was never hidden from the view of the public, who had thus the extreme felicity of seeing him take his food while he played, and by means of a mirror placed in front of him he was afforded visible proof of the untiring interest and affectionate solicitude of the public. In particular he tells of one party of ladies whom he saw "sitting there for seven hours at least." After this, who shall dare to say la donna è mobile?

If only he had been allowed to have turned a hand over and stretched his fingers now and then, Mr. Bird believes that he could have gone on for sixty hours. But with a modesty that is beyond all praise he remarks: "I suppose I ought to feel some degree of satisfaction in having beaten all the piano-playing records, so far as I have heard of them." Well, if Mr. Bird doesn't feel satisfaction, who, we should like to know, is likely to, outside the "sporting fraternity" and the musical circles of Stockport? For, at any rate, he is not to be ranked among those celebrities who meet with no recognition on their native heaths. At the close of the exhibition he made a speech to an enthusiastic audience, and was escorted by "cheering thousands" to his home. When the inevitable interviewer called next day, he found Mr. Bird "wrapped up in flannels down to the wrists," but otherwise perfectly well, and prepared to fulfil a professional engagement the same evening.

The foregoing account, let us assure our readers, is no effort of imagination. It is faithfully reproduced from the interview with Mr. Bird which appears in the Manchester Courier for November 30. The champion then stated that he had no desire to break his own record for another month at least, and for this we may be thankful. But in view of the present attitude of a very large section of the public, it is to be feared that this is very far from being the last of those exhibitions in which a noble and beautiful art is degraded into the occasion for the display of utterly futile endurance. We have devoted what some of our readers may consider a wholly unnecessary amount of space to the chronicling of this preposterous feat simply in order to emphasize its absurdity. A story is told of the present Czar's great grandfather and namesake which is not without its bearing on the Stockport incident. When the thaw had set in, the Czar once saw from the windows of his palace a peasant crossing the Neva by leaping from block to block of ice. Sending out an officer to learn the cause of this rash proceeding, he was informed that the peasant had done it to win a wager of twenty-five roubles. Whereon the Czar ordered the peasant to receive twenty-five strokes of the knout, adding sententiously that men of that stamp would commit any atrocity for money. There are moments when one regrets that absolute monarchs do not exist in this country.

A SHORT GLOSSARY OF MUSICAL TERMS (UP TO DATE).

BY A DISCONTENTED MUSICIAN.

Music.—A succession of more or less discordant sounds; the more discordant the sound, the better the music. Music is divided into two sorts. When interpreted by the human voice it is called Vocal (though this is often a misnomer); when played by one or more instruments it is sometimes instrumental—in driving people into the farthest corner of the room or Hall, or out of it altogether. Vocal music is so far preferable to instrumental, in that the former (except, perhaps, in Opera) takes considerably less time to get through than the latter. These two sorts of music are again divided into abstract music, which is not intended to convey any meaning (and usually doesn't), and programme music, which insists on your taking it for what it is supposed to represent, whether you think it does or not.

People are affected differently by music, according to their various temperaments. In some it causes intense emotion and excitement, a difficulty in sitting still in one place or keeping the head, hands, or feet quiet, even to the extent of a constant desire to be throwing something—a bouquet or some other objectionable thing—at the artist of the moment; in other people it induces somnolence; in others, again, utter forgetfulness—of the time a Concert commences, and indifference—as to its conclusion, &c., &c. Composers are seldom affected by music not their own.

Melody.—An obsolete term.

Harmony.—That sentiment which exists between two prime donne in the same theatre.

Discord.—See Music.

Common Chord.—This chord has obtained the reputation of being so common that composers usually avoid it, except, on rare occasions, to finish a piece or movement with.

Diminished Seventh.—A chord which is used to modulate from one key into any other when no easier way can be thought of.

Scale.—A youthful progression of notes, the sound of which is but slightly diminished by the interposition of a thin brick wall or partition. A major scale ascends to the octave and down again, triumphantly, as if it were proud of the feat; a minor scale, on the contrary, starts conceitedly, but returns with "its tail between its legs," metaphorically speaking, as if it had made a failure—somewhat after the fashion of an artist whose opinion of himself and that entertained of him by the audience differ. N.B.—Chromatic scales also exist, but they are usually employed only to portray thunderstorms and rough sea voyages.

Consecutive Fifths.—An artifice used by composers to show their indifference to the rules of grammar, and to annoy critics and Mus. Docs.

Signature.—The number of flats or sharps placed at the beginning of a piece to indicate the only key not used in the piece.

Counterpoint.—Two or more themes forcibly made to go together whether they desire it or not. Two barrel-organs playing different tunes in the same street are a good example of counterpoint.)

Time.—The division of a piece into bars containing a more or less equal number of minims, crotchets, or quavers, as the case may be. This division is not an arbitrary one. N.B.—Singers and other musicians occasionally take advantage of this fact.

Rhythm.—A number of accents (the stronger the better) placed intentionally on the unaccented parts of the bar, so that no one knows where the bar begins or ends. This can be done in many very ingenious ways.

Modulation.—The art of beginning a piece in one key, dexterously going through all the keys of the scale, and returning to the key one started in without its being perceived. If a piece remains long enough in any one key for the listener to be able to get firm hold in his mind of this key before it escapes into another, the modulation is not a good one.

Tremolo.—An orchestral device used mostly as an accompaniment when no other resource is conveniently at hand. It is capable of expressing almost all natural or supernatural ideas, such as angels, lovers, villains, &c., according to whether it is played in the high treble, the middle register, or the bass respectively. When used by the human voice it is generally expressive of fear—or of inability to sing differently.

Instrumentation.—The art of Instrumentation consists in writing as many separate parts for the violins and other stringed instruments in the orchestra as the entrepreneur of the Concert or Opera House will pay for players to play them. Several trombones playing the principal theme ff are an important and necessary adjunct to this, as well as an occasional use of the other wind instruments. The employment of instruments which do not blend well with others, such as the banjo, concertina, &c., is also sometimes very effective.

f or forte.—As loud as possible.

p or piano.—Perhaps not quite so loud as the above. (The difference is perceptible only to well-trained ears).

Crescendo.—Quicker.

Diminendo.—Slower.

Allegro.—In Italian, as fast as possible; in German, moderately; in English, without any hurry.

Andante.—In Italian, slightly slower than Allegro; in German, quietly and tenderly; in English, very slowly and gravely, dragging the time.

Da capo.—These words are put at the end of a piece to signify "over again, from the beginning." They have now become almost unnecessary, the artist deciding for himself (usually in the affirmative) whether the piece shall be repeated or not.

Composition.—The art of absorbing the musical ideas of others and reproducing them in such a way that they shall be sufficiently unrecognisable to one's self and scarcely less so to the listener.

Composer.—Any one of any nationality (except British) who composes.

Pianist.—Anyone who plays the pianoforte and comes to England from a foreign country.

Violinist.—Do., do., who plays the violin, and do., do., do.

Artist.—Do., do., who does any of the above three things, and do., do., do.

Singer.—A person who possesses a more or less agreeable voice, and has a répertoire of at least three ballads, which he can sing to his own satisfaction.

Conductor.—A figure, with a short stick in his right hand, which is placed in the centre of an orchestra, with its back to the audience, and facing a desk on which rests the music of the piece to be performed. By a mechanical contrivance contained in the body, the figure, as soon as the orchestra begins to play, raises both arms, and waves them about periodically, continuing this action until the orchestra ceases, when, or soon after, it lowers its arms, and stops. By means of a further mechanism it can be made to spread out the fingers of the left hand, turn over the pages in front of it at intervals, keep time with its head to the music being played, and, at the conclusion, to revolve on one foot, bend the upper part of the body twice, and quickly reassume its original quiescent position.

Opera.—A highly sensational, immoral play, set to quite unnecessary music.

Symphony.—An orchestral work in as many movements as possible, displaying plenty of learning and more dulness. (N.B.—Symphonies are seldom published.)

Concerto.—An orchestral work with an accompaniment for the pianoforte, which instrument endeavours at various times to make itself heard above the orchestra, but, failing in these attempts, gives up, and leaves the latter to play by itself.

Chamber Music.—Three or more stringed or wind instruments (or both) played simultaneously by the same number of performers, who are not permitted to leave their seats for at least three-quarters of an hour. Occasional breathing time is allowed to these performers, who, however, must not take it all at the same time.

Song.—A short, mediocre poem, divided into two or three verses, having, usually, as its theme the reminiscences of an elderly relative or the premature decease of a youthful one, and set to more or less inappropriate music for a single voice, with an accompaniment for the pianoforte, consisting of chords for the first one or two verses, and triplets for the last. It should not be written in any key with more than three sharps or flats.

Part-Song.—A short piece of vocal music in several parts (usually without accompaniment), which begins in one key and ends half-a-tone or more lower.

Glee.—When the words of a poem consist of very few lines, not sufficient for an ordinary Part-Song, these are repeated many times over in the musical setting, in order to make the Piece of the necessary length. This constitutes the difference between a glee and a part-song.

Interval.—The most enjoyable part of any musical entertainment.

EARLY in the New Year Messrs. Novello and Co. will publish an Album of Songs, by Dr. Hubert Parry. They constitute the third set of "English Lyrics" produced by their eminent composer, and comprise settings of six poems—"To Lucasta, on going to the wars," by Lovelace; "If thou wouldst ease thine heart," by Beddoes; Lovelace's "To Althea, from prison"; Suckling's "Why so pale and wan?" "Through the ivory gate," by Julian Sturgis; and "Of all the torments," by William Walsh. Three of the songs were sung by Mr. Plunket Greene, at St. James's Hall, on the 14th ult., and their merits speedily recognised. The set will be warmly welcomed wherever evasion of the commonplace is regarded as a merit.

LAST month we took occasion, in recording the resignation of Sir George Grove, to recall to our readers the signal services, extending over some forty years, which the outgoing Director has rendered to the art he has loved and loves so well. As briefly recorded in our last issue, Dr. Hubert Parry has been appointed as his successor, and it is not too much to say that the choice has conferred fresh distinction on the Royal College, at the same time that it has set the seal of official recognition on a career of remarkable brilliancy and achievement. There is, so far as we can see, only one serious drawback to the appointment, in that the duties and engagements which it entails may interfere with the creative activity of a composer whose age and whose genius entitle us to expect many another noble addition to the long list of delightful works with which he has already enriched the repertory of English music. The cares of office and of organisation are difficult to reconcile with that atmosphere of aloofness and detachment in which the promptings of inspiration are most likely to find unimpeded utterance. The future, however, may dispel these misgivings, and the past certainly affords little justification for entertaining them. Dr. Parry has always been an insatiable worker—a man of multifarious engagements, who has found time concurrently with the labours of composition to lecture, and write books, and to shirk no drudgery in the conscientious desire to do his duty by his pupils. From a good deal of this drudgery he will now be released; and if he can only be persuaded to cultivate the virtue of timely inaccessibility, and refuse to victimise himself in the interests of bores and drones, it may be that he will have more leisure as a Director than he had as a Professor.

THE amount of work that Dr. Parry has managed to crowd into the last twenty years of his life affords conclusive proof of his energy and versatility, especially when it is borne in mind that he was not destined for the calling which he now adorns, and did not embrace it until he was nearly five-and-twenty. His father, Mr. T. Gambier Parry, who united rare accomplishments as an amateur artist, architect, and designer, with a singular charm of personality, sent him to Eton, where he was not only the best football player of his day, but took his Mus. Bac. degree at the age of seventeen. At Eton, we may observe, he was a contemporary of Lord Rosebery, Lord Randolph Churchill, Canon Scott Holland, and Mr. Arthur Balfour, who has “all along”—as he once told the present writer—“been a firm believer in Hubert Parry.” From Eton he went to Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in honours in Law and Modern History in 1870, and, for a short time, had a desk at Lloyd’s. But from the first his heart had been set on music, and his leisure had been devoted to study—with Sir George Elvey, Sir George Macfarren, H. H. Pierson (of Stuttgart), and, finally, Mr. Dannreuther—and composition. The final choice of a calling was made about the year 1872, and, having once put his hand to the plough, never for a moment has he turned back, or faltered in his devotion to the art of which he is now one of the most conspicuous ornaments. It is impossible within the limits of the space at our disposal to do more than single out the most notable of the products of his pen. His first efforts were chiefly in the domain of instrumental or chamber music, and it was not until 1880 that he gave to the world in “Prometheus Unbound” the first of those choral works in which he has achieved such notable distinction. To 1883 belong the “English” Symphony and the delightful incidental music to Aristophanes’s “Birds”; in 1887 his noble ode, “Blest Pair of Sirens,” was heard at a Bach Choir Concert; and in 1888 “Judith” was produced at the Birmingham Festival. Since then hardly a year has passed in which he has not been represented at one or other of the leading festivals by a work of first-rate importance—“St. Cecilia’s Day,” at Leeds, in 1889; “L’Allegro ed il Pensieroso,” at Norwich, in 1890; the “De Profundis,” at Hereford, in 1891; “Job,” at Gloucester, in 1892; and “King Saul,” at Birmingham, in 1894. To these must be added his exhilarating incidental music to the “Frogs” of Aristophanes, his “Eton,” his “Lotos Eaters,” his “Hypatia” music, and his fine “Tragic” Overture.

THE foregoing list, which makes no pretence to completeness, is very far from exhausting the record of Dr. Parry’s indefatigable activity. Since the foundation of the Royal College, as Professor of Composition and Musical History at that Institution, he has exercised an influence which it would be difficult to over-estimate. As a lecturer, he has constantly been in evidence at the Royal Institution and at Oxford, where he holds the office of Chorus to the University; and he has found time not only to contribute some of the most valuable articles to Grove’s Dictionary, but to write two books—his suggestive “Studies of Great Composers” and his masterly “Art of Music,” the best treatise on the evolution of music in the English language, which extorted the astonishing tribute from Mr. Bernard Shaw that he had actually learnt something from it. Of even greater importance in his new post, however, than his great achievements and distinctions, do we reckon Dr. Parry’s vigorous and inspiring personality. For not only is he the soul of good humour and kindness, radiating sunshine wherever he goes, but he is a living proof of the valuable fact that a musician is all the better for being a good “all-round man.” His manliness and his wide range of interests—athletic, social, and literary—lend a peculiar charm to the personality of the new Director and render him, perhaps, the least “shoppy” member of his profession. It is no small satisfaction to those who honour music to think that Dr. Parry should have been chosen to occupy a post in which his wholesome and stimulating influence is likely to be exerted even more energetically and fruitfully than at any previous stage of his career.

THE attention of all pianists will, doubtless, be drawn to the remarkable paper on keyboard technique read by Mr. Macdonald Smith before the Musical Association, a report of which appears in another column. This age has been marked by innumerable discoveries and theories, some of which have been of so startling a nature that the wildest announcement would receive careful examination and a certain amount of credence. Mr. Smith’s system is, however, based upon accepted physiological facts, and it promises such a diminution of wearisome work that a certain fascination is imparted to the scheme. There can be little doubt but that virtuosi are naturally endowed with exceptional muscular development of a kind peculiarly favourable to digital celerity and precision; and any system, therefore, which tends to overcome the muscular weaknesses common to most people is undoubtedly of great value. Mr. Smith’s method has also otherwise much to recommend it. There is no risk of overstraining the muscles; the exercises require no apparatus; they can be gone through in a few minutes, and whenever opportunity offers; and, if totally futile for their special object—which is hardly possible—must at least conduce to healthy development. Moreover, the method promises to do away with a vast amount of practising at the keyboard, and for this alone is worthy of attention and fair trial; for probably in no art is more time fruitlessly spent than in music, and certainly in none is more aggravation given to the long-suffering next-door neighbour. The progress and accomplishments of Mr. Smith's pupils will therefore be watched with considerable interest; and should the results establish the truth of the theory, and prove that the actions really develop executive ability more quickly than the hitherto employed keyboard exercises, pianoforte training will undoubtedly enter upon a new era.

A HITHERTO unknown Symphony in three movements, and in the key of C major, by Johann Michael Haydn, a younger brother of Joseph Haydn, was recently played at the Leipzig Conservatoire and exceedingly well received by critics and audience alike. According to the Leipziger Tageblatt the two quick movements are remarkable for freshness and vivacity. The Finale—Vivace assai, Fugato—was considered especially effective, recalling Mozart both in the strength of its themes and the beautifully finished workmanship. The slow movement—Rondo, un poco adagio—is of a very pleasing character, and not unlike some of the slow movements of Joseph Haydn. Herr Otto Schmid, who discovered the Symphony and lent the score and parts to the Conservatoire, has made the life and works of Michael Haydn his special study. He informs us that according to authentic chronological and thematic indexes in his possession this particular work was completed on September 28, 1784. This would seem to prove that, instead of its fugal Finale having been inspired, as some critics thought, by the Fugue in Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, it is not at all unlikely that the latter composer's choice of a fugue—in the same key too!—for the Finale to that masterpiece was suggested to him by the work which has just been resuscitated. For the "Jupiter" was not composed till 1788. We have all read a pretty tale relating how Mozart heard a certain fugue by Clementi praised, and how, not thinking much of the piece himself, he undertook to write a better one on the same subject; whereupon he sat him down and composed the wonderful "Zauberflöte" Overture. Can it be that the matchless "Jupiter" Finale was written in some such spirit of rivalry? It would be a fascinating conjecture.

NOBODY who consults the pages of booksellers' catalogues, or the publishers' announcements in the newspapers, can fail to be struck with the number of novels recently published in which music plays a more or less important part. "A Bayreuth Pilgrimage," "A Daughter of Music," "Music hath Charms," "Doreen, a Singer," and "A New Note" (in which the heroine is a pupil of Joachim's) have all appeared in the last few months; while in the last piece produced at the Haymarket the principal female character was a professional singer. Whether all these evidences of literary interest in an art which Mr. Andrew Lang once declared, if a sacrifice was called for, might perish before all the others, are a matter for congratulation or not, is a question which does not admit of an immediate answer. The famous remark of Pericles that women (not New Women) best fulfilled their destiny when they were least talked about, is applicable to other things besides the fair sex. A great deal of modern talk about music—especially the talk in novels—is by no means calculated to further the interests of that art. In Mr. du Maurier's "Tribly," for instance, the gratuitous tirade against Wagner is one of the most infelicitous passages in a clever and striking novel. Still, with all its prejudices and limitations, Mr. du Maurier's treatment of the subject is preferable to the conventional rhapsodies of the average novelist. Tribly at least is represented as having undergone an arduous training, while the regulation heroine, who electrifies her hearers by her "rich" and "glorious" contralto voice, generally dispenses with any instruction whatsoever.

THAT WALTZ.

WE danced. Of sweet maidens, the sweetest,
To see her was perfect delight;
Her feet were the smallest and fleetest,
Her figure so gracefully slight.
I thought, as we glided in delicate dance,
That nothing was wanting just then to enhance
The pleasure of living, thus favoured by chance.

We danced. I was carefully clasping
Her waist, of so tiny a girth;
Her hand I was tenderly grasping,
It seemed heaven here upon earth.
The music was that of Apollo's own lyre,
Such sweetness, such languishing pathos, such fire!
Apparently played by a heavenly choir.

We danced. I was hers, hers for ever!
To say I was not would be false.
Enraptured, I fancied there never
Was music so sweet as a waltz.
As we went round the room, gay with flowers and palms,
I scorned all sonatas, songs, symphonies, psalms,
And thought, "Grieg is gammon, drat Dvorák, blow Brahms"!

We danced. She danced simply divinely.
She spoke. What a voice, and soft and low!
That waltz, as they played it, so finely,
Surpassed any music I know.
I thought, "All the Wagnerites must be obtuse,
Beethoven and Bach deserve only abuse,
Poor Chopin and Schubert may go to the deuce."

We danced—till the music was finished;
We talked—till the music began.
My joy then was somewhat diminished,
She danced with a horrible man.
A fool, he was very much taller than I;
His silky moustache was so black—was it dye?
She seemed to admire him, I cannot tell why.

They danced. All the while some poor duffers Strummed, fiddled, with horrible sound.
What exquisite torture one suffers
When errors in music abound!
I thought of that waltz with a D that was big;
I felt in a fury, I cared not a fig
For any contemptible, capering jig.

They danced. I reflected that dances
Should give no sane person delight;
A fool with a flirt twirls and prances,
I hate the ridiculous sight.
But, more than the movement, the music is bad.
When School Board pianos teach infants, how sad
That anyone likes it! Such noise drives me mad.

They danced. I could bear it no longer,
That vile, inharmonious din;
My hatred of waltzes grew stronger,
Another would shortly begin.
I fled, with the speed of a cat-pursued mouse,
And thought, as I hurried away from the house,
"I'd hang all composers like wretched old Strauss."

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

MR. WHATELY W. INGALL, writing to the Lewisham Gazette, states his desire to see in every town and important village throughout the land—(I.) a Concert hall, (II.) a permanent orchestra of recognised ability, (III.) a really capable conductor, (IV.) fixed weekly Concerts. This savours of the millennium; nevertheless, we all join Mr. Ingall in his aspiration. Wishes are as free as thoughts.

How does Mr. Ingall propose the attainment of such a musically blissful state? He answers: "There is one method which has commended itself to my mind as being feasible—to establish an orchestral rate payable upon the fixed assessment by the entire body of ratepayers." If it be suggested that the rates are already a burden grievous to bear, and that ratepayers are showing an impatience of local taxation which cannot be called ignorant, being founded on accurate knowledge of where the shoe pinches, Mr. Ingall is ready with a reply. Says he: "We pay many rates now which I should personally be glad to see lowered, particularly those applicable to the Union Infirmary and School Board, in regard to which the better-class ratepayers reap absolutely no advantage, and often they operate to their direct detriment." Having lowered these rates—by stinting the comforts of pauper patients and the education of poor children, in which the "better-class ratepayer" does not participate—and having obtained his orchestra rate, concert hall, conductor, and band, Mr. Ingall would give free admission to all ratepayers, "who could be allotted positions in accordance with formed groups of assessments," the result of which, I suppose, would be that the hundred-pounders would sit by themselves in the best places, and so on. It is not absolutely necessary, perhaps, to make any comment upon Mr. Ingall's suggestions as a whole.

On the 13th ult. Miss Margaret Fowles, founder and, for more than twenty years, Conductor of the Ryde Choral Union, presided at a performance of "The Messiah," and then took her leave of the institution she had built up. Ill health, not weariness in well doing, dictated the lady's retirement, and I, for one, join in the hope expressed by the donors of a gold watch, "that it would mark time for many years with the truth their esteemed conductress had always shown."

WITH reference to the event just recorded, an incident took place which does not reflect much credit upon the Bumblebee of Ryde. At a meeting of the Town Council held two days before the Choral Union Concert, a letter was read in which Miss Fowles, after pointing out special circumstances, expressed a hope that the Mayor and Corporation would attend the performance. Other business being taken up, Councillor Blackall asked whether the Mayor would answer the letter. His Worship replied that it was addressed to the Council, not to himself. Councillor Blackall: "Can we speak on it now?" The Mayor: "The letter was acknowledged, but we can't discuss it." Upon this, the Councillor pointed to No. 1 on the agenda: "To consider any letter addressed to the Mayor, the Council," &c., "and to pass such resolutions thereon," &c. The Mayor met this by a Standing Order and ruled that the matter could not be discussed; he was, however, willing to put a resolution that the Alderman and Councillors accompany the Mayor to the Concert.

MR. BLACKALL then moved a resolution to the effect stated, dwelling upon the usefulness of the Choral Union and the good work done by Miss Fowles. His speech ended, the Mayor wished to know whether robes were expected to be worn. The Councillor did not care about the robes, but wished the attendance to be an official act. At this juncture up rose Councillor Pollard labouring under a difficulty. "If every place be taken," said, in effect, Councillor Pollard, "where are we to find seats?" The Corporation "gave it up," and, the resolution wanting a seconder, passed to the next business. I wonder when Mr. Ingall will see an orchestra rate made in Ryde?

THE good feeling which prevails among the musicians of Gloucestershire has just been manifested anew. At a recent meeting of the Gloucester Festival Committee it was resolved to invite the Bristol Orpheus Society to attend the only secular Concert in the programme, and perform a selection from their repertory. The invitation has been cordially accepted by Mr. Riseley and his capital gleemen. It is understood that the Bristolians will not only give their services, but pay their own expenses. That they will receive an enthusiastic welcome is, of course, assured.

"WAGNER Nights" we know, but Birmingham has just had a Wagner Day, the Royal Carl Rosa Company performing "Tannhäuser" in the morning and "Lohengrin" in the evening. This was a very considerable stage achievement.

A RECENT number of the Cornishman contained a sonnet on "Rubenstein," the author of which seems to be labouring under an idea that Anton Rubinstein—who, of course, is meant—was a Pole. He speaks of "Poland's loss" and describes an audience rising "as if Poland's dead was there." This is a strange mistake. Rubinstein, born a Russian, came, on his father's side, of a family of Polish Jews, while his mother was a German Jewess. Out of this mixture it is difficult to evolve a Pole.

I NOTE, in the journal above-named, a contribution from "A Lover of Sweet Sounds" on the subject of a Recital by Slivinski. It contains a description of the pianist, who, I learn, "has not a leonine mane, like his fellow-student, Paderewski, to form a halo of attraction and interest." But, "the man is emotional to his finger-tips, prepared to be lulled into dreamland by some fairyland echoes, or jump with delirious and tingling ecstasy as a tremendous crash of harmony bursts with electric force and the room rings with the resonant music." I had no idea that Slivinski was thus neurotic.

CONTINUING his description, "A Lover of Sweet Sounds" says: "But this man, Slivinski, gathered together his whole muscular and nerve power, raised his hands to the level of his head, and smote the keyboard with the loosened fury of a catapult; but our feelings rose with the outburst of blended sounds, and the final terrific bang in Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' was only a climax of delight." Paul Hentzner, who travelled in this country 300 years ago, said: "The English are fond of loud noises." The intervening centuries have not changed some of us.

A TRANSPORTINE journal inserted a curious report of the successful Concert lately given by the South London Orchestral Society, under Mr. G. A. Higgs. The orchestra, it was said, "assayed with Mozart's Symphony in E flat." "It was a big task," the writer continues, "but a brilliant performance. For slow and quick movements it was a triumph of musical accomplishments for a local choir." Again, on the subject of Mr. German's Dances in "Henry VIII": "Part 2 opened with three selections by the orchestra, being three sweet old German dances of the time of Henry III." "The choir" did very well with these, in the opinion of the writer.

I HAVE read with much interest the letter from Mr. Frank Kidson which appears in another column, more particularly the part referring to "Gaarge Ridler's Oven." So many years have passed since the tune, as sung by the peasantry of the Vale district, was familiar to me, that I cannot venture to speak with confidence; but the air of the "Waayzailers' Zong," as given by Mr. Kidson, wakens no recollections of "Gaarge" in my mind. "George Ridler" may be so sung by the "hill-men," between whom and the people of the Vale there used to be little in common, save, perhaps, a disposition to fisticuffs. I recognise the "Wassail" tune reprinted from Chappell, but it differs materially from that I used to know. Some twenty years ago I asked a musical friend in Gloucestershire to note it down as sung by a well-known local minstrel. This he did, after the said minstrel had held his mouth "under the good yaale tap" for a considerable period. I have, unfortunately, mislaid the MS., but may state, from personal recollection, that the tune was in 3-4 not C, and that the last two phrases ran thus—

The "Wassail Song" may still be heard at Christmas time, and I will endeavour to have it re-written.

News of the death of Mr. Charles Severn, the once well-known violoncellist and contrabassist, has just reached me. He was in his ninetieth year, and, therefore, with his removal another link connecting our own day and the beginning of the century has parted. Mr. Severn was a Court musician when the Queen ascended the throne, and played at her coronation. The scarlet and gold coat he wore on that occasion is still preserved. He took part, also, in the first performance of "Elijah" at Birmingham. He was a member of the opera orchestra for nearly fifty years, and during forty-six years held the post of organist at Islington Parish Church. Charles Severn was, I believe, a brother of the painter whose name is famous in connection with Keats, and an uncle of Mr. Arthur Severn.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "As a pendant to your anecdote about the co-operation of 'Lohengrin' and 'Carmen,' I may mention that an English lady at Munich was heard to inform her friend that she was going to hear 'Lohengrin' sung by 'Madame Sans Gêne.'"

JOSEPH BENNETT.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THE saying about returning to one's first love is exemplified by the present association of Frank Burnand and Arthur Sullivan. Near upon thirty years ago these gentlemen worked together, producing "Cox and Box" and the "Contrabandista," with every prospect of continued success. But soon the musician was attracted by a new charmer; the Gilbert-Sullivan alliance was formed, and a second outlook of continuity opened up. Alas, this is a changeful world! The seeming inseparables parted asunder, and now we have Burnand-Sullivan once more. We also have the "Contrabandista" again—the old "Contrabandista" of St. George's Hall, with an expanded story, much new music, and vastly greater pretensions. Among those who took part in the original production were Miss Arabella Smythe, Miss Lucy Franklin, and Mr. Shaw, and no doubt there are many who remember that admirable comedian's clever delivery of the song "From rock to rock." To a majority, however, of present playgoers, the "Chieftain"—for the work has been re-named—is altogether new. Nearly a generation—twenty-seven years, to be precise—has passed since the "Contrabandista" ran its course on the German Reed stage, and in that time there are many exits from and entrances upon the stage of life. Curiosity, therefore, ministered to the success of the enlarged and amended opera, as produced at the Savoy, on the 12th ult.

Mr. Burnand humorously confesses to having been misled in 1867 as to the adventures of Mr. Grigg among the bandits. When that excellent representative of Twickenham respectability was captured and compelled to become a robber chief and husband of a robber chief's widow, he did not escape, as the librettist first thought, in the train of soldiers who released his fellow-prisoner, Rita. Later information shows that Grigg remained at his double post till ransomed, in the regular manner, by Rita's martial lover and deliverer, Vasques. During that time, all communication with Mrs. Grigg at Twickenham ceased, whereupon the good lady took ship for Spain in search of the lost one; on arrival, engaging as courier the runaway husband of the chieftainess whom Grigg had been compelled to wed. Here was a fresh development—materials for a "pretty coil." The new part of the story is devoted to telling how all knowledge of Grigg's matrimonial escapade was concealed from his lawful wife, and how the chieftainess contrived to capture her original partner. We need not enter into details, with which, by this time, readers are familiar; but the fun of the libretto, its smart verses and often witty dialogue, call for acknowledgment. The opera, as a stage work, is a capital piece of fooling and keeps the audience in a desirable state of meriment till the curtain falls.

Sir Arthur Sullivan has retained much of the music in the old first act of the "Contrabandista," and that with no greater change than some strengthening of the orchestral part involved. We may regard this as more or less well-known, for though the first version has not been played of late years, many numbers from it have become public property. Granting all the merits claimed for the music of 1867, we are bound to declare that of 1894 far superior at all points. It belongs to the best work of its kind from the same pen, alike in gracefulness, humour, and exhilaration of spirit. One might imagine the composer as determined to show that the experience of more than a quarter of a century could prove of infinite value even in the region of comic opera, where the musician's task is generally supposed to be easy, though, in point of fact, exceedingly difficult. We can hardly select particular numbers for special approval, since all are so good; besides, general praise in the case of a Sullivan opera is at once understood to involve a lot of excellences with which everybody is acquainted. Our readers may safely put their money on the "Chieftain," and be assured that it will purchase an enjoyable evening. The piece is admirably staged, and played in a satisfactory manner, the principal parts being sustained by Miss St. John, Miss Brandram, Miss Perry, Mr. Walter Passmore, Mr. Courtice Pounds, Mr. Scott Fiske, Mr. Temple, and others. Though he should have been at home nursing his sprained ankle, Sir Arthur Sullivan conducted the first performance, and had the pleasure, with Mr. Burnand, of seeing the opera enthusiastically received.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

VERY great regret was naturally felt at the unavoidable absence, through serious illness, of Sir Joseph Barnby from his accustomed post in the Albert Hall, on the 13th ult., when the performance of Berlioz's "Faust," which is now regarded as an annual event, took place. Mr. Randegger, however, who has many times conducted the French master's work, was happily available, and the orchestra and chorus naturally did their best for the sake of their indisposed chief and for his esteemed locum tenens. The audience was evidently pleased with the rendering of the Hungarian March and the Dance of Sylphs, for both were warmly encored. The veteran artist, Signor Campanini, displayed his pure Italian vocal method in the somewhat ungrateful part of the hero, and it is understood that he will in future reside principally in this country for the purpose of concert as well as operatic engagements; Miss Ella Russell was praiseworthy as Marguerite, and Mr. Andrew Black was unexceptionable as Mephistopheles. The next performance will be "The Messiah," on the evening of New Year's Day.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

HUMPERDINCK's delightful Prelude to "Hansel und Gretel" was repeated "by desire" at the third Concert, on November 29, and was still more appreciated than on the occasion of its first performance. It opened the programme and was followed by a most artistic rendering, by Miss Agnes Janson, of "La Captive," the beautiful "Reverie" for contralto, with which the genius of Victor Hugo inspired that of Hector Berlioz. Miss Janson was equally successful (in spite of the excessive loudness of the orchestra) in Mr. Henschel's noble ballad "There was an ancient King." The places of honour were given to Schubert's B minor Symphony (which, under Mr. Henschel, is always sure of a sympathetic rendering) and Herr David Popper's Suite for violoncello and orchestra, called "Im Walde." The distinguished violoncellist being his own interpreter, the charm of his playing and of the clever and ingenious pieces themselves combined to produce an effect the extent of which was demonstrated unmistakably by the audience, who insisted successfully on a repetition of one of the numbers. The Suite is full of fancy and is capitally scored. Wagner's "Huldigungs" March, played at a pace which deprived it of all dignity, brought the Concert to a close.

The fourth Concert, which took place on the 13th ult., was chiefly remarkable for a really magnificent performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony. The band, on this occasion, consisted of the "Scottish Orchestra," and its performance of the familiar work showed of what excellent material it is composed. Every little phrase was played with an intelligent comprehension of its meaning that aroused the attention even of the most blasé listener. The first movement was taken rather more slowly than usual, the result being that its ruggedness and almost savage persistence were intensified to a remarkable degree. A more tender and freely phrased reading of the slow movement we have never heard, and a perfectly wonderful pianissimo was secured in the famous passage on a drum "pedal" that ushers in the Finale. Mr. Emanuel Moór played his new Pianoforte Concerto, which, though it contains an abundance of interesting melodic material, made no great impression. The composer seems to have overlooked the necessity, in a work of such dimensions, of a central idea or dominating influence; and a certain amount of patchiness and aimlessness made itself felt very strongly in consequence. Dr. Mackenzie's now quite popular "Britannia" Overture, Liszt's beautiful symphonic poem "Les Préludes," and Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre" were the remaining orchestral pieces, and "Elizabeth's Greeting" from "Tannhäuser," well sung by Miss Medora Henson, completed the programme. The fifth Concert, on the 17th inst., is to include Mozart's E flat Symphony and Saint-Saëns's Fourth Concerto for pianoforte, the solo part of which will be played by M. Diemer.

WAGNER CONCERTS.

"SOCIETY" again mustered in force at the last Concert directed by Herr Mottl, and by its attitude proved that Wagner's music has now reached the most dangerous epoch of its career. It has become fashionable, and the consequences which generally attend that kind of success are of a nature to cause anxiety among those who love Wagner because they understand him. That which has become strong on ridicule and insult may find it less easy to figure with impunity as a fashionable fad. We have, of course, no desire to identify sincerity with the shilling seats, or its opposite with a sofa stall; but we cannot help feeling that if intelligent musical appreciation were so great among us as an optimistic view of the crowd present on this occasion might suggest, it would manifest itself in favour also of other music more often than is at present the case. Genuine comprehension of the great in art, and its recognition under one manifestation only, involves a contradiction in terms. The programme consisted of the Prelude and "Good Friday" scene from "Parsifal," the "Meistersinger" Overture, that to "Die Feen," the "Lenz-lied" from the "Walküre," Lohengrin's narrative (from the third act of the opera), Liszt's symphonic poem "Mazeppa," Berlioz's "Carnaval Romain" Overture, and the "Kaisermarsch." The vocalists were Mr. Plunket Greene—whose singing of Gurnemanz's music was full of dignity, pathos, and charm—and Herr Willy Birrenkoven, a recent Parsifal at Bayreuth, who, on this occasion, made his first appearance here. He sings with plenty of intelligence and feeling. His voice is a fine one, and its production is comparatively free from the defects of the German school. Herr Mottl's conducting, though marked by the qualities already referred to in these columns, fell somewhat short of perfection—in the matter of breadth particularly. We shall gladly welcome his return, which has, we hear, been already arranged for, and hope that by that time the disposition to over-rate his merits, which involves an injustice to others, will have abated. It is good to remember that there were strong men before Agamemnon.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

IN honour of Rubinstein the Concert of November 24 was partly changed, pieces by the Russian master being substituted for some of those in the arranged programme. The chief number in the scheme, however, the "Eroica" Symphony, was, of course, retained; indeed, its selection so long beforehand for the Concert destined "to celebrate the memory of a great man," must be regarded as a very remarkable coincidence. Rubinstein's D minor Pianoforte Concerto was very artistically played by Miss Adeline de Lara, and his Overture to "Dimitri Donskoi," two of his pianoforte pieces, and two of his songs were also included. These were sung by Mr. Santley, who also introduced a song that was quite unworthy of his distinguished talent.

The Concerto in C for violoncello and orchestra, introduced by Herr Popper at the Concert of the 1st ult., is attributed by that eminent virtuoso to Haydn. Unfortunately, the evidence adduced is inconclusive. The solo part was given to him by an old amateur in Vienna some twenty years ago, but it has not transpired whether the manuscript affords any clue to the identity of the author. As no traces of the accompaniment could be discovered at Esterházy or elsewhere, Herr Popper has himself scored the work for an orchestra of the usual dimensions of Haydn's Concertos, and acquitted himself of the task with conspicuous skill and discretion. The Concerto, which is in three movements—an Allegro Moderato, an Andante, and an Allegro vivace—is of a decidedly pleasing character, and, if not written by Haydn, is certainly thoroughly Haydnese both in form and spirit. Needless to say, it lost nothing of its due effect as interpreted by Herr Popper, who also introduced a very clever and well-written Hungarian Rhapsody of his own composition. Mr. German conducted an excellent performance of the Suite arranged from his incidental music to "The Tempter." The sombre but richly scored Overture is the strongest and most impressive number of the Suite, but the Berceuse and Bacchanalian Dance are both excellent in workmanship and picturesque in colouring. Mr. Manns's poetic rendering of the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert is too well known to call for detailed notice. The playing of the wood-wind quartet, however, deserves special praise. Miss Marie Brema sang two beautiful old Italian songs—"Se bel rio," by Rontani, and "Già il sole," by Alessandro Scarlatti—to an orchestral accompaniment added by Mr. S. P. Waddington, and rather perfunctorily played by the band. She was, however, very successful in two old Irish melodies, "Emer's Farewell to Cucullain" and a "Battle Hymn," specially orchestrated for her by Professor Stanford, the sentiment of the latter in particular being admirably brought out by her fervid style and admirable enunciation. The programme was completed by the Overture to "Tannhäuser."

On the following Saturday Mr. Manns revived the beautiful Symphony of Haydn known as "La Reine de France," which had not been heard at the Crystal Palace since 1866, and introduced to the Sydenham audience Goldmark's striking and picturesque "Sappho" Overture, which, it is worthy of note, occupied rather longer in performance than the Symphony. Both works, especially the Symphony, were finely played. Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg gave an admirably clear and incisive rendering of the solo in Beethoven's E flat Concerto (No. 5), but her minor solos were hardly worthy of her talent. Mr. Stewart Macpherson's "Idyll" for orchestra, which was heard for the first time, proved an agreeable trifle, though its merits are decidedly of a negative character. Mr. Ben Davies, who, we rejoice to see, is now rarely, if ever, heard in songs unworthy of his great ability, gave an admirable account of himself in Siegmund's "Love Song," from "Die Walküre," and Lieder by Robert Franz.

The programme of the tenth Concert, given on the 15th ult., was entirely devoted to the compositions of French composers. When, let us ask, is a French conductor likely to return the compliment? The great attraction of the afternoon was the performance, in its entirety, for the first time at the Crystal Palace, of Berlioz's remarkable dramatic Symphony "Roméo et Juliette." Most of the finest movements of this brilliant, though unequal work are known to Concert-goers, but they undoubtedly gain greatly by being heard in their proper context; while of the less familiar scenes the Funeral March and Lamentation over Juliet, and the splendid Finale, with its triple chorus, proved highly impressive. The orchestra played very well indeed, and the chorus acquitted themselves creditably on the whole. Of the principals, Mr. Norman Salmond was conspicuous by his fine singing in the rôle of Prior Laurence, while Miss Dews and Mr. Wareham were moderately successful in the contralto and tenor solos respectively. The miscellaneous second part included the graceful Overture, "La Chasse du jeune Henri," by Méhul, and a somewhat invertebrate "Méditation" from Massenet's "Thaïs."

MR. MOBERLY'S CONCERT.

AMATEUR orchestral societies have within the present generation obtained prominence in the musical life of London, but it has been reserved for the reverend gentleman whose name heads this notice to bring to prominence and admiration in the metropolis an association of seventy-five lady performers on stringed instruments. We have, on previous occasions, spoken in terms of praise concerning Mr. Moberly's fair amateurs, but their playing at the Concert in the Princes' Hall, on the evening of the 4th ult., eclipsed all previous efforts. The selection of the programme, no less than its interpretation, was eminently commendable, the principal features being quite unfamiliar to ordinary frequenters of Concerts. The first piece was Handel's spirited Concerto Grosso in D minor, with solo parts for two violins and violoncello, excellently played by Misses Winifred Holiday, Amabel Marshall, and Maud Fletcher. Then Russian music assumed prominence, the first number in this direction being a "Mélancolie," by Napravnik, a composer Czechish by birth, but Russian by many years' residence and artistic labour. Next came pieces by Borodin and Rymnsky-Korsakoff, and finally Tschikowsky's piquant Suite in C (Op. 48), which the regretted composer conducted at a Philharmonic Concert in 1888. The vocal pieces, rendered by Mrs. Hutchinson and Miss Margaret Barter, were scarcely less interesting. Two songs by J. J. Rousseau, arranged by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, pleased greatly; and the airs and duets of De la Borde (a contemporary and pupil of Rameau) and Cherubini were also agreeable features of a remarkably artistic entertainment. The playing of the young ladies was marked throughout by vigour and refinement.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

It will be unnecessary to deal at length with Mr. Arthur Chappell's entertainments this month; but in order to render the record complete we must commence with the Concert of Saturday, November 24, when Lady Hallé led a beautiful performance of Mozart's Quintet in G minor, the programme likewise containing Chopin's Fantasia in F minor (Op. 49), played with refinement by Madame Haas, and Rubinstein's favourite Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 18), in which she was joined by Mr. Whitehouse. Miss Florence Lenton made a moderately successful appearance as the vocalist. The programme of the following Monday was of an equally quiet nature, but Madame Haas might easily have selected something more suitable than a transcription of Bach's great Organ Prelude and Fugue in A minor as her pianoforte solo. Mozart's Quartet in F (No. 8), Brahms's Sonata in G for pianoforte and violin, and Chopin's Introduction and Polonaise for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 3) were the concerted works in the scheme, and Miss Florence Christie gave much pleasure by her tasteful singing of Brahms's "Mainacht," Sullivan's "Willow Song," and the Old English ballad, "Golden Slumbers."

Adverse meteorological conditions doubtless affected the attendance on Saturday, the 1st ult., for the programme was attractive. Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29), sometimes known as the "Hungarian" Quartet, and always a favourite, and Beethoven's magnificent Pianoforte Trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1) were the concerted works, and the pianoforte solo was Weber's brilliant Sonata in C (No. 1), for the revival of which, as well as for an artistic rendering, Miss Agnes Zimmermann deserves thanks, for Weber's Sonatas have been rather neglected of late. The vocalist was Mr. Santley, who sang with his customary vigour Handel's air "Nasce al bosco," and three not very interesting though neatly-written songs by Ellen Wright. Mr. Ould did good service as the violoncellist on this occasion.

The programme of Monday, the 3rd ult., commenced with an interesting novelty—namely, Frederic Smetana's String Quartet in E minor, this being the first time that the name of the deceased Bohemian composer has appeared at these Concerts. Among modern Czechish musicians Smetana certainly holds a high place, and he is much entitled to regard as a preceptor of his more gifted fellow-countryman, Antonin Dvorák. The Quartet is more noteworthy for general Bohemian characterisation than for individuality. The themes are all bold and strongly rhythmical, if somewhat rugged in phraseology, and the workmanship is decidedly free in outline and detail; but the work interests because it is so far removed from conventionality. It is national music, and, as such, commands more attention than "Kapellmeister" music. The interpretation was somewhat rough, but the reception of Smetana's work was very cordial. By some accident a little-known Fantasia in C minor, by Mozart, was analysed in the book; but Mr. Slivinski played the familiar Fantasia associated with the masterly Sonata in C minor. Miss Thudichum gave an intelligent rendering of Massenet's expressive song "Pensée d'Automne," and Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in F (Op. 80) concluded the Concert.

At the Concert of Saturday, the 8th ult., the revised version of Brahms's early Pianoforte Trio in B major (Op. 8) headed the programme, Mr. Emil Sauer making his first appearance at Mr. Arthur Chappell's performances. Those who listened attentively must have been fully satisfied with his share in the Trio, as he subordinated his individuality, and did not make his part obtrusive. Subsequently, Mr. Sauer gave Chopin's Sonata in B minor (Op. 58) as effectively as at one of his recent Recitals, and though recalled five times firmly declined to play again. For this he should be praised. So should Miss Füllinger for introducing a few of the German Volkslieder recently collected and edited, with new and tasteful accompaniments, by Johannes Brahms. They are delightful lyrics, and Miss Fillunger sang the selection on this occasion with the utmost taste. We shall hear more of these songs in due course.

On Monday, the 10th ult., Smetana's Quartet was repeated with increased effect. Mr. Isidor Cohn played Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia in C (Op. 15) correctly, though without much expression, and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25) completed the number of instrumental works. Miss Dale sang in a charming manner two songs by an Italian composer named Putti, and Bemberg's "L'Amour est pur," from "Elaine." There was an overflowing attendance at the last Saturday Concert before Christmas, on the 15th ult., when Mr. Sauer was again the pianist. His rendering of Beethoven's great Sonata in F minor, known as the "Sonata Appassionata," was rather too effeminate to be altogether satisfactory to lovers of the Bonn master's music; but Mr. Sauer deserves commendation for again steadfastly declining an encore. His share in Rubinstein's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 52), in which the other executants were Lady Hallé and Herr Popper, was wholly praiseworthy. Miss Esther Palliser was very pleasing in songs by Schumann and Massenet, and Beethoven's Quartet in G (Op. 18, No. 2) completed the programme.

At the final performance before Christmas, on Monday, the 17th ult., a capital programme was headed by Dvorák's latest Pianoforte Trio in E minor (Op. 90), entitled "Dumky"—a title for which, we are told, there is no exact English equivalent, the nearest being "elegies." Dvorák has used it before in his instrumental works, and in the present instance there are no fewer than six examples of the "Dumka." The Trio is curiously constructed, consisting of a number of brief sections, instead of four movements in the usual forms, so that the term fantasia might well apply to it. Like everything of Dvorák's, it is purely original music, owing nothing to any other composer. As a matter of justice, it should be said that Mr. Isidor Cohn was the first to introduce the "Dumky" to London amateurs, at a Concert in St. James's Hall, on June 12 last. On the present occasion the pianoforte part was taken by Mr. Leonard Borwick, who subsequently gave an intellectual and, as to manipulation, wonderfully accurate rendering of Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques (Op. 13). The only other concerted work was Haydn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 71, No. 3). Miss Thudichum was again the vocalist, and rendered songs by Schäffer, Lassen, and Saint-Saëns with purity of style.

THURSDAY SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

THE first part of the Concert in the Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 6th ult., consisted solely of compositions by Schumann. The most elaborate example of this master was the Trio in F (Op. 80) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, rendered in the most sympathetic manner by Messrs. Septimus Webbe, Otto Peiniger, and Hans Adolf Brousil. The "Stücke im Volkston," played with finish by Mr. Brousil, also figured in the programme. Miss Ethel Bevens acquitted herself well in the song "Jephtha's Daughter" (Op. 95), and Mr. Franklin Clive earned approval for his delivery of the ballade "Belshazzar" (Op. 57). Mr. William Nicholl successfully terminated the Schumann selection by singing, with perfect command of the minutest gradations of feeling, "Wenn ich in deine Augen seh'" (Op. 24, No. 4) and "Widmung" (Op. 25, No. 1). In the second part this true artist imparted renewed interest to Sullivan's "The Sailor's Grave," and Miss Ethel Bevens made further friends by her reading of Goring Thomas's "A Summer Night." Mr. Clive was also excellently suited in his songs. Mr. Peiniger gave as violin solo Sarasate's arrangement of Chopin's Nocturne in E flat, and Mr. Webbe played the Polish composer's Nocturne in F sharp minor and Henselt's "Si oiseau j'étais."

MR. EMIL SAUER'S PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

It would seem as if the unexpected appearance of such a gifted performer as Mr. Emil Sauer had frightened away other foreign pianists from London, for beyond his appearances at St. James's Hall very little has to be recorded in the way of Pianoforte Recitals during the past few weeks. The first two performances of the Hamburg artist and virtuoso were noticed last month, and the remaining six may be conveniently summarised. At the third, which took place in St. James's Hall, on November 29, he gave a somewhat feminine reading of Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Op. 57), and the inartistic transcription of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture might well have been omitted; but in Brahms's early Scherzo in E flat minor (Op. 4), Chopin's Fantasia in F minor (Op. 49), and minor pieces by Raff and Liszt, Mr. Sauer was heard at his best, and fairly electrified the audience. The 3rd ult. was the date of the fourth Recital, when splendid performances were given of Schubert's Fantasia in C (Op. 15) and Chopin's Sonata in B minor (Op. 58)—exquisite touch, marvellously correct execution, and poetic feeling being for once in close alliance. The fifth Recital took place on Friday afternoon, the 7th ult., at which a singularly fine and generally artistic rendering was given of Beethoven's early Sonata in C (Op. 2, No. 3), and various minor pieces by Weber, Schumann, Chopin, Henselt, and Liszt. Another Beethoven Sonata headed the programme of the sixth Recital, on the following Monday, the work being that in G (Op. 31, No. 1), which shows the master in his most genial mood. The slow movement of this was played with exquisite beauty of tone. Smaller compositions, by various composers, were included, and gave the audience a very high degree of pleasure. Not so the opening piece of the seventh performance, on the evening of the 14th ult., which consisted of a disarrangement of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in D, by D'Albert. Mr. Sauer made amends by a striking, if not wholly convincing performance of Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, and various pieces by Schumann, Chopin, Dubois, Grieg, and Liszt. Mr. Sauer took his farewell, for the present, on the 17th ult., his programme including Beethoven's brief Sonata in F sharp (Op. 78), which is not often played. His performance of this, as well as of other smaller works by Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Henselt, Sgambati, and other writers, was rather quieter than usual—a matter that was explained by the statement that Mr. Sauer was unwell. At the close there was a remarkable demonstration, and the artist was persuaded into giving two extra pieces. Mr. Sauer must be fully convinced that he has won his way into the affections of London amateurs, and that he will be warmly welcomed when he returns to us next Spring.

MR. PLUNKET GREENE AND MR. LEONARD BORWICK'S RECITALS.

THE Song and Pianoforte Recitals recently commenced by the artists above-named are at once instructive and enjoyable, and they should be continued if practicable. The second, which took place at St. James's Hall, on Friday afternoon, the 14th ult., included a remarkably interesting number of songs. In the first series were Tannhäuser's "Busslied," composed, as to the melody, but certainly not as to the accompaniment, about 1240; other antiquarian songs dating from the fourteenth century, and beautiful modern lyrics by Brahms, Cornelius, and Hubert Parry. The second batch of vocal pieces was from the collection of "Songs of the English Counties," collected and edited by Miss Lucy Broadwood and Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland. It is rightly said that they do not possess the dramatic force of Celtic tunes, but they are exceedingly interesting, though the endeavour to identify a song with some particular county can rarely be successful, for many of these old lyrics may be found in differing versions in various counties. The selection of seven plaintive and humorous songs was admirably rendered by Mr. Plunket Greene. Concerning the pianoforte solos there is less to be said, but they included a vigorous Toccata in A by Purcell, Mozart's Sonata in D major (the finest and most elaborate of several works in this key), Beethoven's Variations in C minor, and some minor pieces by Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Chopin, all of which were beautifully played.

A DOLMETSCH CONCERT.

At the Hall of Clifford's Inn, Fleet Street, on the 6th ult., Mr. Dolmetsch gave another of his delightful Concerts. This time, however, nothing more of "ancient" than Bach was heard, the master being represented by the Concerto in D minor for harpsichord, with string quartet accompaniment; the Sonata in G for flute and viola d'amore, with accompaniment for harpsichord and violoncello; and the "Bauernkantate." But the "oldest inhabitant" of the metropolis cannot recall a performance of the last-named, and the Concerto and Sonata are certainly new to the present generation. Mr. Dolmetsch should be warmly thanked for bringing these admirable works to a hearing. As to the cantata, its humour and popular tone would make the neglect which has been its portion very difficult to explain, were we not accustomed to the dulness of the average Concert-giver. A more delightful and "taking" work it would be difficult to find; and it foreshadows Haydn and Mozart, in their popular moods, more, perhaps, than any work that preceded these masters. The soprano and bass solos (recitatives and airs) were sung with perfect taste and finish by Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. David Bispham, and the accompaniments, for string quartet, flute, horn, and harpsichord were admirably played. These are "the names of the players": violins, Mr. A. Dolmetsch and Mr. J. A. Milne; viola, Mr. W. A. Boxall; violoncello, Miss H. Dolmetsch; flute, Mr. A. P. Vivian; horn, Mr. W. Blandford; viola d'amore, Mr. A. Dolmetsch; and harpsichord, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland. The harpsichord, a remarkably fine instrument, lent by Mr. Maitland, was played by its owner with a degree of skill and refinement that merits warm recognition. This Concert should be repeated "farther West" at an early date.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

At the Concert of November 29 the beautiful String Octet in A, by Johann Svendsen (Op. 3), which had not been heard in London for about twelve years, was excellently played, and caused surprise that such an interesting work should have been so strangely neglected by chamber music societies. Of the eight students, led by Mr. W. Ackroyd, who took part in the performance, two—viz., Miss Marie Motto (violin) and Miss Emma Smith (violinello)—joined Miss Gwendolyn Toms (pianoforte) in Saint-Saëns's Trio in F (Op. 18), which was also given in a sympathetic and efficient manner. Miss Edith Foster essayed Beethoven's great Sonata in C minor (Op. 111), and surmounted its technical difficulties with much success. Misses Clementine Pierpoint and Florence Buckley sang.

The last Concert of the term was given at the Imperial Institute on the 12th ult. It opened with Weber's "Oberon" Overture and included the air "Lascia amor," from Handel's "Orlando," sung by Mr. Francis Harford, who should have the making of another Plunket Greene in him; an air from Goring Thomas's "Nadeshda," expressively given by Miss Louisa Kirkby Lunn; and a Caprice for violin and orchestra, by Guiraud. In this piece an interesting introductory slow movement raises expectations which the meretricious, tricky Allegro by no means justifies. It was played by Mr. William Ackroyd, a very gifted violinist, who combines a good, full, and exceptionally pure tone with a fluent technique. All these performances were, however, dwarfed into insignificance by the splendid rendering of Tschaiakowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique," which closed the Concert. This was played in memoriam of Anton Rubinstein, and no more suitable choice could have been made. For as Rubinstein was the greatest virtuoso Russia has ever produced, so this Symphony is undoubtedly the highest achievement of the Russian school of composition. Having heard the work five times now, we do not hesitate to say that we know only two pieces in symphonic music—viz., Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Wagner's "Faust" Overture—which were so evidently written with the composer's very heart's blood, as the wonderful, unique first movement, with its portrayal of abject misery and fervent hope, passionate yearning and cruel disappointment, fierce defiance and turbulent strife, and, finally, noble resignation, the whole forming such a series of mood pictures as has perhaps no equal in music. That Tschaiakowsky should have enriched the world with this astounding chapter of musical autobiography just before his decease is one of the most touching things in the history of our art. As we have already said, the performance of the extremely difficult work was splendid. We very much doubt whether there is a conservatoire of music on the Continent which could equal this achievement of the "College" pupils, under their able Conductor, Professor Stanford.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC—OPERA.

LEO DELIBES's Opera "Le Roi l'a dit" was produced in Paris in May, 1873, but until the pupils of the Royal College added it to their répertoire it had not been heard in England. On the 13th ult., at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, under the direction of Professor Stanford and Mr. Richard Temple, they performed the charming work in a way that spoke highly for the system of training in vogue at Kensington Gore. There were no "stars"—no performers, that is to say, who showed genius, or even talent, above the average; but intelligence of a high order showed itself in every direction, and an ensemble of quite exceptional merit was the result. "Le Roi l'a dit" was admirably chosen for the end in view. It contains a great number of characters, and demands grace of movement, humour, finish, and refinement, both of acting and singing, rather than depth or intensity of feeling. The "young and inexperienced" performers who were responsible for the chief characters found themselves consequently saddled with duties not beyond their means. They were not called upon to be tragic, or to deal with emotions needing a lifetime for due comprehension. They had to deal with matters within their ken—love-making, humorous deceit, mischief, bumptiousness, comic distress, and the like. At the same time the costumes and manners of the period of the action (Louis XIV.) make more than common demands on grace of movement and "style" generally, so that the excellence of ensemble secured is not one to be at all minimised on account of a plot remarkable for its freedom from tragic incident. It is no small achievement to have moved gracefully through a comedy of the Louis Quatorze epoch, and to have carried off successfully the humorous episodes with which this particular specimen of the kind abounds. Where so much excellence was shown it is difficult to particularise without unfairness; but we cannot help thinking that the daily and weekly press notices have scarcely done justice to the singing or acting of the two young ladies (Miss Pierpoint and Miss Sim) who played the lovers, and the four who impersonated the daughters of the Marquis. The chief characters were played with far less tact than these, and have hitherto obtained the lion's share of praise.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE invitation operatic performance, given in the Tenterden Street Concert Room, on the 14th ult., cannot be regarded in the light of a public entertainment, and therefore is scarcely amenable to criticism. But it may be said that the young people displayed considerable individual and collective ability in scenes from the "The Magic Flute" and "Lohengrin," and the entire second act of "Carmen." Mr. G. H. Betjemann, the director of the operatic class, must be highly complimented on the result of his efforts, and still more at the readiness he displayed in taking the part of the principal smuggler, Dancairo, when the student who was to have sustained it found himself unable to appear. His son conducted the "Carmen" selection.

The Orchestral Concert held in St. James's Hall, on the 18th ult., was rendered specially interesting by the first performance in London of Goring Thomas's posthumous cantata "The Swan and the Skylark." This charming, if not great work, was dealt with at sufficient length after its production at the recent Birmingham Festival, and further remarks as to its undoubted merits are not required. But it is only just to Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, and the large phalanx of executants under his control, to record that the music was exceedingly well rendered by all concerned. Among the soloists, the soprano, Miss Amy Sargent, and the contralto, Miss Gertrude Bevan, displayed exceptional promise. In the miscellaneous portion of the programme Miss Edith Greenhill (pianist) and Master Aldo Antonietti (violinist) were specially commendable.

The final competition for the Steinway Grand Pianoforte, forming part of the public testimonial to Sir Augustus Harris, took place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 7th ult., when the prize was awarded to Edith O. Greenhill. On the following day the competition for the Heathcote Long Prize was held, and the prize was awarded to G. Herbert Fryer. The examiners highly commended Claude F. Pollard. The competition for the Sainton Dolby Prize also took place on the 8th ult. The prize was awarded to Lydia Care, the examiners highly commending Mary Bartlett, Hettie Johnson, and Minnie Price. The competition for the Rutson Memorial Prize (soprano vocalists) was decided on the 13th ult. The prize was awarded to Gertrude Hughes and the examiners highly commended Alice Crawley. The competition for the Robert Cocks and Co. Prize took place on the 17th ult. The prize was awarded to Gertrude Peppercorn, and the examiners highly commended Alicia Adelaide Needham. The Hine Exhibition was also decided on the same day. The prize was awarded to R. Neville Flux. The examiners highly commended Joseph Charles Holbrook. The competition for the Potter Exhibition was held on the 20th ult. The prize was awarded to Isabel Coates, and the examiners very highly commended Sybil Palliser and Edith Pratt. The competition for the Bonamy Dobree prize also took place on the same day. The prize was awarded to May H. Mukle, and the examiners highly commended Audrey E. Chapman. In the Westmorland Scholarship the scholarship was awarded to Bertram H. Wallis, and the examiners highly commended Fred. B. Randalow and David Jones.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC—LECTURES.

AN interesting series of Lectures has been given during the past month by Professor Bridge. At the first of these, delivered on November 28, the lecturer gave a most instructive sketch of the life and writings of John Jenkins, and described the difference between the old contrapuntal style and what was at that period known as "the new music." Quotations were also read from the reminiscences of Roger North, and a Saraband containing much double stopping for the violin, which (played by Roger North) had aroused Jenkins's interest in the "new music," was cleverly rendered at sight by Miss Byford, a student of the Academy. "Mozart as a Teacher" formed the subject of the next Lecture, a subject upon which the Professor is peculiarly qualified to speak, as he is the possessor of Thomas Attwood's exercises, corrected by the great master, whose pupil he was for some time. It is scarcely necessary to add that so apposite a theme greatly interested the audience, and that the lecturer deduced several valuable lessons for the benefit of his listeners. Some excellent string quartet playing was contributed by E. E. Byford, F. Moss, Einhauser, and Mukle, students of the Institution. Early organ music and its writers provided abundant and instructive material for the next discourse, the illustrations being admirably played by Mr. G. W. Alcock.

ROYAL AQUARIUM, WESTMINSTER.

A MUSICAL Exhibition, which will close on the 19th inst., was opened at the Westminster Aquarium on the 12th ult. It is the second held at this establishment, and, like its predecessor, has been organised by Mr. E. A. du Plat, who is also responsible for the catalogue. The Exhibition is divided into two sections: trade exhibits, placed on the floor of the building; and a loan collection, located in the gallery. The former include exhibits by Messrs. J. B. Cramer, D'Almaine, Hawkes and Son, Procter (who show some fine specimens of Hindoo musical instruments), W. Reeves, G. Withers, Gray and Davison, and many others; but the interest of musicians will naturally centre in the loan collection. Here are arranged, in such a manner as to exhibit as far as possible their evolution, various types of instruments—the harp, the flute, the brass family, the pianoforte, the various instruments played with a bow, and the single and double reeds. There are several spinets and some very early pianofortes. The tone of the latter is little louder than that of the spinets, and shows how gradually progress takes place. There is also a pianoforte with a writing-desk that belonged to Gounod, and was used by him during composition. The literary exhibits include autographs, manuscripts of historical and personal interest, and a number of printed works of more or less rarity and musical value. There are also portraits, various curiosities—such as Handel's watch, old programmes, &c.—and a number of Siamese and other Eastern instruments, together with many in use among savage tribes. The names of the ladies and gentlemen whose kindness has made this instructive collection possible are given in the catalogue, which also contains a description of the various exhibits, written concisely and without unnecessary parade of learning.

"CONTEMPORARY MUSIC."

SIR JOSEPH BARNEY read an instructive and suggestive paper on contemporary music, before a crowded audience, on November 29, at the London Institution. The lecturer said that the mistake was too often made of regarding music as an art in itself, and but little related to the general intellectual movement of the age. There was, however, but one art, which expressed itself in diverse ways, called the drama, painting, architecture, or music. Every phase of art had its moral side; each provided an answer for the problem of life. So long as it put the problem, no matter how admirably, it had not completely justified itself. What the world needed in the true artist was a solution of the problem. Composers who expressed the conflict of the passions without harmonising them were like the minor poets. They were the minstrels of the age, but not its classicists. Bach found an answer in religious ecstasy, Beethoven in intellectual control, Wagner in the supremacy of passion. These were mighty, therefore, amongst the gods of musical art. If English music of the present day did not attain to the lofty heights reached by our German cousins, we might claim that it was the result of temperament rather than the lack of genius. Modern music was the reflection of the subtle undercurrents of emotion which marked an analytical age. To the proper expression of these emotional undercurrents were necessary a profound reflection and a romantic spirit. Germany by nature united these two qualities; she was at once the home of philosophy and the nursery of romance. England was more practical, more logical, more restrained. Music did not take a course at random, as if it were isolated and apart, but obeyed a general mental law, which, in common with the sister arts, it had to inexorably obey. The position, therefore, of contemporary music would be best seen by regarding the less vague and emotional art of contemporary drama. If we considered the intellectual revolution that had swept over the human mind since the early part of the eighteenth century, it would not be difficult to realize how the clear, simple, almost formal art of Haydn and Handel had passed into the intricate, restless, and rebellious art of Wagner and Brahms. The eighteenth century was what might be termed a syncretical age, as the nineteenth was an analytical age. In the eighteenth century it was not beyond the capacity of a learned man to be master of all the knowledge of his province. Ideas were not disturbed and complicated by the thousand and one minute considerations which more ample and scientific study had involved. Clear theories marked the position of every writer; there were, so to speak, no broken ends. It was not difficult to understand, therefore, how the mental attitude of the eighteenth century was what we termed classical—why, in poetry, we had Dryden and Pope, how Addison and Johnson filled up the outline of human life, how the drama dealt in general types, and how painting was characterised by a formal and conventional treatment. The same fate befell music; everything was dainty, pleasant, well regulated, clear, simple, ordered. Its canons were laid down with a dogmatic severity that admitted no question. It simply expressed, by the medium of sound, the complete but insufficient idea which the drama expressed by the medium of action, and painting by colour.

As the century drew to a close, however, science disturbed this spirit of complacency, and revolutionised the old narrow theories of life. Art became more realistic and natural. Literature had a purpose. The yearnings of man, his doubts, his fears, his hopes, his misgivings, his swift changes of emotion—all found a voice in the romantic music of the present day. Wagner was no mere miracle, suddenly revealed to an astonished generation. No man of genius was. Wagner merely fulfilled the vocation of greatness—to express what all men were on the point of saying. Whatever there might be in modern music that was complex, hard to understand, wild, wayward, unregulated, or mysterious was due to the corresponding attitude of the mind of the present age.

Concerning the present position of musical art and whither we were tending, Sir Joseph spoke with some diffidence, for he said he was like the man who, standing in the doorway of a cathedral, was asked to describe the form of the building above him. The only guide was to reason by analogy. Broadly, the history of musical art presented a series of developments, each of them attaining a culminating point, which was succeeded by a gradual deterioration nearly extending to dissolution, a new style almost insensibly arising from the ashes of the old to once more follow the inevitable law of nature as well as art. The sixteenth and seventeenth centuries saw the highest development of choral music, as exemplified in the masses of Palestrina, the anthems of Orlando Gibbons, and the madrigals of Wilbye and Benet. Purcell arose and showed that music could be written full of emotional expression and yet free from the more learned devices of a past time. Bach was the logical outcome of this new movement, and while he was developing the emotional side of music he was—possibly unconsciously—sowing the seed of another new departure, that of instrumental colouring, later on to reach a culminating point in the hands of Beethoven. Whilst this was going on, the foundations of the Romantic School were being laid by Weber, which, with the collateral assistance of Chopin and Berlioz, was to result in Wagner. This last-named composer had bequeathed us a legacy of such daring and supreme originality as to leave us dazzled by its brilliancy and almost paralysed by its splendour. From this state of paralysis we were only now slowly emerging. We could never be the same as before this influence fell upon us. His influence was perceivable in all classes of music, from the highest to the lowest. It was not confined to one country, it was universal, and even those who stubbornly refused to accept his doctrines were insensibly, but no less surely, swayed by their power. The lecturer concluded by appealing to his audience to encourage English composers by lending a willing ear to their compositions.

The various phases of thought that music had recorded were exemplified by the performance of a number of vocal and instrumental solos, which were admirably interpreted by Miss Evelyn Ogle, Miss Edith Leslie, Miss Madeline Payne, and Mr. Charles Phillips (pupils of the Guildhall School of Music).

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

FOR many years past the Highbury Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. G. H. Betjemann, has presented a commendable example of artistic earnestness and enterprise, and in this, its seventeenth season, the choir has attained a high standard of excellence. This was attested on November 27, when a performance was given of Sir Arthur Sullivan's beautiful cantata "The Golden Legend," the merit of which has rarely, if ever, been surpassed by any suburban choral body. The magnificent Prologue was sung with a dramatic force that showed the singers to have fully grasped the dramatic significance of the text, and the beautiful "Evening Hymn" was rendered with a firmness and expression that led to the crowded audience insisting on its repetition. Equally effective interpretations were given of "Me receptet Sion illā," and the fine Epilogue, the vocalists being ably supported throughout the work by an excellent orchestra. No critical remarks are required concerning the soloists, as they were Madame Albani, Madame Hope Glenn, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. G. R. Betjemann, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The Society announces the performance of Hofmann's melodious cantata "Fair Melusina," on the 29th inst.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

"FROM brain to keyboard. New and complete practical solution of all technical difficulties." Such was the somewhat assertive title of the paper read by Mr. W. Macdonald Smith before a numerous attended meeting of the Musical Association, on the 11th ult., at the Royal College of Organists. We have had so many disappointments from "new solutions" and the assumed discoveries of "royal roads," that it is not surprising that Mr. Smith had to face a critical, not to say even somewhat sceptically inclined, audience. The lecturer began by deprecating the long hours of practice to which most pianists were subjected, which, he maintained, in many instances "ate the soul out of their playing," besides sometimes inducing physical disablement. He had devoted the spare time of nine years to earnest study of the subject of technique, and in his opinion all the apparatuses that had been hitherto devised fell short in the accomplishment of their object. What was commonly known as a "beautiful touch" was held by many to be a gift and an attainment not to be taught. By his method, however, he believed it could be imparted to the large majority of pianists. After showing that the hand was naturally ill adapted for perfect control of the keyboard, and that the majority of exercises did not rapidly give independent action of the fingers, the lecturer explained his new system. This was based on the physiological fact that a muscle was most nourished during the periods of rest that followed its full contraction and expansion, which induced a greater flow of blood upon which the muscle fed. Executive command was the result of perfect development of all the muscles that were used by the pianist. An untrained hand would execute a better shake with the index and longest fingers than many pianists could with their fourth and fifth, because the muscles of the first-named fingers were fully developed, whereas those of the last-named were not so. Repetition of a certain action did not insure growth of the proper muscles for the execution of that action, because when the proper muscles were too weak to give the result striven for, stronger but improper ones were unconsciously called into play, the result being not only non-attainment of the object, but frequently awkward and clumsy movements. The natural desire for full muscular contraction and expansion was seen in the flourish made by penmen before writing, and in many actions unconsciously indulged in by pianists before and during their performances. On the other hand, partial contraction did not cause the same amount of blood to visit the muscle, and there was reason to believe that quick and reiterated half-contractions, whereby the muscles were used without being properly nourished, were the cause of muscular cramp and other serious ailments to which many workers were subject. Executive difficulties vanished when perfect muscular control was obtained, but to obtain that control it was necessary to develop certain muscles peculiarly used by the pianist. For this purpose Mr. Smith has devised a systematic series of actions—several of which are new—for the hand and arm, based upon established physiological facts.

In the discussion which followed, the chairman, Mr. Walter Macfarren, said that, although he believed gymnastic exercises to be undoubtedly helpful, he did not think we should ever do without technical exercises, by which hitherto our great pianists had acquired their command over the keyboard. A valuable testimony of the efficacy of Mr. Smith's system was borne by Mr. Threlfal, who said that although he had only practised the method for some ten minutes daily for about three months, he had experienced great benefit from it, and found he had acquired much greater digital independence. He considered the results in his case the more remarkable, as he was not a trained pianist, and had never gone through a course of technical study.

REVIEWS.

The Westminster Abbey Chant Book. Arranged and edited by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, D.D., and J. Frederick Bridge, Mus. Doc. (Third edition, enlarged.)
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE appearance of Dr. Troutbeck's "Paragraph Psalter," recently reviewed in these columns, necessitated, of course, the production of a chant book to match. We do not by any means intend to imply that the "Paragraph Psalter" can only be used in conjunction with the "Westminster Chant Book"; on the contrary, clergy or organists can select their own chants and apply them to the new Psalter in any way they may like. On the other hand, this new edition of the "Westminster Chant Book" will prove to be of the greatest value to those who do not use either the "Paragraph" or "Cathedral" Psalter. New chants are always being required from time to time to replace those which too-long use has rendered rather tiresome; and there is nothing short of a mine of new chants in this chant book—a mine in which church musicians will certainly not dig without discovering many treasures. But, though the "Paragraph Psalter" and the new "Westminster Chant Book" may be used quite independently—the Psalter to other chants, the chants to any other Psalter—yet much interest will naturally be taken in this chant book as revealing the exact wishes of Dr. Troutbeck as to the sort of music to which, in his opinion, the Psalms should be sung, and the trustworthy verdict of Dr. Bridge on the quality of the chants now provided. Those who, like the present reviewer, have heard the Psalms as now chanted from the "Paragraph Psalter" in our venerable Abbey, must have been struck by the peculiar fitness of the association of words and music. Passing over the plentiful supply of chants for the Canticles, amounting to no less than seventy in number, we will at once say a few words about the chants for the daily Psalms. To any one who will take the trouble to go through the Psalter with these chants at his side, it will be at once evident that many of the Psalms here find a musical treatment which brings their meaning into remarkable prominence. The old-fashioned way of going hum-drum through the whole of the Morning or Evening Psalms to one chant (double or single) without any change has, however, only recently died out, and there are even now many organists who look upon a change of chants in the middle of a Psalm with some suspicion. To such, the chant book before us will present many novelties, notably the bold use of three-phrase or triple chants in all cases where the poetic construction of the Psalm makes it fall naturally into groups of three verses. Of course, there must be careful rehearsal of the singing of Psalms, even by the most skilled choirs, if equal justice is to be done to the words and to the music; but we are convinced that the result will show that the labour has not been in vain. When a choir has become quite familiar with the new association of the music with the words, so as to be able to pass on smoothly from chant to chant without the dread of stumbling, then not only the choir, but the congregation also will take more interest and realise a deeper meaning in this our ancient heritage of inspired lyrics. It would be an invidious as well as a lengthy task to select special new chants for commendation from amongst such a plentiful store of really good specimens from the pen of the best-known church musicians of our day; it must suffice to say the "moderns" seem quite able to hold their own against the "ancients," and, if we are not mistaken, there are many chants here which will linger in churches and cathedrals, dear to the hearts and voices of future generations.

Recitation-Music Series. Composed by Stanley Hawley. The Bells, Edgar Allan Poe; Lorraine, Lorrée, Charles Kingsley; Soul Music, Phyllis Melville.
[Robert Cocks and Co.]

THE various combinations of music and recitation—such as Dr. Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal" and "Eugene Aram," Schumann's "Manfred," and so on—have drawn considerable attention, during recent years, to the affinities of the two arts. And further interest is likely to be awakened among those who occupy themselves with such subjects by these settings of Mr. Stanley Hawley's; for in them the union between the spoken verse and the music is much closer than in any previous work of the kind. In the first place, the music, though quite modern in style, appeals but little to the listener on its own account—its thematic interest is by no means striking, and no attempt is made to achieve effects of the kind usually found in "programme music." It supplies an "atmosphere," so to speak, and little more. But, on the other hand, it is continuous—there are no pauses for the recitation. And the verse is no more an independent thing than the music; it is written over each bar in as close a connection with the tones, in respect of rhythm, as any song. The result of the combination upon reciters it is too early as yet to foresee—they are certainly fettered, but are at the same time helped to a remarkable extent. It is but fair to say that on each occasion these pieces have been given in public they have met with remarkable success.

The Parish Choir Book. Nos. 155-160.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MANY numbers of this useful series of Service music have recently been issued, but for the present brief comment on a few must suffice. The Athanasian Creed has generally proved a source of difficulty to composers on account of its length, and a single chant of the utmost simplicity usually suffices. A setting by E. H. Birch, the first on the above list, though mainly formed on one chant of the usual pattern used for this canticle—namely, in divisions of three and two bars each—is varied alike in melody and harmony. No. 156 is Samuel Sebastian Wesley's setting of the Nicene Creed from the composer's fine Service in E, concerning which it would be almost an impertinence to offer words of commendation. The next is a Benedicite in B flat by J. Varley Roberts. This is in free chant form, the customary triple measure being employed, and the voices alternately in unison and in four-part harmony. The version should prove effective, and it is certainly not difficult. No. 158 is a similar Te Deum, that is to say, a setting founded upon a double chant by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, varied in a skilful manner, and, of course, with the permission of the composer, by J. T. Field. In Mr. Field's Benedictus, No. 159, we have a simple chant setting with delightfully varied, but not difficult accompaniment. In No. 160, the last for the present, we have another of Mr. Field's clever arrangements. This is a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, the former arranged on the groundwork of a double chant by the late J. Turle, and the latter on a single chant by the late Sir George Elvey.

Three Sonatines for the Pianoforte. By W. R. Driffill.
[E. Donajowski.]

THESE works may be recommended to teachers of young pianists as conducive to the cultivation of the sense of form. The first, in the key of F, is remarkably simple and easy to play; the others demand greater executive ability, the third, in C, being most advanced; but all the passages lay well under the hand, and the melodiousness of the themes and their treatment are calculated to sustain the interest of the player.

Exercices Journaliers (Daily Exercises) pour le piano. Par J. Philipp. Préface par C. Saint-Saëns.
[Paris: Durand et Fils.]

THESE exercises are intended only for very advanced players. They are of eight kinds: extensions and passages for developing independence of finger; left hand difficulties; scales; arpeggios; double notes; shakes; octaves and wrist passages generally; rhythmic exercises. But the chief value of the work lies in the fact that each difficulty is exemplified by passages chosen from the works of no less than thirty-six composers of the first rank, from Bach and Handel to Liszt, Tchaikowsky, Rubinstein, and Saint-Saëns. These passages are amongst the most "awkward" extant, and their collection in an album of less than 100 pages is likely to prove of great convenience to pianists who desire to economise time and save themselves the labour of search.

Eolian. Romance for violoncello with pianoforte accompaniment. By Walter Alcock.

La Speranza. Romance for violoncello or violin with pianoforte accompaniment. By Frank D'Alquen.

Berceuse. For violin with pianoforte accompaniment. By Herbert Sharpe.

Caprice. For violin with pianoforte accompaniment. By Cecil Gann.

Réverie. For violoncello, or violin and pianoforte. By Noel Johnson.

[Charles Woolhouse.]

ALL these may be welcomed to the rapidly growing repertory of violinists and violoncellists. Mr. Alcock's Romance is a well-told tale which will be heard with interest. Mr. D'Alquen's "Speranza" is of a bright description, although it would have been more effective had it harped less on one string. The Berceuse would scarcely lull anyone to sleep except those endowed with an energetic temperament. Appropriate fancifulness distinguishes the Caprice, but its humours present no special difficulties to master. The Réverie partakes of the nature of a mental debate concerning "to be, or not to be," which sometimes assumes an agitated character.

Organ Arrangements. Edited by George C. Martin. Nos. 19-23. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

HAYDN'S introduction to his masterpiece, the "Creation," which he terms "Representation of Chaos," and in which many harmonic progressions now in common use are anticipated, forms an effective organ piece, and has been transcribed with much skill. No. 20 of these arrangements is the first movement of Schubert's great Pianoforte Sonata in A minor (Op. 42). Here the editor treads on somewhat dangerous ground, but, judging from the careful directions for registering, the music should prove very effective in its new guise. Similar remarks may apply to No. 21, the second movement of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, and No. 22, the third movement from Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony in E flat. Mr. W. H. Stocks is the transcriber of the Haydn excerpt, Mr. Arthur B. Plant that of Schubert, and Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank of the two selections last named. No. 23 is a Solemn March from a cantata, "The Black Knight," by Edward Elgar, arranged by the composer. It is a brief but effective piece in a distinctly modern style, and may be warmly commended to the notice of organists as a concluding voluntary.

Practical Harmony. A concise treatise, including the harmonization of melodies, with progressive exercises. By Stewart Macpherson. [J. Williams.]

THE aim of this book is sufficiently indicated by its title, but, as other works of similar intention exist, the author explains that his book is meant to occupy a position midway between the primer and the theoretical treatise. As regards his principles, he avows himself an adherent of the Day system as modified by Macfarren and Prout. We are glad to see that in the examples only the treble and bass clefs are used. The volume is divided into three parts, which treat successively of Diatonic Harmony, Chromatic Harmony, and the Harmonization of Melodies, with Modulation. The information is tersely conveyed, and the examples well chosen.

Miniatures. Quatre Morceaux pour piano. Composés par Erik Meyer-Helmund (Op. 136). [Forsyth Brothers.]

THESE are light, attractive little pianoforte pieces. The Menuet is quaint, so also the Trio, yet it forms a marked contrast. The melodious Petit chanson d'amour reminds one somewhat of a certain Rubinstein piece. The Valse mignon and Marche des Gnomes are equally effective.

The Maid and the Elf. Springtime. Written and composed by Kate Willis. [Weekes and Co.]

BOTH these songs are bright and attractive. They are, moreover, effectively written for a soprano voice, probably for the composer's sister, and the words express graceful ideas in a happy manner.

Seven Songs for Mezzo-Soprano. The words selected from the poems of Alfred, Lord Tennyson. The music by Sydney Thomson. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE poems selected are "Ask me no more," "Tears, idle tears," "The Miller's Daughter," "The Poet's Song," "As thro' the land," "Now sleeps the crimson petal," and "Go not, happy day." Although described as written for a lady's voice, some of these songs would obviously come more appropriately from the lips of a man. With this exception and the unnecessary repetition of words, which hinders the dramatic significance in some of the songs, the settings may be recommended to the attention of cultured vocalists as expressive and worthy of their text.

Rosalind's Madrigal. Words by Thomas Lodge (1556). Music arranged by A. L. [Metzler and Co.]

THIS quaint and graceful song has been so often sung by Miss Liza Lehmann at the "Pops" and elsewhere that its merits are fairly well known. Those who have not had the pleasure of hearing Miss Lehmann sing it may be told that a voice of considerable purity and flexibility is needed to do it justice, and that the clearest possible enunciation of the words is also indispensable. The accompaniment is not difficult.

Drinking Song. (Chanson à Boire.) Written by Racau. English words by Theo. Marzials. Composed by A. Goring Thomas. [Metzler and Co.]

THIS is a bold-spirited song calculated to make a cultured singer with a robust voice rejoice; that is, if he has a good accompanist—if not, he will do otherwise. It is just the song for a festive season.

Musicians and their Compositions. By J. R. Griffiths. [S. W. Partridge and Co.]

"THE object of these short sketches is to give the ordinary reader a general idea of some of the more prominent of the world's great composers." Thus begins the preface to this commendable little volume, which in pleasant chatty fashion deals with the lives and works of Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn. No small merit of the work is its low price, for the more reliable and cheap books we have upon composers and their divine art the greater will be the intelligent and widespread appreciation of good music.

Cossack Cradle Song. By Napravnik. Arranged, with English words, by F. E. Whishaw. [Boosey and Co.]

EVERY lover of a really beautiful and artistic song should at once add this one to his collection. The vocal melody is a delightful specimen of the Folk-song type, and the "accompaniment" is itself so melodious and charming that it might very well be played alone as a pianoforte piece with the same title. The effect of the combination, strangely enough, is not complex, but, on the contrary, simple and expressive to a degree. The song is a little masterpiece.

Three Octave Studies (Legato) for the Development of the Wrist. For Pianoforte. By B. Bockelman (Op. 14, No. 1). [Leipzig: Fritz Schuberth.]

THE earnest student who practises these studies, with attention to the admirable manner in which they are phrased, cannot fail to acquire increased command in legato octave playing, especially by the left hand, which, in the majority of pianists, is deficient in this respect. The studies possess considerable melodic interest, the second, entitled "Cygnus," being very pleasing.

Cosaque Fantastique. Pour Piano. Par Sigismund Stojowski. [Stanley Lucas.]

PIANISTS who wish to add a striking and characteristic piece to their repertory may be recommended to purchase this composition. It requires a firm touch and spirited style for its effective performance, but presents no exceptional executive difficulties.

FOREIGN NOTES.

AMSTERDAM.—A new opera in one act, "Wit de branding," by Mynheer Richard Hol, was recently produced at the Dutch Opera, but very coldly received. And yet M. Hol is considered one of the foremost composers of his country.

ANCONA.—"Nell'harem" ("In the Harem") is the title of a new three-act opera which was produced here on the 1st ult. The composer is Signor Giulio Concina, who has also written the libretto.

BERLIN.—Herrn Hoffmann, Suk, Nedbal, and Wihan, forming the Bohemian String Quartet, have been giving two more Concerts, at which they performed works by Smetana, Dvorák, Mozart, Beethoven, and Brahms, as well as an interesting Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 8), by the second violinist, Herr Suk. Their success was again phenomenal, and the critics could hardly find words in which to express their admiration of these young artists' wonderful playing.—An interesting one hundred year old novelty was recently produced at the Mohr'sches Conservatoire. It consisted of a bass air and a chorus by Joseph Haydn. They are said to be all that exist of an Oratorio which, according to a note in the published score, was commissioned by Count Abingdon, but soon abandoned by the composer of the "Creation." The manuscript of the fragment is said to be in the British Museum.—A genuine success attended the recent Pianoforte Recital given by Mr. Ernest Hutcheson, from Melbourne. The young Australian, a pupil of Herr Stavenhagen, was quite unknown here, which makes his success all the more complete. He is a brilliant virtuoso and an excellent artist. "Advance, Australia!"—At a Concert given by Herr Phillip Scharwenka in the Philharmonic Hall, three new works from his pen were produced. They were a Symphony in D minor, a Symphonic Poem for orchestra, "Traum und Wirklichkeit" ("Dream and Reality"), and a Violin Concerto played by the composer's wife.—The programme of the fifth Philharmonic Concert, conducted by Herr Richard Strauss, included a new Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor (Op. 1), by Wilhelm Stenhammer. It was played by the composer, who is spoken of as a young musician of exceptional talent and who, after each of the four movements, was greeted with enthusiastic applause.—Dr. Carl Krebs has been appointed Professor of Musical History at the Königliche Hochschule für Musik in the place of the late Professor Phillip Spitta, whose library, by the way, has recently been acquired by the Institution in question.—On the 1st ult. the 100th performance of Wagner's "Meistersinger" was given at the Royal Opera. Twenty-four years ago, on April 1, 1870, the first performance of this veritable wonderwork was received with storms of yells, hisses, and stamping, so that literally for minutes at a time not a sound of music could be heard. And this was in Berlin, not in Paris!

BOLOGNA.—On the 1st ult. a new three-act opera, entitled "Saviti," and composed by Signor Natale Canti, was produced at the Municipal Theatre.

BREMEN.—At the third Philharmonic Concert, Anton Rubinstein's fifth Symphony (in G minor) and his Overture to "Antoniuss and Cleopatra" were played in memoriam of the lamented Russian composer.—"Die Generalprobe" ("The General Rehearsal"), a one-act comic opera, by Lortzing, the composer of "Czar und Zimmermann," was given, for the first time, at the Town Theatre, on November 19, and, thanks to a spirited performance, pleased the audience greatly.

BRÜNN.—Paul Umlauf's prize opera, "Evanthia," was very favourably received on its recent first performance here.

CARLSRUHE.—Felix Mottl has once more produced an important work by a young composer, who, but for the great conductor's timely aid, might have waited many weary years before his music was brought to a hearing. "Ingwelde," a three-act music-drama (not opera), the libretto by Count Ferdinand Sporck, the music by a highly talented young Rhinelander, of twenty-six, Max Schillings, was produced at the Court Theatre, on November 13, and exceedingly well received. It has been welcomed by some of the critics (such as the well-known Arthur Smolian) as the first really original and important music-drama that has been produced since Wagner, and an emphatic answer in the affirmative to the question whether that master has left a "school." The features upon which Herr Smolian specially dwells are the striking originality and beauty of Schilling's themes; his gifts of characterisation and truthfulness and nobility of expression. To these are added a complete mastery of all technical details, and more especially of the Wagnerian method of using the Leitmotif, as exemplified in the master's later works. The performance, with Frau Reuss-Belce, Herren Gerhäuser and Plank in the cast, was exceedingly fine.

COLOGNE.—Professor Carl Reinecke's opera, "Der Gouverneur von Tours," was, on November 24, performed here at the Town Theatre, and the veteran composer, who was present, had the satisfaction of seeing the audience thoroughly pleased with his charming work.

DARMSTADT.—Tchaikowsky's opera, "Eugeny Onegin," has been added to the répertoire of the Court Theatre. It was recently performed for the first time under the direction of Herr de Haan.

DESSAU.—The first performance of Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel," at the Court Theatre, on November 30, was especially interesting, because Frau Cosima Wagner had put the work on the stage, and thereby once more proved herself one of the foremost stage managers of her time, if proof were needed after the successes of the Bayreuth Festspiele.

DRESDEN.—At the second Symphony Concert of the Royal Orchestra a new Suite, from Franz Curti's music to Holger Drachmann's melodrama, "Schneefried," was produced. The characteristic and effective work was excellently played under Capellmeister Hagen, and created a distinctly favourable impression.—Verdi's "Falstaff" was performed for the first time at the Court Theatre, on November 17, and, needless to add, astonished and delighted the critical audience.

FLORENCE.—Signorina Semiramide Colle, a young pianist of fourteen, has just given her first Recital here, playing the Mendelssohn Variations Sérieuses, the G minor Ballade of Chopin, the Liszt "Midsummer Night's Dream" Fantasia, and other pieces which would be no trifle to a grown-up brain. She played these in a quite phenomenal manner, and made a marked success. Signorina Colle is a pupil of Signor Sgambati, the well-known Roman virtuoso.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.—Berlioz's "Requiem" was performed for the first time here on November 21, by the Cäcilienverein, under the direction of Herr Grüters. The performance was exceptionally fine, and the unique work made a deep impression.

GENEVA.—On November 28 a new large concert hall, the Victoria Hall, was opened with appropriate ceremony. The splendid building has been erected by the British Consul, Mr. Daniel Barton. At the inaugural Concert, a new Symphony for orchestra and organ, by M. Widor, specially written for this occasion, and played by the composer, was performed with great success.

HAMBURG.—Smetana's comic opera, "Zwei Wittwen" ("Two Widows"), was performed here for the first time on November 15, and achieved a genuine success.—Herr Pollini, the director of the Town Theatre, has just accepted a new opera, composed by Mr. James M. Coward, the London organist, to be produced this winter. He has also engaged Mr. Coward to supply him with another opera for next autumn.

HANOVER.—Mr. Edgar Tinel's Oratorio "Franciskus" was performed for the first time in this town, on November 22, by the Musik-Akademie, under Capellmeister Frischen. The striking work, which, in Germany, seems to create a greater stir than any other Oratorio since Mendelssohn's "Elijah," was most favourably received.

KIEL.—This town must be added to the list of those in which Herr Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" has been performed. The public was delighted with the work when it was recently given here for the first time.

LEIPZIG.—On November 12 Edgar Tinel's Oratorio "Franciskus," which was so enthusiastically received last winter, was again performed at the Albert Hall, in the Crystal Palace, under the direction of Dr. Paul Klengel and in the presence of the composer, who was once more the recipient of enthusiastic ovations. Herr Heinrich Vogl gave a masterly performance of the title rôle.—At the sixth subscription Concert, in the new Gewandhaus, on November 15, a new cantata, entitled "Todtenfeier," by Heinrich von Herzogenberg (Op. 80), was performed, under the direction of the composer, and well received. It was originally produced about a year ago at a Concert given by the Königliche Hochschule, Berlin.—On November 18 Schumann's only opera, "Genoveva," was revived at the Stadt-Theater.—At a Concert given on November 14, at the Royal Conservatoire of Music, two "novelties"—both of them posthumous works—were produced. They were a Concert-Overture by Robert Volkmann, which, to judge from the style of the music, dates from an early period of the composer's career; and an Elegy for five violoncelli, by Franz Lachner. The programme contained also a Symphony in C by Michael Haydn, a Suite for strings by G. Muffat, and Handel's "Fireworks" music, originally produced in the Green Park, April 29, 1749, at the fireworks given on the occasion of celebrating the Peace of Aix la Chapelle.—The Emperor William's "Sang an Ägir" was, on November 25, performed on the stage of the Town Theatre; but although the director had gone out of his way to provide elaborate scenic accessories for an appropriate decorative "background," the harmless music made not only no impression, but when a few persons attempted to show their approval in the usual way, their applause was immediately drowned by the energetic hissing of the rest of the audience. The Leipzigers are evidently more critical than loyal!

LIEGE.—M. J. Jongen, of the Royal Conservatoire in this town, has been awarded the prize of 1,000 francs offered by the Academy of Fine Arts for the best String Quartet.

LIVORNO.—"Yoric" (anglicé, Yorick), a new lyric drama in three acts and four tableaux, written and composed by Signor Ettore Martini, was successfully produced, on the 1st ult., at the Goldoni Theatre. It is said to be a work of some value, but too long and too heavy, and sadly in want of cutting. Alas, poor "Yoric"!

LÜBECK.—"Sonnenwacht" (Solstice Night) is the peculiar title of another addition to the lengthy list of one-act operas composed by German musicians in imitation of Mascagni. Its composer is B. Harmston, and it was produced with some success at the local Town Theatre, on November 27.

MANNHEIM.—On November 28 a new three-act comic opera, written and composed by Albert Gortler, was produced at the Court Theatre, but only achieved a bare succès d'estime. The title of the work is "Der Schatz des Rhampsinit," which might be translated either "The 'Treasure'" or "The 'Sweetheart' of Rhampsinit."

MILAN.—M. Massenet's "Werther" was recently given for the first time at the International Lyric Theatre, and if an "explosion of applause," lasting ten minutes by the clock, such as, according to Le Ménestrel, followed the fall of the curtain, is any criterion of success, then M. Massenet has indeed succeeded.

MODENA.—At the Municipal Theatre a one-act lyric scene, "Triste lotta," by Signor Minzagni, was recently produced with success.

MUNICH.—Smetana's three-act grand opera, "Dalibor," was performed for the first time in German at the Court Theatre, on November 28, and was received with great applause. The German translation of the libretto is by Max Kalbeck.—"Franciskus," the work by which the Flemish composer, Edgar Tincl, is chiefly known in Germany, was recently given for the first time by the Musical Academy, with Herr Vogl and Fräulein Ternina in the chief rôles. The success of the Oratorio was undoubted.

NICE.—The Grand Théâtre opened its season with Wagner's "Lohengrin" on November 29.

PARIS.—At the Concerts Colonne a Berlioz cycle is in progress, during which the master's six works for chorus and orchestra—viz., "Roméo et Juliette," the "Requiem," "The Childhood of Christ," "Faust," "Lélio," and the Te Deum will be given. Each work will be performed twice—i.e., on two consecutive Sundays.—At the Lamoureux Concerts a genuine success has been obtained by the German violinist, Herr Hugo Heermann, in Brahms's Concerto in D.—The great event of the past month has been the 1,000th performance of Gounod's "Faust," which was celebrated with all possible solemnity and rejoicing, at the Grand Opéra, on the 14th ult. It was not the 1,000th performance of the famous work at this theatre, but the 1,000th performance in Paris. For, as M. Arthur Pougin points out in an interesting article in Le Ménestrel, the Grand Opéra has given the opera only about 700 times. The original production took place on March 19, 1859, at the Théâtre Lyrique, with Madame Carvalho and M. Barbot in the principal rôles. But its success was so small, that up to October 30, 1862, when the Théâtre Lyrique was transferred to the Châtelet, only fifty-seven performances had been given. On March 3, 1869, the epoch-making work made at last a triumphant appearance on the stage of the Grand Opéra, when the cast included Mlles. Christine Nilsson (Marguerite) and Mauduit (Siebel), MM. Colin (Faust), Faure (Mephistopheles), and Devoyod (Valentin). On December 4, 1887, the 500th performance at the Grand Opéra was reached. At the jubilee performance, on the 14th ult., the cast consisted of Madame Caron (Marguerite), M. Alvarez (Faust), M. Delmas (Mephistopheles), M. Renaud (Valentin), Madame Deschamps-Jehin (Martha), and Mlle. Agussol (Siebel). The final scene was omitted and replaced by a so-called Apothéose, composed by M. Ambroise Thomas to some verses by M. Jules Barbier, and sung by all the artists of the establishment as well as the chorus. They were dressed in the costumes of the characters in the various operas of the master, "Sapho," "Mireille," "Roméo et Juliette," "Polyeucte," &c., and as they stood in effective groups round his bust, the crowded house burst into enthusiastic applause, which did not abate until the Apothéose was repeated.—Schumann's opera "Genoveva" was performed for the first time in France at the Concert d'Harcourt of the 16th ult. A French translation had been specially made for this occasion by MM. Eugène d'Harcourt and Charles Grandmougin.

PRESSBURG.—A new opera, "The Orphan of Cordova," by Oskar Strauss—no connection with the many other musical Strausses, we suppose—was recently produced here with considerable success.

ROME.—The unsuccessful production of a new two-act lyric drama, "Il Voto," by Signor Pietro Vallini, has to be chronicled. The event took place at the Constanzi Theatre, on November 27.

ROUEN.—"Hermann et Dorotheë," a three-act opera, founded by M. Julien Goujou on Goethe's poem, and composed by M. Frédéric Le Rey, was recently produced with success at the Théâtre des Arts.

ST. PETERSBURG.—The remains of Anton Rubinstein were interred on November 28 with great solemnity in the cemetery attached to the monastery of St. Alexander Nevsky, the obsequies, which were of a very imposing character, lasting from an early hour until five o'clock in the evening. The funeral service in the Cathedral was attended by six thousand persons, comprising the élite of the musical, theatrical, and literary world of St. Petersburg, besides deputations from the Imperial Theatre at Moscow, the Moscow Philharmonic Society, and other musical associations, to the number of ninety-two. The musical portion of the service, which was most impressive throughout, was magnificently rendered by a special choir of 200 voices. The vast square in front of the church was filled by an enormous crowd, and in the streets along the line of route to the place of interment, notably in the Nevsky Prospect, large numbers of spectators had assembled to witness the cortège, which extended to several kilomètres in length. Four funeral cars, laden with silver and floral wreaths, followed the car containing the remains, itself almost hidden beneath a mass of floral tributes. In front walked, besides the students of the Conservatoire, pupils from all classes of schools, to the number of several thousands, in addition to members of various public institutions, the clergy, and the bearers of the decorations which had been conferred upon the deceased. Halts were made at the Conservatoire founded by Rubinstein, and the Vladimir Church, in order that prayers might be offered. On reaching the monastery, after a progress marked by profound reverence on the part of the multitudes lining the route, the remains were placed in a temporary chapel hung with black, which had been erected over the tomb, and then lowered into the grave. A fund has already been started for erecting a monument to the deceased master.

The image shows a musical score for a song titled "The Shepherd's Song". It is written for voice and piano. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The score consists of two systems of music. The first system has a vocal line and a piano accompaniment. The second system has a vocal line and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "pipe all day, Birds tune this mer-ry lay, Lambs frisk and play, Shep-herd". The piano accompaniment features a simple melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. The lyrics are written below the vocal line. The score is marked with "cres." (crescendo) at the end of the first system and the beginning of the second system.

II.—The Answer.*

VOICES AND ORGAN.

1. Fol-low to Cal - va - ry, Tread where He trod, . . He Who for ev - er was Son of God.

2. You who would love Him, stand
Gaze at His Face;
Tarry awhile on your Earthly race.

3. As the swift moments fly
Through the Blest Week,
Read the great story the Cross will teach.

4. Is there no beauty to
You who pass by,
In that lone Figure which Marks that sky?

III.—The Story of the Cross.

VOICES IN UNISON.

1. On the Cross lift - ed, Thy Face we scan, Bearing that Cross for us, Son of Man.

2. Thorns form Thy diadem,
Rough wood Thy throne,
For us Thy blood is shed,
Us alone.

3. No pillow under Thee
To rest Thy Head,
Only the splintered Cross
Is Thy bed.

4. Nails pierce Thy Hands and Feet,
Thy Side the spear;
No voice is nigh to say
Help is near.

5. Shadows of midnight fall
Though it is day;
Thy friends and kinsfolk stand
Far away.

6. Loud is Thy bitter cry;
Sunk on Thy Breast
Hangeth Thy bleeding Head
Without rest.

STUTTGART.—"Konradin von Schwaben," a grand opera, composed by Gottfried Linder to a libretto by Duchess Vera of Württemberg, was revived at the Court Theatre, on November 11, in a new and completely revised version, and very warmly received. The work was originally produced at this theatre twelve years ago. It is, throughout, on the lines of grand opera, but contains a great deal of beautiful and powerful music.—Brahms's rarely-heard "Rinaldo," for male chorus, tenor solo, and orchestra, one of his finest works, though shamefully neglected, was recently performed by the Teachers' Choral Society, under Herr S. de Lange.

TOTIS.—At the theatre in the castle of Count Esterhazy in this place the opera "Arnolda," which lately gained the first prize offered by an American musical society, was successfully produced some time since. The composer, Carl Trotzler, occupies the post of Conductor to Count Esterhazy.

VERONA.—At the Ristori Theatre, "Medora," a grand opera in four acts, composed by Signor Ferruccio Cusinati, was brought to a first hearing on November 29. The novelty was unsuccessful.

VIENNA.—The musical winter season was opened on November 5 with a Concert devoted to compositions by Palestrina and Orlando di Lasso. Of the former master, the Mass "Ecce ego Johannes" and four madrigals, and of his Flemish contemporary two motets, "Jubilate" and "Super flumina," and the humorous double "Echo" chorus, "Ola! o che bon' echo," were included in the programme of this "Festival" Concert, which was conducted by Herr Theobald Kretschmann.—At the Court Theatre, Anton Smareglia's three-act opera, "Cornelius Schutt," was produced on November 23, and hit the taste of the audience. The composer, as well as the principal singers, Fräulein Lola Beeth and Herren Van Dyck and Grengg, were honoured with repeated calls.

WIESBADEN.—M. Saint-Saëns's Oratorio "The Deluge," of which few musicians know more than the prelude (more peculiar than appropriate), was performed here recently, for the first time in Germany, under the direction of Herr Zerlett.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A REMARKABLY fine performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given on the 12th ult., by the Bristol Choral Society, which, notwithstanding its previous good knowledge of the Oratorio, assiduously studied it, under the guidance of Mr. George Riseley, for some weeks prior to the Concert. The band and choir numbered about 500, and the principal vocalists were Miss Agnes Spackman, Miss Jessie King, and Mr. Dean Trotter and Mr. W. Thomas in the places of Mr. Charles Chiley and Mr. W. J. Ineson, absent through indisposition; Mr. J. H. Fulford presided at the organ, and Mr. Riseley conducted. Airs so familiar as those in the Saxon's great work were safe in the hands of soloists so experienced as the ladies and gentlemen named. The achievements of the choir, however, may be fittingly designated as brilliant, so grand were the power and tone, so accurate were the phrasing and enunciation, so careful was the marking of light and shade, and so firm was the attack and sharp the release, due in a great measure to the clear and inspiring direction of the Conductor. Band and organist contributed their share to the magnificence of the performance.

The Bristol Æolian Male Choir, a comparatively new body, formed in Bristol in the East division of the city, where there is need for many more musical societies of this order, gave its second Concert, on the 3rd ult., with surprising and delightful results. The performance, which took place at the Vestry Hall, Pennywell Road, in the midst of a populous district, was attended by the Mayor and a crowded audience. Directed by Mr. Geo. A. Seigh, the choir sang the glees "Hart and Hind" (Bishop), "Who comes" (Callcott), "By Celia's Arbour" (Horsley), "The Martyrs of the Arena" (De Rille), "Blest is the fairy hour" (Horsley), "Hail, Music" (Beschnitt), "Crabbed age and youth" (Stevens), "The Beleguered" (Sullivan), "Vineta" (Abt), "Past is the race of Heroes" (Hargreaves), and "The Mother's Prayer." Good phrasing, clear enunciation, promptness of attack and release, careful attention to light and shade, and all points which go to make up the excellence of a performance were observable in the singing of the young Society, and promise was given of even yet better achievements in the future. The members are to be congratulated on the degree of efficiency they have already attained. Miss Marion Harris and Miss Aldersley contributed songs, and Miss Edith Colman played violin solos.

A select choir of twenty-four voices, from Glasgow, sang in Colston Hall on November 29. The pieces brought forward were chiefly by Scottish authors, as may be gathered from the list: "Hail to the chief," "Wilt thou be my dearie?" "Annie Laurie," "Last May a braw wooer," "The bonny wee window," "The rowan tree," "McGregor's gathering," "The flower of Dunblane," "The wedding of Shon Maclean," "The land o' the leal," "Kate Dalrymple," "The auld nean," "Scots wha' hae," and Bishop's "Now tramp." The singing of these compositions, and of songs rendered by individual members of the choir, was greatly appreciated by a large audience.

At the Saturday Popular Concert at the end of November, which was attended by a large audience, the choir sang "Springs she not" (Pearsall), "The queen of night" (Martin), "A spring song" (Pinsuti), "Stars of the summer night" (Smart), "Hark! Apollo strikes the lyre" (Bishop), and "A sailor's song" (H. Smart). These bright part-songs and glees were the most agreeable feature of the programme. Miss Blanche Powell and Mr. Dan Price contributed songs, Miss Annie Holman and Mr. G. Harlow played violin and cornet solos respectively, and the band performed overtures and selections. At the Concert on the 15th ult. the choral pieces were "Sweet and low" (Barnby), "Hush thee, my babe" (Sullivan), "The Cruisken Lawn" (Stewart), "Come, lasses and lads" (Old English), "Come, Dorothy" (German Volkslied), and "The old folks at home" (Christy). Madame Gomez and Mr. Montague Worlock sang songs, Master Toy gave some violin solos, and among the compositions played by the band was Grieg's "Sigurd Jorsalfar" Suite, now first introduced to Bristolians.

A new ladies' Association—the Clifton Pompadour Musical Society—gave its first Concert on November 22, and pleasingly sang a number of compositions.

A very good performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, on the 13th ult., by the Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Cook. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Ada Patterson, Miss Leslie Trowbridge, Mr. J. Dean Trotter, and Mr. Norman Salmond. Mrs. Alford, Mrs. A. Hunt, Dr. Roxburgh, and Mr. A. E. Masters assisted in the concerted numbers.

Miss Lock's Chamber Concert, on November 28, was exceedingly enjoyable, from the fact that the works brought forward were played with a high degree of artistic excellence. The compositions were Beethoven's String Quartet in B flat (Op. 18, No. 6); Dvorák's extraordinary Dumky Trio (Op. 90) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; and Haydn's String Quartet in D. The executants were Miss Lock, Messrs. Theo. Carrington, Duys, Wetten, and Van Gelder. Miss Lock's pianoforte solos were a couple of pieces of Chopin, and Mrs. Herring Mason contributed songs.

The second Popular Chamber Concert of the season took place in the lesser Victoria Room on the 8th ult., when Rheinberger's Quintet in C (Op. 114) for pianoforte and strings, Haydn's String Quartet (Op. 77, No. 1), and the Andante and Variations from Beethoven's String Quintet (Op. 18, No. 5) were brought forward. The executants were Messrs. Ward, Bernard, Gardner, Pavey, and Miss Mabel Rootham, who also played as her pianoforte solo Chopin's Ballade in A flat. Miss Marion Harris was the vocalist.

The Bristol Post Office Band Concert, which took place on November 28, was a success. Songs by Miss E. Florence, Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. John Morley, and performances by the band, directed by Mr. Fred. Watts, constituted the musical pabulum.

The Concerts at Clifton Spa have been continued with varying success; but the Thursday evening orchestral performances, although remarkably good, have not been adequately supported; hence it is feared they will be allowed to lapse. Perhaps when the large and costly building scheme is completed a fresh attempt will be made to secure proper appreciation of music so choice and so excellently rendered.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Dublin Musical Society led off its nineteenth season with an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," followed by Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal," its first performance in Dublin. The Concert took place in the Royal University Examination Hall, on the 6th ult., and was largely attended. A most gratifying fact is the steady improvement of the Society's band during the last two or three years. Its discipline is now nearly perfect, and anything like "independent" or careless playing was conspicuously absent from this most satisfactory rendering of Mendelssohn's Symphony and the Cantata. Of the choir of 350 voices it need only be said that it never sang better. The principal singers were Mlle. Antoinette Trebelli, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. John Horan, jun.; and the recitation in Mackenzie's work was undertaken by the Rev. Chancellor Tisdall, D.D. Dr. Joseph Smith conducted, Mr. Theodore Werner led the strings, and Mr. Horan, sen., was organist.

An extra Christmas performance of "The Messiah" was given by the same Society on the 20th ult., with Madame Clara Samuelli, Miss Helen Pettican, Mr. Dan Jones, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint as soloists.

It is proposed to give some Orchestral or Symphony Concerts next year, with the band of the Dublin Musical Society, whose capability for such work is no longer to be doubted.

St. George's Choral Union, a well-organised and industrious Society in the North of Dublin, opened its sixth season, on the 14th ult., with a capital performance of Haydn's "Creation," in St. George's Parochial Hall, under the direction of Mr. Raymond Revelle, with band and chorus of seventy performers. The principals were Miss Mary Conway, Mr. Evan Cox, and Mr. J. G. Scott; the band was led by Mr. R. C. Fleming, and Mr. Lurring presided at the organ.

On the same evening the Sackville Musical Society produced Barnby's "Rebekah," at the Sackville Hall, under the direction of Dr. T. R. G. Jozé, the soloists being Miss Lucy Ashton Hackett, Messrs. W. S. North and J. F. Jones.

Dr. W. H. Collisson alternates Subscription and Promenade Concerts at the Leinster Hall on Saturday evenings, all of which are thoroughly enjoyed by large assemblages.

Two "Sullivan" Concerts, with orchestra, were given in the Town Hall, Kingston, on the 4th and 5th ult., both concluding with the operetta "Trial by Jury" (by permission), in which Miss Barbara Byrne and Mr. Alfred Manning took the leading parts. Dr. Joseph Smith conducted.

The series of Chamber Music Recitals continues to be held in the old library of the Royal Dublin Society, on Monday afternoons, before crowded assemblages. Messrs. Papini, Delany, Grisard, Bast, and Esposito are the executants.

Herr Werner's fourth Violin Recital took place at the Arts Club, St. Stephen's Green, on the 4th ult., and included Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, Nardini's Sonata in D, and excerpts from Vieuxtemps, Raff, Sarasate, and Ysaÿe. It is said that a Concerto by a local composer will shortly be heard at one of these popular Recitals. Miss Helen Croft's Benefit Concert, on the 8th ult., at the Antient Concert Rooms, was in very good taste and proved very enjoyable; and on the same evening the second of the Caledonian Society's very successful Concerts was given at the Rotunda.

Lady Arthur Hill's opera "The Ferry Girl" was produced at the Gaiety Theatre, on the 17th ult., running for three nights. A capable band and chorus supported the principals, Miss Kate Drew, Messrs. Chas. Butler, and Frederick Flint; and a crowded audience enjoyed the many beauties of the work, which is of a light and graceful character. Mr. Negroni directed, and Mr. Johnson led the band.

The arrangements for the tenth Annual Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, to be held in Dublin on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th inst., include addresses by Sir John Stainer, Dr. Mann, and Dr. Pearce, &c., a Concert by the members, a Reception and Conversazione by the Leinster Society, a Banquet at the Shelbourne Hotel, a visit to Guinness's Brewery, and a ball at the Mansion House, by invitation of the Lady Mayoress.

MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Dundee Amateur Choral Union (instituted 1858) gave the first Concert of the present season on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Carl Hamilton. The work chosen was Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with full orchestral accompaniment, and Miss Maggie Davies, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Andrew Black as soloists. The choral numbers were excellently sung. A lack of delicacy was noticeable in the softer passages, but a great advance has been made in quality of tone and precision of attack. This will be remembered as one of the finest Concerts given by the Society. Surely nothing could be better than Mr. Black's interpretation of the part of Elijah. He sang throughout with remarkable breadth and dramatic force. Miss Davies and Madame McKenzie also sang with great success, and the accompaniments were efficiently played under the leadership of Mr. Daly.

The second Harrison-Simpson Subscription Concert was held on the 6th ult., and brought two old favourites, Mr. Santley and Herr David Popper, again to Dundee. The other artists were Miss Evangeline Florence, who sang, as always, with much refinement and artistic charm; Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Charles Chillee, and Mlle. Marie Dubois. The Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir sang light part-songs with considerable skill.

Most important among purely local musical events were the interesting Chamber Concert given on November 27, by Mr. Fleming (pianist), assisted by Mr. Elkan Kosman (violinist) and Mrs. Haden (vocalist); and a Lecture on Wagner's "Tannhäuser," by Mr. S. Fraser Harris, on the 15th ult., at a meeting of the East of Scotland Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ONE of the most useful Institutions in Norwich is St. George's Club and Home for Working Girls, and an interesting part of its work consists of vocal and instrumental classes, under the direction of Mr. H. F. Howlett. Once a year the classes combine to give an exhibition of their progress, with the further object of providing funds for carrying on the work. The Concert given in St. Andrew's Hall, on November 27, by the girls, was so much appreciated that it was repeated in the following week, when the building was again well filled. The class from which the executants are drawn having but little time for practice, it will be understood that the music undertaken is of a popular character; but what is tried is creditably performed. In addition to selections for band and chorus, the programme contained violin, flute, cornet, euphonium, and mandoline solos, played in a style that those in higher ranks of life, and with more leisure, would do well to emulate. This club is doing an important elevating work among the class for whom it is intended. The certificates and diplomas gained at the local examination held in October last, in connection with the Victoria College of Music, were presented to the successful candidates on November 30, at a Soirée Musicale given by the local Hon. Secretary, Mr. Ernest Harcourt. Parochial Concerts in various parts of the city have been very prolific during the past month, and it is satisfactory to report that the music given has been generally of a higher level than usual on these occasions. For the more immediate purpose of keeping the chorus in practice, as well as to interest them in their work, the Festival Committee decided to organise four interim Concerts, to be given between the last and next triennial Festival. The first of these was held in May last, when the "Creation" was given; while at the second, held in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 13th ult., Benedict's cantata "St. Cecilia" and a selection from Handel's "L'Allegro ed Il Penseroso" filled the programme. The principal vocalists engaged were Miss Esther Palliser (soprano), Miss Frances Acton (contralto), Mr. H. Stockwell (tenor), and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies (bass), and it was generally admitted that the committee had been fortunate in their selection of soloists, whose singing throughout the evening was most praiseworthy. Miss Palliser's grand effort was "Sweet Bird," from "L'Allegro," the flute obbligato being played by Mr. G. Slight. The chorus amply sustained the reputation gained at the last triennial gathering; the voices are evenly balanced, and from the body of tone produced it may be supposed that the members all sing, and that the cyphers who formerly filled a gap are effectually cleared out. The joyous chorus, "Haste thee, nymph," was honoured with a unanimous encore. The band was composed mainly of members of the Norwich Philharmonic Society, led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre, but strengthened in the wind by a few outsiders. With the exception of being somewhat too loud in places the accompaniments were very neatly played, and the lovely prelude to "St. Cecilia" was given with great delicacy. Dr. Bunnett presided at the organ with his accustomed ability, and Dr. Horace Hill, to whom the credit of raising the chorus to its present high standard is mainly due, conducted.

The Great Yarmouth Musical Society's first Concert of the season came off on November 29, when Mendelssohn's Forty-second Psalm and Van Bree's cantata "St. Cecilia's Day" were the principal attractions. The band and chorus numbered about 130, with two or three exceptions resident in the town. Under the bâton of Dr. Bunnett, who was temporarily filling the post vacated by Mr. H. Stonex from ill-health, a very creditable performance of these two works was given, both chorus and band being proficient in their respective parts. The solos in both works were sung by Miss Vinnie Beaumont with taste and judgment, but the secular work was more suited to her style than the sacred. Vocal selections were also given by Mr. Sawford Dye, and Mr. R. Price was heard in two violoncello solos as well as in Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, with Dr. Bunnett at the pianoforte. Méhul's Overture "Joseph" and an Andante Religioso, for violin and orchestra, written by the Conductor, gave the band an opportunity for showing its ability to do even more exacting work.

The King's Lynn Musical Society gave its first Concert of the season before a large audience, in the Athenæum, on the 14th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was undertaken and performed in a very creditable manner. Perhaps a lower ambition would have been wiser, for "Elijah" is a severe tax upon larger and more experienced choral bodies than Lynn at present possesses; but all honour is due to the Conductor, Mr. Arthur H. Cross, organist of Sandringham, for the success obtained. The vocal quartet comprised Mrs. Stott, Mrs. Barber, Mr. Harry Greene, and Mr. John Sandbrook, who gave the important solos with commendable care and taste. The chorus, numbering upward of 100 voices, showed evidence of careful training and were especially happy in "Thanks be to God," "Be not afraid," and "Behold, God the Lord passed by"; but the "Baal" choruses were not quite so successful. Lynn appears to be weak in instrumental talent, for the band of forty performers was gathered from various places far and near. However, under the leadership of Mr. Noverre, of Norwich, this body proved capable of giving a very fair account of Mendelssohn's orchestration, even at the extreme pace adopted by the Conductor in several numbers.

At the Bury St. Edmund's Choral Association's Concert, on the 13th ult., a meritorious performance of Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" was given, conducted by Mr. Owen A. Clark. The band and chorus numbered about 150 performers, and the principal vocalists were Madame Adeline Paget, Miss Nellie Richardson, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Alfred Osmond.

At the Lowestoft Choral Societies' Concert, on the 18th ult., the principal choral works were Dr. Bridge's cantata "The Cradle of Christ" and Dr. Vincent's Choral Fantasia on National Airs. Mr. R. J. Pitcher conducted.

The Beccles Choral Society, which, since the departure of Mr. Williamson, has been under the superintendence of Mr. W. W. Harvey, gave a capital performance of "Judas Maccabæus," on the 17th ult.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

UNABATED interest and energy is shown in the musical record of last month's engagements. This is, perhaps, the very busiest season Edinburgh has ever known, and the more exacting standard of public criticism is a feature of the greatest possible satisfaction to every lover of music in the Northern capital.

The most important factor in our musical life is still Mr. Henschel's Orchestra. On the 5th ult. interest was centred in Dvorák's new and particularly charming Symphony, "From the New World." The work received every justice from the artists under Mr. Henschel's bâton, and evoked great enthusiasm. The deeper meaning of Schumann's "Manfred" Overture was not so readily grasped, but it was very beautifully played. Miss Clara Butt, in "Che farò," "Caro mio ben," and Gounod's famous aria from "Sapho," was warmly received. At the fifth Concert of the series, on the 17th ult., two new works were performed, a more detailed notice of which must be held over until the issue of our next number. The rendering of Mr. Drysdale's music to the "Kelpie," by Miss Joran, M. Brozel, and Mr. Kirkhope's Choir, under the composer's bâton, was all that could be desired. No less justice was done to Mr. W. Augustus Barratt's Ballad, "Sir Patrick Spens," and when Mr. Kirkhope resumed command of his choir in Goring Thomas's "Sun Worshippers," it was evident that new works and strange conductors had not interfered with the study of old favourites or the liveliest sympathy with every demand of the popular Conductor's beat. The young composers received quite an ovation.

On the 10th ult. a crowded audience was drawn to the Music Hall, to hear the Choral Union give the "Creation." The soloists were Miss Davies, Mr. Piercy, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. Piercy sang with abundant expression, although he took a good deal of liberty with the tradition of precise old "Papa Haydn," to the discomfiture of the orchestra. That Mr. Andrew Black did himself justice is to say enough of his part; he was most enthusiastically applauded. But the most important element in the Concert to a candid observer was, of course, the chorus, and it must be admitted that the steady improvement of the last few years under Mr. Collisson is well maintained. "The Heavens are telling" was sung with great attention to nuance, although the conception was a little wanting in breadth and spontaneity; but "Achieved is the glorious work" was magnificently rendered. An almost adequate orchestra gave much more evidence of rehearsal than is the unhappy tradition of such Concerts in Edinburgh.

The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society surpassed all its previous efforts in a somewhat ambitious programme at its first Concert this season. In Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, German's "Henry VIII." music, and the "Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture, Mr. Carl Hamilton had every reason to be proud of the strides the Society has made of late. A local quartet of male singers won great applause from the large audience.

It is no unfamiliar fact that a prodigy commands more public attention than a mature artist can hope for; but too many concert frequenters were absent from one of the most important Concerts of the season, when Josef Hofmann gave a Recital embracing works from Bach to Liszt. This is no place to estimate Hofmann's powers, or to compare him and his interpretations with impressions left by older favourites; but so much may be said, that if he expands in other directions as he has already done to the easy conquest of all conceivable technical difficulties, few artists will care to compete with him in a very few years.

Mr. Paul Della Torre gave the second of two interesting Recitals on the 1st ult., when he was assisted by Mr. Lemonné, the eminent flautist. Mr. Stockwell, a tenor singer, also contributed to the programme. Mr. Della Torre is well known as one of the very best of our local pianists, and his selection of solos—"Faschingsschwank," and a Prelude, Nocturne, and Ballade by Chopin—was warmly applauded. Mr. Lemonné's beautiful style seemed to give the liveliest satisfaction.

The programmes at the meetings of the Edinburgh Society of Musicians this year have been of exceptional interest. The Lecture last month was delivered by Mr. Seligmann, President of the Glasgow Society of Musicians, who entertained his audience with anecdotes selected from nearly fifty years' experience of music in Scotland. Important contributions to the programmes have been Nonettes by Spohr and Rheinberger, Spohr's Septet, &c.

Professor Niecks is giving a series of six Historical Concerts—five of String Quartet music and one of Choral music—in the University Music Class Room. The first was given on November 14, and included Quartet in B flat major (Op. 1, No. 1), Haydn; Quartet in C major (Op. 33, No. 3), Haydn; Quartet in C major, Mozart; Quartet in D minor (Op. 76, No. 2), Haydn. The second Concert, on the 12th ult., included Quartet in C major (Op. 76, No. 3, "The Emperor"), Haydn; Quartet in F major, Mozart; Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4), Beethoven. The remaining Concerts, the programmes of which are of great interest, will be given on the 16th inst., February 13 and 27, and March 20. The performers were Professor Niecks and Mr. J. F. Guyer (violins), Mr. Colin McKenzie (viola), and Mr. Grant T. McNeill (violinello). This quartet is an established institution, and not a party gathered together for a few Concerts.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ORCHESTRAL music in Glasgow has surely fallen upon evil times—an observation which may seem somewhat strange to many folks outside our good city. A hard fact remains, however, to be reckoned with, and this is the meagre support accorded the Concerts of the Choral and Orchestral Union. It was confidently expected that with the cessation of last season's hostilities the musical public would have lent substantial aid to the joint scheme. Not so, however, and especially as regards the subscriptions to the higher-priced seats, which ought, of course, to form the backbone of the organisation. Unless, indeed, the attendances improve very considerably, all interested in the financial success of the scheme will again have to face a serious deficit. This would be a grave misfortune, and it is not difficult to forecast a highly probable result. Let us hope, however, that matters will mend, and that Mr. Henschel and his able body of instrumentalists may also be encouraged to maintain the high efficiency which has hitherto characterised their labours. Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was produced on the 4th ult., when there should not have been a vacant seat in St. Andrew's Hall. Seldom has the Choral Union sung so well—many of the choruses would, indeed, have done credit to an English Festival choir; the band was in first-rate order, and Mr. Andrew Black's exposition of the part of the Prophet was simply superb. The other soloists, Miss Esther Palliser, Madame Marian McKenzie, and Mr. James Leyland (who deputised for Mr. E. Houghton), also worthily filled their respective rôles, and the trio and other concerted numbers were happily cared for by members of the Union, over which Mr. Joseph Bradley, the popular Conductor, so acceptably presides. Miss Palliser again made a highly favourable impression at the Popular Concert on the 8th ult., when Mr. Emanuel Moór also appeared, in charge of his own Pianoforte Concerto, a work which has been heard before under—truth to tell—better auspices. Humperdinck's Prelude to "Hänsel and Gretel" ushered in the sixth Classical Concert, on the evening of the 11th ult. It can only be said that the Overture whets the appetite for an acquaintance with the "Legend in Three Pictures" in its entirety. Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Op. 15) served to again bring Mr. Leonard Borwick before a Glasgow audience. The experience was truly welcome. It is safe enough to say that Beethoven's C minor Symphony has rarely been heard in Glasgow under better conditions, and Mr. Henschel and his bandsmen deserve to be felicitated on their performance of the evergreen work. That rising young operatic vocalist, Miss Pauline Joran, sang at the Popular Concert on the 15th ult., when the programme included Dvorák's new Symphony (No. 5) in E minor, as also one or two pieces of a familiar and thoroughly acceptable type. The seventh Classical Concert was announced for the afternoon of Christmas Day, and with Mr. and Mrs. Henschel as the vocalists. Leading features in the programme included Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, Beethoven's "King Stephen" Overture, and "Saul's Dream," a number from Dr. Parry's work that Mr. Henschel has made his own. The second Chamber Concert of the series was set down for the 27th ult., and amateurs had been looking forward to a delightful evening with Haydn, Beethoven, and Schubert.

Young Hofmann came and conquered on the 13th ult., as was quite apparent from the reception accorded him at the Queen's Rooms. Keen interest centres in the forthcoming banquet to Mr. August Manns, a function which promises to rank as a red-letter record in Glasgow musical annals. Than the popular Sydenham chef no man has done more for the musical art North of the Tweed. The banquet, it may be of interest to note, will be graced by the presence of ladies.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

CHRISTMASTIDE does not seem this year to have brought with it the average number of Concerts, and of what have been given there is but little to be said, as nearly everything placed before music-lovers has been of the well-worn order. Be it understood that this applies to those departures in the way of choral music which are looked for at a period when local societies usually give evidence of the work done in the first moiety of a winter session. Liverpool is, in fact, as has been before noted, hopelessly behind in regard to matters which appertain to the singing side of the musician's art. The Philharmonic Society gave, on the 18th ult., Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," under Sir Charles Hallé; on the 13th ult., Spohr's "Last Judgment" was rendered at the pro-Cathedral, according to long-established custom, under the direction of Mr. F. H. Burstall. At this performance was also given Dr. J. F. Bridge's "Cradle of Christ," the only new thing heard, except Dr. Parry's "Job," so far this season, and it proved, therefore, doubly acceptable. The Post Office Choral Society appears to have abandoned the higher walks of art, and contented itself, on the 5th ult., with half-a-dozen part-songs, very well sung, under Mr. Clarke and a company of star vocalists.

In Birkenhead, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Handel's "Messiah" have been given by the choir of the Young Men's Christian Association, under Mr. Thomas; the last-named oratorio also by the Cambrian Choral Society, under Mr. D. O. Parry; and Dr. C. H. Parry's "Judith" by the St. Cecilia Society, under Mr. J. M. Appleyard. At Rock Ferry, Mr. Pemberton's Society has performed Gounod's "St. Cecilia" Mass.

At Liscard, a rapidly growing Cheshire suburb, Dvorák's fine cantata "The Spectre's Bride" was given on the 17th ult., under Mr. Argent, and carried forward the very happy traditions of the Wallasey Musical Society in regard to the production of new or comparatively unfamiliar works. At Runcorn, Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night" was given on the same evening, under Mr. Crossley.

On the other hand, orchestral music still proves a sort of fixed star in the local firmament. The Società Armonica has given Schubert's C major Symphony—an ambitious work, by the way, for Mr. W. Cafferata's forces; and the famous Orchestral Society under Mr. Rodewald has produced, at the first of the now regular "Ladies" Concerts, Beethoven's A major Symphony and other important works, with the usual excellent results. At the Music School—where, it may be noted, Dr. H. Hiles succeeds the late Dr. W. H. Hunt as chief harmony professor—some good orchestral music was played by the students on the 13th ult., under Mr. Courvoisier; and last, though not least, the Philharmonic Society devoted the programme of its fifth Concert, on the 4th ult., in the main to instrumental work. Lady Hallé gave on this occasion a delightful rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and the novelty was an excerpt from Saint-Saëns's "Suite Algérienne." Schumann's "Manfred" Overture and Moszkowski's "Cortège Marche" were also included in an excellent programme of the miscellaneous order.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, held here on the 15th ult., some excellent music was rendered by the members; and Mr. Charles Fry, who was fulfilling another engagement in Liverpool at the time, introduced an acceptable novelty in the form of one of the recitations with Mr. Stanley Hawley's music. Poe's "The Bells" was the piece selected, and it met with most cordial recognition. Dr. Hiles, of Manchester, and Miss Vickers, of Liverpool, presided over a large and most agreeable meeting of members.

Organ Recitals were given in St. George's Hall by Mr. J. K. Strachan, of Glasgow, on Saturday afternoon and evening, the 15th ult., and Sunday afternoon, the 16th ult. There was a large and enthusiastic audience at each Recital.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE programme provided by Sir Charles Hallé for November 29 was specially interesting, including, as it did, the Symphonie Fantastique of Berlioz—which was given for the seventh time—a first performance of Dvorák's "Carneval" Overture, two movements from Beethoven's "Prometheus" music, and vocal selections by Miss Brema, in which (and particularly in the old Irish airs, scored by Professor Stanford) she displayed great dramatic power and sympathy. Of the first-named work nothing new could be said. The old impression remains that, while there are, here and there, some extremely charming passages, rendered particularly welcome by the relief they afford, the chief interest to the student arises from the many experiments in scoring by the boldest of modern orchestrators. The Overture was well played, and its descriptive variety brightly brought out. No doubt it will soon be repeated; and an opportunity offered to follow more quietly and calmly its details. Should the "Prometheus" selection be again presented, it would be well to avoid the repetitions marked in the score which, especially in the florid variations, become excessively wearisome. In the early days of concerted instrumental music a desirable length of movement was secured often only by the encores of each section; but, as constructive power increased, the necessity for such elongation ceased. The third performance in consecutive years of selections from Wagner's "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" calls for no remark beyond the record that, while the singing of Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Black was worthy of the renown of these artists, the familiarity of the choir and the orchestra with the works secured an excellent interpretation. For the Concert of the 13th ult. Mons. Rivarde selected the Violin Concerto in B minor of Saint-Saëns, of which the Andantino has a delightful simplicity and continuity not found in the quicker movements; and in the Airs Russes of Wieniawski he revelled in the "harmonic" regions, where he seems to be specially at home. He was thrice recalled. Mdlle. Landi, in the air "Ohi del mio dolce ardor," from Gluck's "Paris et Hélène," proved the charming quality of her voice when its tones are freed from the vibrato so affected by vocalists incapable of sustaining a steady, equable, well-tuned note, or always simulating an absurdly hysterical passion. The movement "Vysehrad," from a Poème Symphonique of Smetana, has little beyond well-defined rhythmic swing and clear orchestration to commend it. Of the two annual performances of "The Messiah," on the 20th and 21st ult., nothing need be said except that the principals were Misses Anna Williams and Clara Butt, with Messrs. Lloyd and Santley; and that the choral effects testified the energetic training of Mr. R. H. Wilson, while the assistance of Mr. Fogg at the organ was judicious and valuable.

Among many other performances of "The Messiah" during the month, that of Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Choir, on the 15th ult., must be specified as evincing increased sonority of tone and mastery of the executive difficulties. Of course Madame Clara Samuëll, Mr. Piercy, and Mr. Black need no commendation.

The Harrison Concert of the 11th ult. was unexpectedly successful as regards attendance; and, in spite of the indisposition of Mr. Lloyd, and the fact that one or two of the vocalists are fairly entitled to retire after their long and faithful service to the public, elicited great enthusiasm. Mr. Santley obligingly gave extra songs to preserve the desirable length of the programme, and was in capital voice. The Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir sang some eccentrically arranged national airs, and the spirit of their rendering, combined with the novelty of the conducting of Madame Clara Novello Davis, commended their efforts to a large portion of the audience.

At the Concert Hall some excellent chamber music has, during the month, been enjoyed. On the 3rd ult. the Gentlemen's Society provided a well-selected programme, undertaken by the chief soloists of Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra, with the co-operation of Mr. Steudner-Welsing at the pianoforte. The Pianoforte and Vocal Recital, at the Free Trade Hall, of Messrs. Borwick and Plunket Greene was unfortunately fixed for the same night, and the needless interference of the two appeals detracted from the success of both.

On the 10th ult. Mr. Willy Hess drew together his friends for the second time this season, and sufficiently rewarded them if only by his masterly playing of Bach's G minor Fugue. But, in addition, they had Schubert's Octet (Op. 166) and a delightful Scherzo from Cherubini's E flat (No. 1) Quartet. Finely as the Octet was rendered, the feeling was unavoidable that "heavenly length" is unsuitable for this bustling, transitory life; and that strings contend with wind instruments unequally, unless when fairly proportioned, as in the orchestra.

An excellent entertainment by Mr. Henry Watson's Vocal Society, and the Organ Recitals of Mr. Kendrick Pyne, at the Town Hall, must be recorded, together with the regular Saturday evening gatherings at the Young Men's Christian Association, conducted by Mr. Cross.

By a very happy chance I happened to be in Derby on the evening of the 5th ult., and was lured to the Concert of the Orpheus and Madrigal Society established by Mr. Arthur Smith. The choir numbers about sixty voices; and so rarely are opportunities offered of listening to anything like perfect male part-singing, that I congratulate myself upon the accident which took me into the hall that evening. The parts were well balanced, the voices good and free from the roughness which often seriously detracts from the efforts of such choirs, and the Conductor's control of his force absolute.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

UNUSUAL activity has been shown among the choral and orchestral organisations of this district during the month. Fenton Town Hall was packed on November 29, when the Longton and Fenton Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. Frank Hughes, gave its first Concert. Aided by Miss Nellie Gossnell (vocalist) and Mr. Fred. Ward (violin) an excellent programme was presented, and the orchestra can be congratulated upon the success of its initial effort.

Sir Smith Child, with his usual generosity, assisted the energetic Society bearing his own name in providing high class music for the people of Tunstall for the fourth season. Mr. James Alcock conducted, and the chorus (numbering over 100 voices) rendered Haydn's "Spring" and gave evidence of much careful training. The principals were Miss L. Lonsdale (of Tunstall), Mr. Hamlet Hopkins, and Mr. Meir. A miscellaneous selection followed the cantata, and the whole Concert was thoroughly appreciated by the large audience. The Rev. P. Stowers presided at the pianoforte.

The annual "Messiah" Festival of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society took place at the Victoria Hall, on the 13th ult., before an enthusiastic audience. The announcement that Mr. Edward Lloyd would be unable to fulfil his engagement caused genuine disappointment among local music-lovers, but at the eleventh hour Mr. Ben Davies being secured, the exacting part was adequately provided for. Miss Florence Monk, Madame Dews, and Mr. John Ridding completed the list of principals, and the choir did its duty admirably. Mr. James Garner, the founder and painstaking Conductor, was in splendid form, and to him in a great degree the success of the evening may be justly attributed.

Mr. Sydney Clifford's Company gave a very successful Operatic Concert on the 13th ult., in the Longton Town Hall.

On the 20th ult. the Longton Choral Society performed Haydn's "Creation," with Madame Laura Smart, Mr. F. Barlow, and Mr. F. Owens as principals, and Mr. E. H. Bloor as Conductor.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Concert of the Gateshead Choral Society, on November 26, was in every respect a great success; but if one feature was worthy of greater praise than another, it was the singing of the choir. The Concert was given in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and there was a very large and enthusiastic audience. It is certain that no better part-singing has been heard in this locality for many years. The principal pieces in the programme were Meyerbeer's Ninety-first Psalm, in eight parts, which was sung unaccompanied; Mozart's motet, "Splendete Te, Deus," and Pearsall's "Sir Patrick Spens." The programme also included part-songs and madrigals, by Orlando di Lassus, Dr. C. Villiers Stanford, and Henry Smart, all of which were admirably sung. The following artists also appeared: Madame Clara Samuelli, Miss Jeanie Rankin, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, Mr. Philip Cathie (violin), and Mr. Clement Locknane (pianoforte). Mr. C. Francis Lloyd conducted, at almost a moment's notice, owing to the sudden indisposition of Mr. James M. Preston, the esteemed Conductor of the Society. The next Concert of the Society will take place on February 26, when Sullivan's "Golden Legend" will be given.

Miss Maud May's Concert, on November 28, was very successful. Dvorák's Quintet (Op. 81) for pianoforte and strings was exceedingly well played by Miss May (pianoforte), Miss Dondersley (first violin), Miss Winifred Foster (second violin), Mr. Emil Kreuz (viola), and Mr. W. H. Squire (violinello). The vocalist was Miss Clara Butt, who delighted all hearers. It is worthy of remark that all the artists were formerly students of the Royal College of Music.

The visit of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company to the Tyne Theatre, Newcastle, which extended over the week commencing the 3rd ult., was neither so interesting nor so successful as usual. The principal event of the visit was the performance, for the first time in Newcastle, of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new opera "Jeanie Deans," which was fully noticed in the last issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The work was presented in excellent style, both as to the manner of its performance and staging. The other operas heard during the week were "Tannhäuser," "Daughter of the Regiment," "At Santa Lucia," "Bohemian Girl," Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," and Goring Thomas's "Esmeralda."

The Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society gave its annual Concert in Newcastle, on the 10th ult. This Society was formed some four years ago for the purpose of providing a fund for the assistance of local musicians in time of sickness or distress. Once a year the members combine to give an orchestral Concert in aid of the funds, and so far their efforts have been remarkably successful. The orchestra at the recent Concert consisted of ninety performers, and among the most successful of the works performed were Dr. Mackenzie's new Overture "Britannia," a movement from a Suite in F by C. Francis Lloyd, Weber's Concertstucke for pianoforte and orchestra (the solo being admirably played by Mr. J. M. Preston), and the "Tannhäuser" Overture. The vocalist was Miss Clara Butt, who created the utmost enthusiasm by her singing; and Mr. J. H. Beers conducted.

The Chamber Music Society gave its second Concert of the season on the 12th ult. The instrumentalists were Messrs. Schiever, Akeroyd, Courvoisier, and Carl Fuchs, and the vocalist Mr. Plunket Greene, with Mr. J. M. Preston as accompanist. The most enjoyable piece on the programme was Schumann's String Quartet in A, which was delightfully played. The songs of Mr. Plunket Greene were also very greatly appreciated.

On the 17th ult. Mr. Josef Hofmann gave a Pianoforte Recital in Newcastle. His programme was drawn from Bach, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schubert, Liszt, and Rubinstein, and also included some Variations of his own composition.

The Newcastle Harmonic Society, of which Dr. Charles Chambers is the Conductor, have decided definitely to give a performance of Dr. Joseph Parry's "Saul of Tarsus" at an early date. Dr. Parry has promised to come to Newcastle for the purpose of conducting his work.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Mansfield Harmonic Society is thriving under the conductorship of Mr. Marshall-Ward. Its performance of Spöhr's "Last Judgment," on November 27, was an excellent example of good results achieved with small resources. The principal vocalists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. Walter Ford, the latter, a rising young local basso, achieving a marked success.

Mr. Josef Hofmann gave an interesting Pianoforte Recital in the Albert Hall, on November 27, and displayed his versatile talents in a programme including diverse styles, from Eugene d'Albert's transcription of Bach's Organ Fugue in D major to Chopin, Rubinstein, and Liszt.

At the first Drawing-Room Concert Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Plunket Greene gave a Pianoforte and Vocal Recital, which was highly appreciated.

The West Bridgford Choral Society and its Conductor, Mr. Derbyshire, deserve praise for their excellent Concert, on the 6th ult., when they performed Cowen's "St. John's Eve." The solos were well sung by Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Alice Thorpe, and Messrs. Carson and Frank Kirk. The selection of this work was fortunate and its performance most creditable to all concerned.

Mr. Frank Lambert's Concert, on the 7th ult., was interesting, apart from the local interest evoked by his own compositions, which received deserved applause. The artists were Miss Mary Harris, Miss Marie Stiven, Mr. George Aspinall, Mr. Mervyn Dene, Mr. Maurice Farkoa, and Mr. Edgar Hulland.

Messrs. Ellenberger and Thorpe included vocal music in the programme of their second Chamber Concert, on the 4th ult., for the first time, and the engagement of Mr. William Foxon, of Sheffield, proved fortunate. The revival of Leclair's quaint Duo Sonata for violin and viola (finely played by Messrs. Ellenberger and Courvoisier) was a delightful surprise. From the remainder of the programme we must select Mr. Thorpe's violoncello solos—Serenade Orientale (Popper) and Marcello's Sonata in F—as particularly successful.

The Scottish Orchestra, under Mr. Henschel, is undoubtedly, in size and excellence, the finest combination that has visited Nottingham since Herr Richter's first appearance some years ago. The decided lack of interest evinced in their coming cannot be accounted for, and would surely not be repeated. Their playing of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the "Tannhäuser" Overture, and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite was a genuine pleasure to hear. Mr. Henschel gave a fine rendering of a scene from Dr. Parry's new Oratorio, "King Saul."

The Sacred Harmonic Society promised a good "Messiah" Concert for the 27th ult., too late for notice in this issue.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Lectures of the Music Faculty contained two extremely interesting discourses during the past term. On November 21 Dr. J. F. Bridge discussed "Early English Dramatic Music" with his customary vivacity before a very numerous audience, who showed equal appreciation of the Lecture itself and of the illustrations, which were admirably sung by three choristers and Messrs. Fell and Price, of Westminster Abbey. A fortnight later Sir John Stainer himself unfolded the origin and development of the choral responses of the English Church, and by his complete mastery of the subject contrived to impart interest into a rather technical and in some parts antiquarian topic. It is to be hoped that his vigorous protest as to the neglect with which Tallis's noble Litany is treated in too many cathedrals will be heeded by those who are responsible for it.

There has only been one of the series of Classical Concerts (October 25), but this was, on the whole, the most satisfactory yet given. An admirably varied programme, comprising Beethoven's "Leonora" (No. 3) Overture, Saint-Saëns's Concerto for pianoforte in G minor, and Schumann's Symphony in B flat major, received a capital rendering under Dr. Lloyd's direction; and Miss Marie Brema, who appeared for the first time in Oxford, made a great impression in two of Wagner's songs.

The other Concerts of the Term must be briefly dismissed, simply because they have been so numerous that anything like detail is quite impossible. The Schiever Quartet played Quartets by Beethoven and Schumann very finely at the Musical Union Invitation Concert, on November 27, and Messrs. Borwick and Plunket Greene, on November 28, and the Meister Glee Singers, on November 3, attracted large audiences. The other performers of most note who have visited Oxford during the autumn were Mdlle. and Master Gérardy and Josef Hofmann. One remarkable innovation requires a word of special recognition. On November 22 Messrs. Acott and Co. arranged to give a capital "Monday Pop" Concert in Oxford, transferring it bodily, so to speak, from London. It is sincerely to be hoped that support enough was accorded to this spirited enterprise to bring about further Concerts of the same sort in the not distant future.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Amateur Instrumental Society gave the first Subscription Concert of the season, on the 4th ult., in the Montgomery Hall. Prout's Symphony in F was the chief feature of the programme, and the members of the band accorded it a very excellent performance. The melodious third movement was played con amore, and the elaborate Finale, though severely taxing the resources of amateurs, was adequately rendered. The programme also included Overtures by Weber and Wallace, and a selection from "La Fille du Régiment." Dr. Coward, who conducted, was cordially greeted on his first public appearance since obtaining honours at Oxford.

During the past month several Ballad Concerts have been given, of which the most interesting was Messrs. Harrison's second Subscription Concert.

Mr. W. Brown's Popular Concerts in the Albert Hall have been resumed, and on the 8th ult. Mr. Guilmant gave a largely attended Organ Recital. At this Concert Miss Ethel Griffith, a gifted young local violinist, made a successful début.

A new Musical Society has been formed in Doncaster, under the title of the St. Cecilia Society. Mr. Alfred Taylor has been appointed Conductor, and the first work performed will be Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty."

The Conisborough Musical Society performed Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" at its opening Concert. The success of the new Society was unmistakable. Mr. Alfred Taylor was the Conductor.

Miss Lilian Hovey, who is well known locally as an excellent contralto vocalist, made a successful début as a reciter, in the Montgomery Hall, on the 17th ult. Her programme included a translation of Björnson's tragic poem "Bergliot," with accompanying music by Edvard Grieg. Mr. Charles Fry, of London, who has been directing Miss Hovey's studies, also took part in the programme, and gave, among other pieces, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," with Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's music. Miss Florence Winter was an excellent pianist, playing the accompaniments to the recitations referred to with much skill and sympathy.

On the 18th ult. the Amateur Musical Society's winter Concert took place in the Albert Hall. The first part of the programme comprised Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" and Handel's Organ Concerto in F (No. 5). The chorus work in Beethoven's Oratorio, while not severely taxing the resources of the choir, afforded evidence of careful preparation, and all the choral numbers were admirably rendered. The acquisition this season of a number of new tenors has strengthened the Society in what was a weak department, and the choir is now very evenly balanced. Miss Annie Norledge sang the trying soprano music with excellent taste and finish, and Mr. William Foxon's faultless rendering of the tenor music made his return to the concert-platform additionally welcome. Mr. T. H. Watson, a member of the Society, sang the bass solos. After Mr. J. W. Phillips had given a striking performance of the Organ Concerto, Mendelssohn's "Athalie" was given. For this work the services of Mr. Charles Fry had been retained, and so admirably did he deliver the connecting "readings," and so acceptable to the audience was this new departure, that arrangements will doubtless be made to secure his re-appearance in Sheffield, probably in Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal." In "Athalie" the members of the chorus had their opportunity, and it was made the most of. Their singing throughout was accurate and firm, and the tone was excellent. The principals were Miss Norledge, Miss Amy Carter, Mrs. Davies, and Miss Booker. An excellent band was led by Mr. John Peck; Mr. Phillips was Organist, and Mr. Schöllhammer conducted.

Mr. Josef Hofmann made his first appearance in Sheffield on the 19th ult., when he gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Albert Hall.

Selections from "The Messiah" have been given during Advent at St. Mary's Church, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Rodgers.

The usual number of "Messiah" performances were given on Christmas Day.

MUSIC IN WILTS AND HANTS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SALISBURY has been well supplied with music during the month just past, though to judge by the extent to which the better class of Concerts have been attended, the supply has not been in excess of the demand. Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Leonard Borwick had a large and very appreciative audience at their Recital in the Assembly Rooms, on Tuesday afternoon, the 4th ult. Madame Antoinette Sterling appeared in the County Hall on the evening of the same day, before another crowded room. She was supported by Miss Blanche Powell, Mr. Trefelyn David, Mr. Alexander Tucker, Miss Louise Nanney (solo violin), and Mr. Frank Hollis (pianoforte).

The usual Advent performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" took place in the Cathedral on Thursday, the 13th ult. The solos were sung by members of the choir, Mr. C. F. South presided at the organ, and an excellent and impressive rendering of the Oratorio was the result. Dr. Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens" and Mr. Hamish MacCunn's choral ballad "Lord Ullin's Daughter" were the chief works performed by the Sarum Choral Society, at the second Concert of its forty-sixth season, held in the Assembly Rooms, on the 19th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Hettie Johnson and Mr. F. H. Noyes. Mr. F. L. Bartlett led the orchestra, and Mr. W. T. Bowey conducted.

An interesting musical service took place in the beautiful Parish Church of Wilton, on the 19th ult., when selections from "The Messiah" and "St. Paul" were given by the choir, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Naish, Organist of the Church. A small orchestra supplemented the organ in the accompaniments, and Mr. Naish gave a short Recital on the latter instrument, including Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in D minor and a Larghetto by Wesley.

At Marlborough, the annual College Concert was fixed for the 20th ult., the programme consisting of a well arranged selection of vocal and instrumental music, and concluding, as usual, with the "Carmen Marlboroughense." Mr. W. S. Bainbridge was the Conductor. The Marlborough Choral Society is preparing Mozart's Twelfth Mass and Mr. Gaul's cantata "Una" for the next Concert.

A very successful performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given by the Ryde Choral Union, on the 13th ult., in aid of the funds of the Royal Isle of Wight Infirmary and County Hospital. The choir of the Society, numbering 120 voices, had been well trained by the Conductor, Miss Margaret Fowles, and sang the choruses admirably. The band was also very good, and the solo vocalists—Miss Kate Cove, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Clifford Hunnybun, and Mr. Robert Hilton—everything that could be desired. Unusual interest attached to this Concert, it being the last which Miss Fowles will conduct, that lady having announced her intention of relinquishing the direction of the Society on account of a press of other work. Her absence will be keenly felt.

The annual Concert of the Southampton Boys' College and High School at Shaftesbury Hall was one of the most successful ever given by that flourishing institution. The programme, arranged by Mr. E. Christopher Young, included Abt's cantata, "The Wishing Stone," which received an excellent rendering. The choruses were sung by the boys of the College who are in Mr. Young's singing-class, and the solos were given by Miss Gertrude Shearer and Miss May Lance. A miscellaneous selection made up the remainder of the programme. The Southampton Amateur Orchestral Society gave a Concert at the Hartley Hall on the 5th ult. The programme was judiciously compiled with a view to the capabilities of the band, which since its organization has made rapid strides under the careful training of Mr. E. Moon, the Conductor. The vocalist was Miss Marie Hooten, and Mr. Charles Fletcher contributed some finely played violin solos. An Oratorio, "Paradise," was performed by the South Front Choral Society, on the 6th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. F. Merfield. The solo vocalists were Miss Kate McLaughlan, Miss S. Smith, Miss May Lance, Mr. C. French, and Mr. W. Wheeler. The band was led by Mr. J. Merfield, and Mr. Fred. Hallum presided at the organ. The Southampton Philharmonic Society opened the season with a performance of "The Messiah," on the 18th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Jessie Hudleston, Miss E. Leslie, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Tom Powley. Mr. H. M. Pike was the Conductor.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS has been unusually occupied with musical concerns during the past month. Taking a long list of Concerts in chronological order, Miss Eisele gave, on November 28, a pupils' Concert, at which several of her pupils showed commendable skill. At special Advent Services in the Leeds Parish Church, on the 6th and 10th ult., two important choral works were performed, on the former occasion Brahms's "German Requiem" and on the latter Spohr's "Last Judgment." Both were happily chosen with regard to the season, and both were most creditably executed. Though the absence of an orchestra was an irreparable loss, it was minimised by the clever organ playing of Mr. Guilman. The Parish Church organist, Mr. Alfred Benton, conducted, and the soloists were Miss Bishop, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Browning, of whom the last-named must be singled out for particular praise, though all were most efficient. A Choral Contest, promoted by the Leeds Prize Musical Union, took place in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult., and proved thoroughly successful. There were eleven male-voice choirs and seven of mixed voices. Dr. C. H. Lloyd was the judge, and awarded the first prize in the former class to the Nelson Excelsior Glee Union, and in the latter to the Mossley Vocal Society. Prizes were secured also by the Harrogate and Bradford Moor Societies of men's voices, and by the Golcar and Reedyford Choirs. The Armley Choral Society, on the 11th ult., gave Gaul's "Joan of Arc," Mr. Harrison conducting, and Miss Emma Wilby, Messrs. Riley and Billington being the principal vocalists. The second of the Leeds Subscription Concerts took place on the 12th ult. Sir Charles Hallé's band performed Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, their success being most marked in the vigorous Finale. Mr. Frederick Dawson played Tchaikowsky's highly original and characteristic Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor with remarkable brilliancy and ease of execution, and Miss Sarah Berry sang several solos with an ease and charm of style that was as delightful as it was refreshing.

Weber's too-much neglected "Freischütz" was the subject of the third of the Bradford Subscription Concerts, on the 14th ult., a welcome revival, in view of the exceedingly small chance there seems to be of witnessing a stage performance in this part of the world, though the opera is one that ought to suit the Royal Carl Rosa Company to perfection. The soloists were Messdames Duma and Amy Sherwin, Messrs. Ben Davies, Andrew Black, Alec Marsh, P. Lincey, and W. Thornton. Sir Charles Hallé conducted his Manchester band, to whom Weber's music is well suited, and the chorus was supplied by the Bradford Festival Choral Society. On November 24 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave one of its excellent Concerts, the popularity of which is growing steadily. At the next of the Society's Concerts, on the 8th ult., Mr. N. Kilburn, of Bishop Auckland, well-known in the North of England as one of its ablest amateur conductors, and a musician of exceptional culture, appeared to conduct a well-written Suite, consisting of a Dance, Song, and March, and written especially for the occasion. Musicianly workmanship and knowledge of orchestral effects are the main features of this agreeable work. Madame Bertha Moore was the vocalist. Mr. W. B. Sewell conducted both Concerts.

At Huddersfield the Subscription Concerts, which have this season shown an upward tendency in an artistic sense—popularly they could hardly be a greater success—have been continued by a Conversazione, on the 4th ult., at which the Misses Tulloch were the entertainers, and on the 11th ult. an orchestral programme was supplied by Sir Charles Hallé's band, who did full justice to Dvorák's latest Symphony, "From the New World." In Saint-Saëns's G minor Pianoforte Concerto, Miss Eisele, who was the soloist, played conscientiously rather than brilliantly. Songs were contributed by Madame Swiatkowski, who showed decided dramatic power in an air from Glinka's "La vie pour le Czar." The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave, on November 27, a performance of Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri." The principal soloists were Mrs. Allen Sykes, Miss Battye, Miss Helena Sykes, Messrs. Tom Child and W. Thornton, of whom only the last-named can be said to have achieved more than competency. The chorus sang with excellent expression and precision, reflecting much credit upon its trainer and Conductor, Mr. Ibeson. The absence of an orchestra was greatly felt, but in other respects the performance was more than creditable.

The York Musical Society gave, on the 11th ult., a performance of "Samson" that indicated most satisfactorily the decided advance made by the chorus under Dr. Naylor's painstaking teaching. Madame Emily Squire, Miss Jessie King, Messrs. Gawthrop and Duncanson formed an efficient quartet of soloists. On November 30 the Wakefield Choral Society performed Barnett's popular (because easily understood) cantata "The Ancient Mariner." Mr. J. N. Hardy conducted, and the principals were Miss de Bouffiers, Miss Marie Rhodes, Messrs. Tom Child and W. Thornton.

The Hull Philharmonic Society in its opening Concert of the season, which took place on the 6th ult., showed a noble ambition, including Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Wagner's "Rienzi" and Gade's "Ossian" Overtures in its programme. Among the lighter works a Suite by the Conductor, Mr. J. W. Hudson, must be mentioned as having given much pleasure to the audience. The vocalist was Mrs. Van der Veer-Green. The flourishing Choral Society at Batley, whose popularity is due in great measure to its cautious adherence to the most familiar choral works, gave, on the 11th ult., a Concert at which Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" were performed to the complete satisfaction of the audience. Messdames Annie Marriott and Robertshaw, Messrs. W. Green and W. Thornton were the vocalists, and Mr. John Bowling conducted very ably. The Morley Choral Society, on the 4th ult., gave the "Hymn of Praise" and "Acis and Galatea," under Mr. A. Benton's conductorship, the principals being Miss Ada Lee, Mrs. G. E. Baines, Messrs. W. Green and Ineson. Another Society showing a preference for the safe path of well-worn works is the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society, which chose for its Concert, on the 5th ult., the "Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Miss Fanny de Boufflers, Miss Alice Lamb, Messrs. Iver McKay and Billington were the soloists. Mr. W. H. Wright conducted. Bare mention must suffice, too, of the Pudsey Choral Union's "Elijah" performance, on November 24, under Mr. Robertshaw, and of the Brighouse Choral Society's Concert, on November 27, when Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" again formed the programme. Mr. J. H. Pearson was the Conductor. The constant repetition of hackneyed works has no more than a mere parochial interest. The Whitby Choral Society, of which Mr. Hallgate has for many years been the Conductor and prime mover gave, on the 4th ult., a Concert, the programme of which combined the first part of "Elijah" with a miscellaneous second half. The soloists were Miss Graves, Mrs. Wellburn Robinson, Messrs. H. Stansfield and Musgrove Tufnall, of whom the last-named seems to have scored the most popular success. The charming dances from Mr. German's "Henry VIII." Music, as a Quintet for strings and pianoforte, was, perhaps, the most enjoyable piece in the second part. At Dewsbury, on November 28, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé gave a very enjoyable Recital of music for pianoforte and violin; and on November 29 the Messrs. Haddock gave one of their Musical Evenings at Harrogate. Miss Pauline St. Angelo was the pianist, Mr. Edgar Haddock the violinist, and the vocalists were Madame Carl Styan and Mr. Lapiush.

In preparation for the next Leeds Festival the Committee have very wisely decided to continue the plan, adopted three years ago with such success, of obtaining choral contingents from all the chief West Riding towns. Arrangements have been made with the choral societies of Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, Dewsbury, and Batley for the supply of voices, and it is intended to increase the total strength of the chorus from 340 to 350.

MUSIC IN NEW ZEALAND.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

A FESTIVAL, on the scale of similar gatherings in England, has just been concluded (October 1, 2, 3, 4, 5) in Wellington, the capital of the colony. Its success has been very remarkable, both from a musical and a popular point of view. It was held on six consecutive nights, and the large and handsome Opera House (which holds 1,700 people) was crowded to the doors by an enthusiastic audience every night of the week. Indeed, on some evenings, many people were unable to secure even standing room. The scheme of the Festival included Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," Haydn's "Creation" (Parts 1 and 2), Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," Handel's "Israel in Egypt," and Sullivan's "Golden Legend." A miscellaneous programme, which included Schumann's Symphony (No. 1) and two scenes from the third act of "Tannhäuser" was also given; and a short choral and orchestral work by a young local composer, Mr. A. F. Hill, lately a student at Leipzig. The musical Director of the Festival was Mr. Robert Parker, Organist of the Anglican Cathedral and Conductor of the Harmonic Society; and associated with him on the committee of management were Mr. T. Tallis Trimmell, Mr. T. C. Webb (Organist of St. Mark's Church and formerly of Ilfracombe), and several gentlemen of business standing in the city. The committee was most fortunate in securing an able organiser and secretary in the person of Mr. Theo. H. Ritchey, who devoted months of arduous labour to the preliminary work of the Festival. The chorus, numbering nearly 250 voices, which had been very thoroughly drilled by Mr. Parker, proved to be the great feature of the performances; and in the difficult choral work of "The Spectre's Bride," no less than in the more familiar numbers of the "Lobgesang" and "Israel," its efforts excited the greatest enthusiasm. The orchestra numbered nearly sixty performers, ably led by Mr. Macduff Boyd, a local violinist of capacity and experience, and, making due allowance for the remoteness of the colony and the necessarily large proportion of amateurs in its ranks, it did very excellent work throughout a most exacting week. The soloists were Madame Fanny Bristowe (soprano), Mrs. H. Burfoot (contralto), Mr. Charles Saunders (tenor), Mr. A. H. Gee and Mr. John Prouse (baritone and bass). All were thoroughly capable, and the three latter quite exceptionally so. Mr. Gee has a superb baritone voice and great dramatic power, and his singing of the exacting music of "The Spectre's Bride" was quite worthy of an English Festival performance. Dvorák's picturesque work made quite an extraordinary impression, and had to be repeated on an extra night; it drew two audiences, numbering over 3,000 people, in a city of only 35,000 inhabitants. The Festival was opened by a brief address from His Excellency the Earl of Glasgow, who, with his family and suite, attended every performance but one throughout the week.

"THE MESSIAH" IN SOUTH AMERICA.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

BUENOS AYRES, November 15, 1894.

UNTIL within the last four years matters musical have been in a very undeveloped state here. Although we possess a German Sing-Akademie, which gives most excellent Concerts, having just passed its 120th performance, the efforts of the British community have been confined to an occasional miscellaneous Concert, never of a very high character, for charitable purposes. The establishment, some four years since, of the English Choral Union has, however, done much in educating the taste of the public, and the Society now always commands an audience. Hitherto the work of the Union has been principally confined to selections and cantatas, "The Ancient Mariner" being its last production. The decision of the committee to give "The Messiah" was welcomed and they at once received plenty of promise of support. The normal chorus of the Society is about 140 members, but, aided by contingents, chiefly from the choirs of outlying churches, it was able to command at once a fairly efficient body of voices of 300, under the baton of Mr. W. H. R. Nicholson. The interest in the production daily increased. Reproductions of huge photographs of the Crystal Palace Handel Orchestra caused great commotion among the natives; and on the night of the Oratorio, the 5th inst., the Teatro de l'Opera was crowded to its utmost capacity, the presence of the President of the Republic, his wife (Señora Saenz Pena), and family adding much to the interest.

The Opera House, though not the largest of the numerous theatres in the city, is the most central, fashionable, and modern, and is magnificently built and decorated, rivaling most European opera houses. It has a seating accommodation of 2,900, and, every seat being occupied, the house had the appearance of a Patti gala night.

The rendering of the choral and orchestral work was excellent. The committee were fortunate in being able to secure the services of the principal members of the Italian Opera orchestra, and the sixty instruments of which the band was composed were worthy to play in any festival performance, the strings being an unusually fine body of instrumentalists, who fairly well mastered the spirit of the music. The choir gave its share of the work creditably for a first performance, and though at times old music-lovers missed the fine finish and noted the absence of points to which we had been accustomed in English versions, the performance, as a whole, was of considerable merit, several of the choruses being given with vigour, precision, and breadth. Only in regard to the soloists was there any shortcoming, all being unequal to the task in a building of such dimensions.

The native papers commented freely on the work, and admitted that the "Hallelujah" chorus, with the 3,000 people upstanding, was the most remarkable musical demonstration ever seen or heard in this city of much music. La Nación, a leading paper, published a thoughtful account of the performance and an able criticism of the music, especially on the value and influence of the Handelian fugal writing.

The amount realised from the performance was 7,500 dollars. Two days later, at the request of the wife of the President of the Republic, a second performance was given for the benefit of the funds for the recent earthquakes in Rioja and San Juan, and the British Sailors' Home.

It is hoped that the next performance will be given in the new Prince George's Hall, now in course of erection specially for musical and dramatic performances by the English community.

It is always satisfactory to hear of the formation of new choral and orchestral societies, for they are the best practical proof of the increasing love and appreciation of the art, and each one may be regarded as a centre conducive to still further diffusion of musical knowledge. But it is no less satisfactory to receive assurance of the flourishing condition of old established Institutions. Such assurance is afforded by the performance, on the 5th ult., of "The Messiah" by the Gravesend and Milton Choral Association, which gave its first Concert in 1879, and has since that date continued uninterruptedly to give proof of its vitality. Great credit is due to the committee, not only for the perseverance and energy displayed during this period, but also for the excellent choice of works performed; the list including the most important compositions from those of the great masters from Handel to Dr. Mackenzie. No little of the success must be attributed to the almost unique fact that the Society has been faithfully served since its foundation by the same conductor, accompanist, and hon. secretary—Mr. Charles R. Green, Mr. Howard Moss, and Mr. R. Feaver Clarke—who may surely be styled three "good men and true."

A CONCERT was given in the Queen's (Small) Hall by Miss Gertrude Sichel and Miss E. Torrens-Johnson on November 28. The former exhibited much intelligence and dramatic feeling in Lully's "Bois épais," A. Scarlatti's "O cessate di piangermi," Handel's "Lusinghe più care," and songs by Grieg, Brahms, and Richard Strauss. Miss Torrens-Johnson was heard to great advantage in Mendelssohn's "Variations sérieuses," the Romance in F and the "Ballade" of Brahms, the G minor Ballade of Chopin, and (with Señor Arbos) in Schumann's Sonata in D minor. The violinist played a Romance of Svendsen and one of Brahms's Hungarian Dances. Mr. Bispham sang Schubert's tragic "Der Zwerg" and the delicious "Stelldichein" of Hans Sommer. Miss Sichel, Miss Florence Christie, Mr. Walter Ford, and Mr. Bispham gave a first performance of a charming set of vocal quartets, entitled "Ukrainische Liebeslieder," by Iwan Knorr, the pianoforte part of which was played by Miss Torrens-Johnson. They pleased greatly and should become popular.

THE excellent work being done in the East of London by Mr. C. H. Allen Gill was well attested on the 15th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was performed by the choral and orchestral societies under his command at the People's Palace. The executants were about 200 in number, and gave many proofs of their earnestness and of having received good training. Of the two bodies the choir is decidedly the best, the majority of the choruses being sung in a most praiseworthy manner, the pianissimo attained in such passages as "Upon your faces fall" being particularly noteworthy. Mr. Daniel Price was an able exponent of the part of the Prophet, Miss Alice Holman sang the soprano solos with intelligence and power, and Miss Hannah Jones and Mr. Iver McKay completed a very satisfactory quartet. Minor solo parts were rendered by Miss E. M. Johnstone, Miss L. Roberts, Mr. C. Carlyle, and Mr. Ben Grove; and Mr. B. Jackson gave skilful assistance at the fine organ. The performance was most attentively listened to by about 3,000 people.

MISS ANNIE C. MUIRHEAD began her series in the Hampstead district of Concerts for children, on the 1st ult., in the Vestry Hall. This lady holds that if more attention were paid to training listeners than is the case at present the standard of musical excellence and enjoyment in England would be considerably heightened. She contends, too, that owing to their school duties, children residing in the suburbs of the metropolis have not the advantages of those living in smaller towns as regards the hearing of good music. Her plan at the Concerts specially organised for children is to briefly explain the form and general idea of the piece about to be performed, and thus assist the juveniles to learn how to listen to what will be set before them. Handel, Bach, and other of the older composers were represented in her inaugural programme, which opened with Goss's quartet "There is beauty on the mountain," sung by Misses Lillie Mills and Minnie Pryce, Messrs. Frank Edwards and Murdo Munro.

A PERFORMANCE of Gluck's "Orpheus," as a Concert-room work, took place in the Camden Athenæum, on November 27. Miss Alice Long organised the Concert and sang the music of the title rôle, with Miss Beatrice Pratt as Eurydice and Miss Edythe Frances as Amor. Having an efficient orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. J. Earnshaw, Miss Long was able to give all the beautiful music, which is scarcely ever heard except when the opera is staged, and her chorus of fifty were all picked singers familiar with the work. The principals sang well, especially Miss Pratt and Miss Long, the latter receiving a hearty encore for her rendering of "Che farò." Mr. Cecil Sharp, of the Finsbury Choral Society, conducted, and obtained a first-rate ensemble throughout. Altogether the Concert was one of more than usual distinction, and the hall was well filled, more especially in the front seats.

On the 18th ult. the Catford Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Alfred Furse, gave a Concert at St. James's Hall, Forest Hill, when the programme included Schubert's "Song of Miriam" and Dr. Mackenzie's "The Bride." The melodious and fascinating little work was performed with great refinement and precision, the beautiful, impassioned and original Love Duet making a deep impression as sung by Miss Kate Chery and Mr. E. Branscombe. A number of part-songs, including Mr. Edward German's charming "O lovely May," were well sung. Miss Ethel M. Brissenden played a Rondo for the pianoforte by Hummel in excellent style, and besides the two vocalists named above, Mrs. Alfred Furse and Mr. W. H. Coltart were heard to great advantage; the lady choosing Schubert's "Death and the Maiden," and a new and expressive setting, by Mr. A. D. Arnott, of "O, wert thou in the cauld blast."

SPOHR's "Last Judgment" was sung at St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, on the evenings of the 7th and 14th ult.; the organ, as on previous occasions, supplying the place of an orchestra, and the skilful accompaniments rendering the services of a conductor unnecessary. The solo parts were allotted as follows: sopranos, Masters Wiltshire and Simpson; alto, Mr. Pearce; tenor, Mr. Leyland; and basses, Messrs. Courtney and Lake. The interpretation of the not too easy music was quite up to the level of preceding performances, and needs no higher praise. The effect of the beautiful duet "Forsake me not" was, in particular, most striking. Mr. Sergison's playing was, as always, brilliant and masterly, and well brought out the exceptional orchestral capabilities of his instrument.

THE Queen's Hall Choral Society, presided over by Mr. William Carter, gave a second performance this season of the "Creation," on the 11th ult. The choir again sang with sufficient energy "Awake the harp," "The Heavens are telling," and other important numbers falling to their share, and at the same time were not neglectful of expression. In the soprano solos Miss Anna Williams once more distinguished herself. Mr. Iver McKay did justice to the tenor airs, and Mr. Norman Salmond was quite equal to the opportunities afforded in the music of Raphael. A capable band was led by Mr. J. T. Carrodus, and Mr. Arthur Fagge was at the organ. "The Messiah" was performed by the Society on Christmas Day.

THE first Concert of the recently established "Society for the Cultivation of Modern Chamber Music" was given at Messrs. Brinsmead's Rooms, on November 28. It opened with an interesting, but rather eccentric, and not at all inspired Trio for clarinet, pianoforte, and violoncello, by the French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy. A String Quintet by Haydn, thoroughly characteristic of the master, and said to have been hitherto unheard in London, and Parry's fine Partita in D minor, for violin and pianoforte, were the remaining instrumental works. Mr. Charles Draper played the clarinet, Mr. Gustave Ernest the pianoforte, and Mr. E. van der Straeten (Director of the Society) the violoncello. The violins and violas were in the hands of Messrs. R. Ortmans, A. Mistowski, L. Szczepanowski, and J. Brown. Songs were contributed by Mr. Whitney Mockridge, and Mr. O. Meyer accompanied.

MADAME FANNY MOODY and Mr. Charles Manners have issued the conditions of the operatic competition for their prize of £100 together with five per cent. on the net receipts. The opera is to play about an hour and a half, and there must be four characters (for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass respectively), or not more than five. No chorus is to be required, and the action is to be laid in a room or garden. Composers are to send in their works under a nom de plume, and that of the successful competitor will be advertised on May 15 next, when the winner is expected to communicate his real name and address. Messrs. Joseph Bennett, Frederick Corder, and F. H. Cowen have consented to act as judges, and the opera they select will be first performed in a London theatre towards the end of May. On being applied to at 15, King Street, Portman Square, Mr. Charles Manners will furnish further particulars.

MR. JOHN THOMAS, at the Salle Erard, on the 12th ult., gave a Harp Recital, interspersed with songs to accompaniment on the same instrument. His exceptional ability as an executant was advantageously displayed in Parish Alvar's "La Danse des Fées" and "The Mandoline," as well as in several compositions from his own pen. The latter included "Autumn" and "Winter" (portions of a Suite called "The Seasons"), the Study in F (No. 11), and arrangements of three Welsh melodies. Upon his performance of each of these Mr. Thomas was heartily complimented. Mrs. Mary Davies sang with her usual success Mendelssohn's "On wings of music," Goring Thomas's "Winds in the trees," John Thomas's "The memory of love" and "The Ash-Grove."

Mlle. DOUSTE DE FORTIS headed her programme at Steinway Hall, on the 11th ult., with a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, Op. 24, in E minor, by E. Sjögren, a Northern composer as yet but little known in this country. The work evoked much interest, and, although unduly long, was favourably received. The Andante sostenuto movement is the most agreeable of the four, a distinctive melody here obtaining clever treatment. The Sonata was admirably interpreted by Mlle. Douste de Fortis and M. René Ortmans. Morceaux by Schumann, Chopin, and Scarlatti were, at a later period, expressively rendered by the pianist. Mlle. Jeanne Douste sang, with much taste, airs by Mlle. Chaminade and M. Bemberg, and joined Mr. Josef Claus in a duet from "Le Nozze di Figaro."

THE Kyrie Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "Samson," on November 28, at Christ Church, Endell Street. On the 5th ult. "St. Paul" was given at the Wesleyan Church, New North Road. The soloists were Miss Ada Loaring, Miss Beresford Joy, Mr. Willie Hart, and Mr. Arthur Appleby. On both occasions Dr. Turpin presided at the organ. On the 13th ult. "Elijah" was given in the Bedford Congregational Church, Somers Town, to an audience of blind people, by request of the Blind Aid Society. The soloists were Miss Florence Spurgeon, Miss Alice McFarlane, Mr. David Watkins, and Mr. Arthur Appleby. Mr. Herbert Cooke accompanied on the organ.

THE London Choral Union naturally took advantage of the season by giving "The Messiah" at Queen's Hall, on the 18th ult. The choir boldly attacked the more difficult choruses, such as "And He shall purify," whilst their rendering of "For unto us" and similar massive numbers did not lack breadth of effect. Miss Emily Davies delivered the soprano airs with devotional feeling, but was better suited in the level passages of "Come unto Him" than in the florid "Rejoice greatly"; Madame Marian McKenzie and Mr. Norman Salmond gave effective readings of the contralto and bass solos respectively, and Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys sang the tenor airs with adequate expression. The instrumental portions were well played, and Mr. James W. Lewis again proved himself an able Conductor.

An interesting Song and Pianoforte Recital was given by Miss Wakefield, Mr. Walter Ford, and Mr. Isidor Cohn, at the Princes' Hall, on Thursday afternoon, the 13th ult., the object being to illustrate cycles of songs by Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms. The Bonn master was represented by the beautiful Liederkreis "An die ferne Geliebte," Schubert by some of "Die Schöne Müllerin," Schumann by the "Frauenliebe und Leben" (Op. 42), and Brahms by selections from the "Magelone Lieder," very charming songs. They were all carefully rendered by Miss Wakefield and Mr. Ford, and Mr. Cohn played Chopin's Préludes, which are scarcely suitable for performance at one Concert, as many of them are too fragmentary.

MISS GRACE HENSHAW and Mr. Frederik Frederiksen, two clever young instrumentalists, imparted much interest to their Concert, on the 3rd ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, by including in their programme Emil Sjögren's attractive second Sonata in E minor (Op. 24) for pianoforte and violin—a work which, by the freshness of its themes and their rational and consequently effective development, should acquire a permanent place at our Chamber Concerts. Miss Henshaw was also heard in pianoforte pieces by Chopin, Schumann, Liszt, and Rachmaninoff, and Mr. Frederiksen contributed some violin solos with much acceptance. The vocalists were Madame Isabel George and Mr. Bertram Wallis.

IN St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 4th ult., "The Last Judgment" was given, according to custom, on the first Tuesday in Advent as the anthem in the evening service. Spohr's devotional strains were rendered with the fullest effect by the choir belonging to the Cathedral, and instrumental support was derived from a small professional orchestra. Heard amid such surroundings, "Praise His awful Name," "Lord God of heaven and earth," and "Destroyed is Babylon, the Mighty," proved more than ordinarily impressive. Dr. Martin conducted and Mr. Hodge was at the organ. The service included the Psalms "Deus Deorum" and "De Profundis," sung to chants by Purcell and Felton respectively.

MR. GEORGE F. GEAUSSENT and M. L. Duloup were associated in a Pianoforte and Violin Recital at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on November 24. They were heard together in Grieg's Sonata in F (Op. 8), and in the "Kreutzer" Sonata of Beethoven, the performance in each instance being highly praiseworthy. For solos, Mr. Geaussent selected Chopin's "Andante Spianato" and Grand Polonaise in E flat (Op. 22); and M. Duloup played the Andante from Max Bruch's second Violin Concerto, Tchaikowsky's "Serenade Mélancolique," and Wieniawski's Polonaise in D major. Vocal pieces by Sullivan and Clay were pleasingly contributed by Mr. W. F. Packer.

MISS MARIE BUSCH and Miss Ellen Schliepper made a favourable impression on November 30, at the Queen's (Small) Hall. The former is a soprano vocalist gifted with musical perceptions, as attested by her renderings of songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms; the latter, a pupil of Leschetizky, is a young pianist of exceptional abilities. Assisted by Mr. J. Ludwig she played with marked intelligence Brahms's Sonata in G (Op. 78) for pianoforte and violin, and in Schubert's Impromptu in G (Op. 90), Chopin's Nocturne in C minor (Op. 48, No. 1), Liszt's second "Etude de Concert," and other pieces exhibited remarkable power of expression and executive command.

ON the 5th ult. an exceedingly creditable performance of Berlioz's "Faust" was given in the Queen's Hall, by students of the Guildhall School of Music. The work is not one to be lightly undertaken, but it went, on the whole, extremely well, under the direction of Sir Joseph Barnby, though the esteemed Conductor was already beginning to suffer from the severe illness from which he is now happily recovering. Miss Jessie Hudlestone was charmingly sympathetic as Marguerite, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos as Faust and Mr. Charles Phillips as Mephistopheles did fairly well. The orchestra was praiseworthy, and the same may be said of the chorus, notwithstanding the inequality of the sections, the female contingent being in a large majority.

THE Colet Orchestral Society gave a Concert on the 5th ult., at Colet Court, St. Paul's Schools, Hammersmith. Besides the usual complement of "wind," partly professional, the orchestra numbers thirty strings, of which the first violins contain some good material; the other divisions are, however, as liberally supplied with "passengers" as the majority of amateur orchestral societies in the second year of their existence. The Society deserves credit for artistic aims, for the programme did not pander to frivolous tastes, and the playing, if not quite worthy of the music, showed signs of careful rehearsals and promised improvement. The Conductor was Mr. Arundel Orchard.

MR. THEODOR PLOWITZ, at his Concert at Steinway Hall, on the 4th ult., obtained valuable assistance from Mr. Tivadar Nachéz, Mr. Ben Davies, and others. With the violinist he played Grieg's Sonata in C minor (Op. 45), in spirited style, and afterwards gave with requisite impulse Liszt's Twelfth Rhapsodie. Mr. Nachéz also contributed some solos; Mr. Davies ably sang Schumann's "Mondnacht" and "Widmung" and other airs; Miss Agnes Janson did her best for a song by Grieg, "A Norway Champion," announced as "first performance"; and an encouraging début was made by Mdle. Paula Edenfeld, a young soprano.

AN International Music Trades' Exhibition will be held at the Agricultural Hall in June next. The exhibition will be the first of its kind held in connection with the music trade, and will be in every way representative, including only such exhibitors as may be connected with the trade. These will be limited to manufacturers, importers, publishers, and such houses as may supply raw materials or component parts for the manufacture of musical instruments. An orchestra will be provided, and it is proposed in the afternoons and evenings to arrange high-class Concerts, both vocal and instrumental, under the direction of eminent Conductors.

AN exceptionally agreeable Vocal Recital was given by the Misses Florence and Bertha Salter (soprano and contralto) at the Princes' Hall, on the afternoon of the 6th ult. Both the young ladies, who are natives of Devonshire, are well trained singers, and have the charm of manner and artistic temperament that usually make for popular success, and their programme was interesting because most of the pieces were unhackneyed. It included songs and duets by Martin, Caldara, Saint-Saëns, Hahn, Mozart, Vaccaj, Chabrier, Nicolò, Tiersot, and Chaminade, and these were pleasantly varied by violin solos played with refinement by Miss Christina Brumleu.

—YET another series of Chamber Concerts was commenced by Mrs. Roskell in the Queen's (Small) Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 12th ult. The leading concerted features in the scheme were Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) and Dvorák's splendid Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81). Mrs. Roskell, who is an able pianist, played a Scherzo of Chopin's, and the leading violinist, Herr Elderhorst, proved himself an admirable executant alike in the concerted works and in Handel's familiar Sonata in A. The other instrumental executants were Mr. W. H. Eayres, Mr. A. Hobday, and Mr. Adolf Schmidt; and Miss Marie Brema contributed several songs with fine effect.

THE St. Mary's Choral Society gave a Concert at the Bishop Wilson Memorial Hall, Islington, on the 14th ult., when a new cantata, "The Maid of Colonsay," by Erskine Allon, was performed. The performance was, on the whole, excellent, the solos being well sung by Miss Gertrude Izard, Miss Rose Daiforne, Mr. Gilbert Denis, and Mr. J. H. Macfarlane; the choruses, in which the chief interest of the work lies, being given with spirit by the choir, under the direction of Mr. Sidney Hann. In the miscellaneous second part Mr. Hann appeared as solo pianist and composer, being recalled after playing his own new "Valse gracieuse."

An admirable Orchestral Concert was given, on the 11th ult., at Princes' Hall, by the pupils of the London Organ School, under the direction of Dr. G. J. Bennett. It was interesting not only on account of the merit shown by the performances generally, but also by reason of an unhackneyed programme. Tchaikowsky's "Fest-Marsch," a fine work composed for the Coronation of the late Czar, was given for the first time in England, and Taubert's comparatively unknown "Tempest" Overture was also included. Works by Beethoven, Bizet, Rubinstein, Weber, and Glinka were played in excellent style, and altogether the Concert gave ample evidence of the excellent training available at the Institution responsible for the Concert.

MR. RICHARD GOMPERTZ and his string quartet party gave their second Concert at the Salle Erard, on Wednesday evening, the 12th ult., the programme commencing with Smetana's Quartet in E minor, "Aus meinem Leben," which had been heard twice recently at the Popular Concerts. The other work of the same order was Beethoven's extraordinary Quartet in A minor (Op. 132), one of the master's latest creations. Mr. Gompertz played a new and very charming Barcarolle for violin, in D minor, by Mr. Emanuel Moor, and songs by Schubert and Schumann were delightfully rendered by Miss Fillinger.

THE Stock Exchange Orchestral Society started its operations for the season at the Queen's Hall, on the 19th ult. A performance of rare excellence included Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 2 of the Salomon set), the Overture to "Die Meistersinger"—no easy task for amateurs—Dr. Mackenzie's clever Overture "Britannia," Mr. C. H. Coudery's pretty "Cradle Song" in D flat, and a sparkling "Elfentanz" by Miss Clarisse Mallard. The male-voice choir was very praiseworthy in its rendering of glees and part-songs, and Mr. Santley was the vocalist. Mr. George Kitchen conducted with admirable tact and judgment.

MRS. HENSCHEL gave three delightful Vocal Recitals at the Salle Erard, on the afternoons of November 30 and the 7th and 14th ult. As usual with this refined and conscientious artist, the songs on each occasion were all of the highest class, and were rendered to perfection. At the first and second Recitals, Madame Augarde gave needful variety to the entertainment by her agreeable pianoforte solos; but at the third she was unable to appear, and Mr. Sons, the leader of the Scottish Orchestra, proved himself an admirable solo violinist in two movements from Mendelssohn's Concerto.

THE Post Office Musical Society is making satisfactory progress. It began its fifth season in St. James's Hall, on the 6th ult., with an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," under the able direction of Mr. Sydney Beckley. The choruses were sung with spirit and precision, but a tendency to hurry the tempo should be repressed. Mrs. Mary Davies, Mrs. Henry R. Clayton, and Mr. Bernard Lane did justice to the solos; and the miscellaneous second part of the programme included pieces by Weber, Gounod, Brahms, and Professor Bridge.

MISS EMMA BARNETT's skill as a pianist gave enjoyment to a numerous audience, on the 11th ult., in Queen's (Small) Hall. The most noteworthy works played were Schubert's expressive Sonata in B flat (written during the last year of the composer's life), Chopin's Berceuse and Ballade in G minor, J. F. Barnett's pleasing "Home Scenes," and the first performance of a graceful "Liebeslied" from the same pen. Madame Fonblanque sang with great charm an excellent selection of songs by Handel, Godard, Stanger, and Lehmann.

THE third of Mr. Joseph Ivimey's popular Chamber Concerts was given on Saturday afternoon, the 1st ult., at the Assembly Rooms, Surbiton. The programme included Schubert's Trio in E flat, Op. 100, and Beethoven's Trio in B flat, No. 4, Op. 11. The performers were Mr. John W. Ivimey (pianoforte), Mr. Joseph Ivimey (violin), and Mr. Arthur Blagrove (violinocello); vocalist, Miss Helen Pettican.

THE second Concert this season of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society took place in the Queen's Hall, on the 21st ult., under the direction of Mr. George Mount. The novelty of the Concert was an intermezzo, "Eros and Psyche," by J. F. H. Read. Other orchestral works were Mackenzie's overture "Britannia" and Bizet's suite "L'Arlésienne." Miss Mabel Chaplin and Miss Katie Leonard appeared as instrumentalists, and Madame Amy Sherwin and Miss Katherine Fisk as vocalists.

On the 4th ult. the employés of the Army and Navy Auxiliary Stores gave a highly creditable performance of "The Jackdaw of Rheims," with Miss Kate Cherry, Mrs. Woodhouse, Mr. Stirling Wells, and Mr. Robert Grice as soloists. The choruses and orchestral accompaniments were well rendered, and it was evident that considerable care had been given to their preparation, under Mr. J. Darch and Mr. C. E. Weekes. The accompanists were Miss Ada Lee and Mr. E. W. Sturt.

On the 18th ult. the violin class Concert of the students at the South London Institute of Music took place. One hundred violinists of both sexes occupied the orchestra, and, with the addition of violas, violoncellos, and basses, capital performances were given, under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. Miss Bonnett and the London Glee Singers were the vocalists. Mr. Gatehouse played a number of violin solos, and Mr. Sidney Venables accompanied throughout in a very able manner.

MR. F. G. EDWARDS gave his Lecture on "Mendelssohn" at Richmond, on the 13th ult., and at New Barnet, on the following evening, to crowded audiences. Amongst the autographs exhibited was a letter from Mendelssohn to William Bartholomew (the English translator of "Elijah"), in which the composer says, "The song 'Sei stille dem Herrn' ('O rest in the Lord') must be left out." The musical illustrations were given by local performers.

THE annual Concert of the violin classes of the Birkbeck Institution, on the 19th ult., under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse, assisted by Mr. W. Thornton, was an unqualified success. The programme, mainly instrumental, was agreeably varied by the vocal selections of Miss Mary Hay and Mr. George Wood; and the solos of Messrs. Gatehouse (violin), C. H. Allen Gill (violoncello), and Mr. Izard (pianoforte) were each encored.

A LARGE size reproduction of the portrait of Beethoven, now in the possession of the Brunswick family, will be presented with the New Year's number of the Musical Standard, issued on the 5th inst. This portrait, which represents the composer at about the age of thirty-four, comparatively speaking the happiest period of his life, has never been published here, and will be, we believe, entirely new to British admirers of the great tone-poet.

MENDELSSOHN'S "Elijah" was given in Mount View Church, Stroud Green, on the 14th ult. The chorus, consisting of the Harecourt Choral Association, numbered nearly 200, and the principal parts were ably sustained by Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Amy Wood, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Robert Grice. The pianist was Miss Wildman and the organist Mr. E. Drewett. Mr. John E. Borland conducted.

A Concert was given on November 28 by Miss Lillie Hiron, at the Central Hall, Acton. The vocalists were Miss Lillie Hiron, Madame Eliza Thomas, Messrs. S. Masters and Ben Griffiths. Musical sketches were given by Mr. Quentin Ashlyn and solos by Miss Lizzie Pope (harp) and Mr. Edwin Hall (bassoon). Mr. Alfred Avery acted as accompanist.

A SUCCESSFUL Concert was given at the School for the Indigent Blind, St. George's Road, Southwark, on the 12th ult., when an interesting selection of music—Part 1, Sacred, and Part 2, Secular—was given by the students, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Hodge. In addition, there was a short Part 3, consisting of orchestral selections by the band, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Hall.

THE second Sunday evening Concert at the Crichton Club took place on the 16th ult., under the direction of Hans Brouil. The programme included Schubert's String Quartet in A minor, Beethoven's "Adelaide," and Mozart's String Quartet in D major (No. 7). The instrumentalists were Messrs. A. Kummer, F. Louis Schneider, W. H. Hill, Hans A. Brouil, and the vocalist, Mr. William Nicholl.

THE terminal examinations at the Royal College of Music were concluded on the 20th ult., when the Council exhibitions were adjudged by the examiners as follows:—Francis Harford (singing), £10; Gustavus T. von Holst (composition), £5; Katherine Sims (pianoforte), £15; Harold C. Lock (violin), £15; Ernest V. G. Williams (organ), £10.

MR. J. T. CARRODUS will be presented this month with the freedom of the borough of Keighley, in commemoration of his jubilee as a public performer. Mr. Carrodus was born at Braithwaite, near Keighley, and made his first appearance, at the age of nine years, in January, 1845, at what was then the Keighley Mechanics' Institute.

A VOCAL and Instrumental Concert was given at St. Mary's Hall, Kilburn, on the 11th ult., by Mr. James W. Wallis and the Misses Edith and Florence Wallis, assisted by their pupils. The Orchestral Class played the Andante from Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony and a Gavotte and Trio for strings and pianoforte by the Concert-giver.

SIGNORINA PAOLA TEODORAS, assisted by Mdle. Cécile Elieson, Signor Dabiero, and Mr. Barrington Foote, gave a Concert, on the 4th ult., in the Salle Erard. The ladies respectively played pianoforte and violin solos with brilliancy and intelligence.

THE Putney School of Music Orchestral and Choral Society commenced its eighth season by a successful performance of Dr. J. F. Bridge's work "The Cradle of Christ" and Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants," under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Barnard.

MISS ANNIE E. HOLDOM gave a Concert, on the 5th ult., at Morley Hall, Hackney, in aid of the Tottenham Church Restoration Fund. Among other pieces Miss Holdom played Weber's Concertstück, for which she was encored. A number of vocalists and other artists assisted.

AN Organ Recital was given on the 8th ult., at St. Barnabas, Kentish Town, by Miss Frances Shortis, assisted by Miss A. McNicol as vocalist and Miss Daisy Frost as violinist.

SEÑOR SARASATE has been on tour in France and Germany during the past month, and among other pieces has frequently played Dr. Mackenzie's "Pibroch," which, he says, has been everywhere "enthusiastically received."

HANDEL'S "Messiah," with orchestra, was performed in All Saints', South Lambeth, on the 19th ult. Mr. Henry Dart presided at the organ and Mr. Walter Attersoll (Organist of the Church) conducted.

SPOHR'S "Last Judgment" has been sung at St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, on the Wednesdays during Advent, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Hodge.

OBITUARY.

THEODOR BÖTTJER, an excellent violinist, who was in former years for a long period Concertmeister (leader) of the orchestra of the Bremen Subscription Concerts, and also first violin in a string quartet party. He died at Bremen on November 23, aged seventy-two.

CARL HEERMANN, Kammervirtuoso, and for forty-one years first fagotto player in the Court Orchestra, Stuttgart, in which town he died on November 12, aged sixty-four.

EDMUND KREIBIG, Oberregisseur at the Opera House, Frankfurt-on-Main, where he died on November 13, aged forty-three.

PROFESSOR DR. JULIUS ALSLEBEN, an excellent pianoforte teacher, organist, and musical littérateur, at Berlin, on the 9th ult., aged sixty-two. Born in Berlin on March 24, 1832, he studied music under Leuchtenberg, Zech, and Dehn. For many years he was President of the Berlin Tonkünstlerverein, and was also one of the founders of the Berlin Music Teachers' Society.

REGIERUNGSRATH LEOPOLD ALEXANDER ZELLNER, at Vienna, on November 24, aged seventy-one. Besides being the composer of numerous choral works, such as oratorios, masses, &c., he was Professor of Harmony at the Vienna Conservatoire of Music from 1868, when he took the place of Sechter, who had just died. In former years he edited the Blätter für Musik, and he also occupied the post of Chief Secretary to the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde until 1892, when he retired on a pension.

GEORG MERTEL, Royal Musikdirektor, and for many years conductor of several musical societies in Erfurt, where he died, on November 16, aged sixty-four.

CANON WILLIAM COOKE, M.A., F.S.A., one of the editors of the "Hymnary," on November 23, at 6, Clifton Place, Sussex Square, aged seventy-three.

CHARLES SIEBERT, a bass singer of promise, and the Hon. Secretary of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, on November 23.

GEORGES BACHMANN, composer of a great many piano-forte pieces. He died, after a long illness, in the Reajou Hospital, aged forty-six.

IPPOLITO RAGGHianti, a violinist of great talent, a pupil of M. César Thomson at the Liège Conservatoire, and a composer of more than average promise. Amongst his works are a Symphonie Thématique, a Violin Concerto, Nine Morceaux de Salon (published as No. 7 of Novello's Albums for violin and piano-forte), and a short opera, which has been accepted for performance at Nice, but of which the poor composer was unable to finish the orchestration. He died in his native place, Viareggio, near Pisa, after a long and painful illness, aged twenty-seven.

JAMES AITKEN, who was for many years on the staff of the North British Daily Mail, Glasgow News, and the Glasgow Evening Citizen, in the capacity of musical critic. Mr. Aitken, who died at Glasgow, on the 3rd ult., was a well-informed musician and wielded the pen of a graceful and ready writer.

FREDERICA HANKINSON, a lady who was universally esteemed in the profession of her adoption, met with an awfully sudden death on the 19th ult. She had previously been suffering from heart trouble, and a sudden attack ended a useful career while she was in the act of conducting some concerted music at a school Concert near her residence in Rock Ferry.

WILLIAM HENRY HUNT, the first Doctor of Music created by the London University, died, on the 6th ult., at Birkenhead, where he had resided for nearly twenty years. Although hardly at any time to be reckoned as of robust constitution, his work had pursued a regular course until the spring of 1894, when, while giving one of the lectures commissioned by the City Corporation at the Liverpool Music School, he was smitten with paralysis. As a composer, Dr. Hunt was best known by his "Stabat Mater"—a fine work, composed as the exercise for his Doctor's degree, and published by Novello and Co. He had also written a number of vocal solos and part-songs, as well as two comic operas, one of which was styled "Utopia," three years or so before the title was adopted by the Savoy organisation. Dr. Hunt, whose age was only forty-three, leaves a widow and family of five children.

PROFESSOR PAUL WIEPRECHT, Royal Kammervirtuoso, oboe player of great excellence, and teacher of his instrument at the Königliche Hochschule für Musik, Berlin. He died on the 7th ult., at Schöneberg, near Berlin, aged fifty-five.

PROFESSOR DR. GUSTAV GUNZ, a tenor vocalist, for twenty-seven years one of the most prominent artists of the Court Opera, Hanover, and also well known in Germany as a concert singer. From 1888 he was Professor of singing in Frankfurt-on-Main, in which town he died on the 11th ult., aged sixty-two.

MR. BASIL TREE has opened a branch office for the sale of Concert tickets at 304, Regent Street, in proximity to Queen's Hall.

HUMPERDINCK's opera "Hänsel und Gretel," which has created so great an impression on the Continent, was produced at Daly's Theatre on Boxing Night, for the first time in England, too late for notice in our present issue.

CORRESPONDENCE.

YORKSHIRE CAROLS:

"GEORGE RIDLER'S OVEN."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—At this present time of the year I venture to send you the air of a traditional Yorkshire Christmas Carol, which, so far as my own library of carol books extends, does not appear to have yet been printed. Possibly a more far-reaching search might reveal it.

The tune is certainly old, and has been popular with generation after generation of children carol singers in Leeds and district. It is sung to the ever-favourite wassailing song, "Here we come a-wassailing among the leaves so green."

"HERE WE COME A-WASSAILING."

Sir John Stainer, in his "Christmas Carols," gives a traditional tune to the same words, and one appears in Miss Broadwood and Mr. Fuller Maitland's "English County Songs." Versions varying more or less from these are also, along with the one I send, sung in Leeds.

Another carol which was formerly sung in Yorkshire country places to the words "A virgin unspotted" varies from the air given by Sandy, Husk, and Stainer, but I believe it is equally old with theirs.

"A VIRGIN UNSPOTTED."

In last month's "From my Study," in THE MUSICAL TIMES, mention was made of the quaint song "George Ridler's Oven," and a regret was expressed that the song and air were not included in "English County Songs" (mentioned above).

The aim of that work appears to have been, in general, merely to give traditional airs hitherto unpublished; and possibly the editors omitted the song from the fact that the tune for it is already printed in the first edition of Wm. Chappell's work—viz., "National English Airs," 1838, p. 102. It is the same air as the Gloucestershire Wassail Song, the words of which have been so frequently reprinted; Husk also gives the air. Before I became acquainted with these printed copies I myself noted it down from a Gloucestershire singer to the Wassail Song.

"George Ridler's Oven" is a remarkable production, containing much homely truth and humour. One cannot but admire the delicate way in which George's bald head is hinted at:

And George he was a jolly old man,

A characteristic touch shows the prerogative of the eldest son, for while Dick will sing treble and John the "mean," or second, voice—

George he wor the eldest brother,
And therefore he would sing the bass.

Dixon, in his "Songs of the Peasantry," gives the words, accompanied by a political "key," reprinted from a report of the Gloucestershire Society, 1835. Whatever political meaning the song may have had afterwards applied to it, I feel sure that none was intended by the simple-minded bard who produced the lyric; and though the ditty is old, I rather question whether it is quite so early as Charles the Second's time. The whole song, starting with cursory mention of George Ridler's oven and of George himself, tells us how George "made his brag before he died, with any three brothers his sons should sing." After the verse descriptive of the pitch of the sons' voices, it bursts out into a verse of the old song (see the "Roxburgh Ballads"), "My dog and I," and a fragment of "Todden Hame"—evidently the two ditties intended to silence all-comers. I have met people in Berkshire, North of the district where Thomas Hughes places the song, who could sing "George Ridler's Oven," but, owing to their shyness, I could never get them started. Perhaps some more fortunate reader could tell us if the air is still sung as Chappell and Husk give it, as under:—

"GLOUCESTERSHIRE WASSAIL SONG."

FRANK KIDSON.

REFORM ON THE ORCHESTRA.

"TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'"

SIR,—(a.) In your December issue appears a criticism of an important Orchestral Concert (given in London) wherein the playing of the trombones is severely commented upon—indeed, the "amusing" and "irritating" loudness of these instruments seems to have spoilt what would otherwise have been an excellent performance. Now, this over-loudness of the trombones—and their near relatives, the trumpets—is an infliction of which lovers of good orchestral music are constantly complaining. Yet why is a remedy never thought of? It is often said that the fault is the conductor's—that he ought to "keep the trombones down." And this is true to a certain extent. But is there no other way of subduing the trumpet's and trombone's naturally large volume of tone than to say, "please play more softly"? How would the "strings" like to have to play through a whole programme mezza voce, with the mute on? This is virtually what the offending instrumentalists in question have to do, in order to be in balance with the rest of the band—and have to do it, too, at the expense of considerable physical pain and fatigue. The fact is that neither conductors nor players are really blameable in the matter: the grievance arises from the silly custom of placing the trumpets and trombones in lofty positions on the orchestra, whence they have to blast and blare carrière into the very faces of the audience. The bassoon has to breathe his dulcet aspirations heavenward; the oboe and clarinet—well, dans un tout autre sens; even the performer on the soft-toned waldhorn "lifts not his horn on high." No; to the trumpet and trombone solely (of all instruments!) is accorded the privilege of (metaphorically) hitting straight from the shoulder. This seems to me foolish.

One way of mending matters would be to make the players stand with their backs to the audience; but this would be found inconvenient, even if mirrors were employed. I would suggest that they stand on the floor of the platform, and play behind a screen of thick cloth, which should be just low enough to allow of the conductor being visible to the players, and which ought to be inclined slightly inwards at the ends, for the benefit of the occupants of the side seats. I think it would be found, if this simple little arrangement was properly carried out, that the players in question would be able to play mf, p, and even pp, in a natural manner, and with comfort to themselves and the audience.

(b.) I should like to take this opportunity of asking why, in the name of all that is artistic, the kettledrums and other instruments of percussion are perched in conspicuous places on the orchestra, where everyone can see them? No doubt the athletic display involved in an attempt to tune three drums at the same time, with only six bars' rest to do it in, may serve to while away the time for the programme boys; but it is terribly distracting to those who attend a concert for musical enjoyment. So are the more or less classic postures and gestures of the gentlemen in charge of the tambourine and cymbals. I do not see why the drums and the entire batterie de cuisine of the modern orchestra should not be brought down to the floor with the trombones, and hidden as much as possible. My screen of cloth would be a help to this end.

(c.) Just one word more. These two little reforms would be steps in the right direction—that is to say, in the direction of the hidden orchestra, a hint or two concerning which may interest some of your readers. The concert orchestra of the twentieth century will be completely hidden from the view of the audience; the chorus also, when there is one. The conductor shall not be seen, neither shall the tenor and bass soloists. Yea, even the soprano and contralto ditto shall be invisible to mortal eye! All will be hidden by a large curtain, which will reach from ceiling to floor and from wall to wall. And, lo! the musician will no longer be distracted by the spectacle of scraping fiddlers and thumping drummers; and in time the people will learn how to listen to music; some will have revealed to them something of the magic which Bayreuth pilgrims tell of—a strange spell which seizes them when the lights go quietly low, and beautiful sounds creep into life out of space.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully.

ARTHUR E. GRIMSHAW.

A CORRESPONDENT asks:—"Can any old student of the Guildhall School of Music give me information of a glee which was sung there in either 1881 or 1882, called 'Evening,' and beginning—

The Sun descending in the West,
The Evening Star doth shine,
The birds are silent in their nests,
And I must seek for mine.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

. Notices of concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur. Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

MONTROSE.—Almost any good book on Harmony will give you this information. Stainer's "Harmony Primer" (Novello and Co.) will probably suit your purpose. You may also consult the Harmony books of Macfarren, Proul, or Richter, which any music-seller will supply.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABERGAVERN.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert on the 10th ult., in the Town Hall. The programme consisted of Cowen's cantata "St. John's Eve" and a miscellaneous selection, the solos being sung by Miss Maggie Purvis, Miss Kate James, Mr. G. Banks, and Mr. D. Barri. The chorus and orchestra numbered 130 performers. Mr. Arthur Angle was leader, Mr. F. Bamford the pianist, Mr. T. Jenkins presided at the harmonium, and Mr. W. R. Carr conducted.

BARNSELY.—The St. Cecilia Choral Society began its present season on November 29, in a most successful manner, by an excellent performance, at the Harvey Institute, of Handel's "Samson." A capable vocal quartet was provided in Miss F. de Boufflers, Miss M. L. Watson, Mr. W. Green, and Mr. W. Thornton; Mr. Tomlinson played the trumpet obbligato in "Let the bright Seraphim," and an efficient orchestra was ably led by Mr. Buckley. Mr. A. Benton conducted with customary skill.

BEDFORD.—The Musical Society concluded its twenty-eighth season, under the leadership of Mr. Diemer, in a most successful manner, on the 4th ult., by an excellent performance of Costa's "Eli." The soloists were Miss Florence Monk, Master Leonard Griffiths, Mr. Gawthrop, Mr. S. Heath, Mr. A. Beagle, and Mr. Ralph Pearce. The choruses were most effectively sung, and an efficient orchestra, led by Mr. Halfpenny and assisted by Mr. Ford and Mr. Bandey at harmoniums, played the instrumental portions.—Dr. E. H. Turpin gave an excellent Organ Recital, on the 13th ult., in St. Martin's Church, his programme including E. d'Evry's effective Overture for organ in C and Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor.—On the 14th ult., in the Large Hall of the Bedford Kindergarten, a performance took place of Barnett's cantata "The Wishing Bell." The soloists were Miss Anderson, Miss Mackay, and Miss Gough; the pianist was Miss Swire, and the Conductor, Mr. Oliver O. Brooksbank.

BERKHAMSTED.—The Church Choral Society gave a Concert on November 28, when Bennett's "May Queen" was well sung, with Miss A. Whitfield, Miss F. Oliver, Mr. Herbert Loxley, and the Rev. H. D. Macnamara as soloists. Mr. J. T. Bavin officiated as accompanist at the pianoforte, Mr. W. H. London presided at the harmonium, and the Rev. C. J. Langley conducted.

BODMIN.—Mr. H. M. Lamerton gave his fourth annual Concert on the 6th ult., in the Wesleyan Assembly Room. The solos in a miscellaneous programme were interpreted by Miss Haswell, Miss A. May, Miss N. Stephens, Mr. W. J. Hilcox, and Mr. W. H. Jago. Instrumental selections were given by the Orchestral Society conducted by Mr. Lamerton, and two glees were sung by members of his choir.

BOURNEMOUTH.—On the 1st ult. Mr. William Lee played an interesting selection of organ music, including an Offertoire in E minor (Op. 10), by himself, and Bach's "St. Ann's" fugue, at St. Peter's Church.

CAERLEON.—Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" and a miscellaneous selection were performed, by Mrs. Alfred Morris's able choir, on the 13th ult., in the Drill Hall. The soloists taking part were Mrs. Lang, Miss K. F. James, Mrs. J. P. Lewis, Mrs. Morris, Mr. W. Edmunds, Mr. C. Sier, and Mr. Arthur Morgan. Miss Jackson played a much-appreciated violin solo, and the orchestra opened the second part of the programme with Handel's "Occasional" Oratorio Overture.

CARMARTHEN.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert for the season on the 13th ult., in the Assembly Rooms, to a large and appreciative audience. The programme was a miscellaneous one, and included Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," "Be not afraid," "Then shall your light" ("Elijah"), and Schubert's "The Lord is my Shepherd" (female voices). Amongst other soloists who took part were Miss A. Phillips, Mrs. James Davies, Mrs. R. M. Thomas, and Mr. James Morgan. Mr. Wesley Martin, Organist of St. Peter's Church, conducted. Miss May Rees and Mr. Smith presided at the pianoforte and American organ, and Miss May Williams accompanied one of the songs. The Concert was a thorough success.

CATON, NEAR LANCASTER.—At the opening of the new organ, recently erected in the Wesleyan Chapel by Messrs. P. Conacher and Co., on the 12th ult., Mr. W. Sutcliffe gave a Recital, which included the Overture to the "Occasional" Oratorio (Handel), Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Bach), and Grand Chorus (Guilmant).

CHARD.—A successful Concert was given on the 6th ult., in the Corn Exchange, by the Harmonic and Orchestral Societies, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Edis Tidnam. The programme consisted of Cowen's "Rose Maiden," German's "Henry VIII." dances, and some minor pieces. The choruses of the cantata were well rendered, giving evidence of careful training and practice. The soloists were Miss Elsie Mackenzie, Mrs. Mayne, Mr. Theo. Taylor, and Mr. Frank White. Mr. F. Bartlett led the orchestra, and Mrs. J. Edis Tidnam and Mr. H. A. Jeboult were the accompanists.

DORCHESTER.—A well attended Concert was given at the Town Hall, on November 27, by the members of St. Peter's Choir and friends. The programme included Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" and a miscellaneous second part. The soloists were Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Duke, Mr. A. Miles, and the Rev. A. Sewell. Mr. Edgar A. Lane conducted.—Miss Emma Bullen gave a very successful Concert at the Town Hall, on the 7th ult. The artists assisting were Madame Agnes Thayer, Mr. d'Arcy Clayton, Mr. Arthur Barlow, and Miss Ethel Beetlestone, the last-named playing both violin and pianoforte solos.

EGHAM.—The Choral Society, established at the beginning of this year, began its second season, on the 6th ult., in the Literary Institute, by praiseworthy performances of Mozart's "Twelfth Mass" and some miscellaneous pieces. The soloists were Miss A. Simons, Miss R. Dafforne, Mr. W. Clinch, Mr. B. Randalow, and Mr. Willett, the last-named contributing a violoncello solo. The accompaniments were played by a small band, ably led by Miss H. Cross, with Miss Budgen as pianist and Mr. Williamson as organist, and Mr. S. Exton Swaffield conducted.

ENNISCORTHY.—Two successful Concerts were given, on the 5th and 6th ult. respectively, in the Athenæum, under the conductorship of Mr. A. Fitzgerald. The programmes consisted of an attractive collection of songs, duets, and choruses, the soloists being the Misses M. J. Courtney, M. Murphy, L. Courtney, J. Whelan, K. Lacy, C. Donohoe, Mrs. Hammond, Mrs. Kelly, and Messrs. M. J. Whelan, A. Fitzgerald, J. J. O'Brien, P. O'Toole, T. Moore, Captain Hammond, and Dr. Kelly.

EXETER.—The Orchestral Society, led by Mr. C. E. Bell, began its new season on November 29, under the conductorship of Mr. R. B. Moore. Beethoven's Symphony in C, Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" Overture, and that to the "Zauberflöte," by Mozart, and minor pieces, constituted an attractive programme which was rendered in an admirable manner. The vocalist was Mr. S. J. Bishop.—The Oratorio Society gave its 136th Concert on the 18th ult., the work chosen being Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist." The solos were excellently rendered by Miss N. Gosnell, Miss A. Macfarlane, Mr. Dean Trotter, and Mr. Dan Price. Mr. G. W. Lyon conducted.

FRAMLINGHAM.—Spohr's "Last Judgment" was sung in a praiseworthy manner, on the 1st ult., in the Chapel of the College, by the choir of thirty-six voices. Master S. Watson sang the soprano solos, and Master W. R. Warren those assigned to the alto, the others being rendered by Mr. C. Constable and Mr. Alfred Pretty. Mr. A. C. Edwards, the School Organist and Music-master, played the Overture and Symphony and several other pieces on the organ with remarkable skill.

GRAYS.—At the Parish Church, on the 12th ult., Spohr's "Last Judgment," with organ and orchestral accompaniment, was effectively performed. The principal soloists were Miss F. Stevenson, Mrs. Gilbert, Mr. S. Brown, and Mr. Nash. The organ parts were tastefully played by Mr. W. H. Fraser, Organist of the Church, and the Rev. C. F. Box conducted.

GUILDFORD.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Charles Wilkes, gave excellent performances of Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and Handel's "Acis and Galatea," on November 29, in the County Hall. Miss Kate Drew's renderings of the soprano solos were much appreciated, and Mr. A. Grover, Mr. F. Williams, and Mr. M. Tufnail gave effective interpretations of the other solo parts. The accompaniments were played by an efficient orchestra, ably led by Mr. G. Walenn.

LARGS, AYRSHIRE.—The Choral Society gave a successful performance of Haydn's "Creation" on the 17th ult. The soloists were Miss Kate Gray, Mr. Gledhill, and Mr. A. C. Young.

LINCOLN.—An Organ Recital was given in St. Swithin's Church, on the 17th ult., by Mr. F. Pulein. The programme included pieces by Mendelssohn, Corelli, Dubois, Spohr, J. S. Bach, W. S. Bennett, and Salomé. Miss Ruston and Miss M. Ruston assisted as vocalists.

MADELEY, SALOP.—On the 18th ult. the Choral Society, now in its nineteenth year, gave a very good performance of "The Messiah," with a band and chorus of ninety performers. The principals were Miss Mary Clare, Miss Emily Dones, Mr. William Anstice, and Mr. D. Harrison. Mr. Smart, of Newport, conducted, as usual.

PADIHAM.—The Choral Union gave a performance of "The Messiah," on the 10th ult., when the principal soloists were Miss Bouffiers, Miss Fish, Mr. J. Shakespeare Robinson, and Mr. St. Clair Stott. Herr Jacoby led the orchestra and Mr. Worswick conducted.

PLYMOUTH.—The second annual Choir Competition in connection with the Sunday Schools of the Band of Hope Union took place on the 5th ult., when Messrs. W. H. Hannaford, C. T. Kühne, and H. Moreton decided that the merits of the competing choirs were in the following order: Sutton Place, Mutley Baptist, Sherwell, and Edgumbe Street. Mrs. Hoskin, Miss E. Holt, Miss N. Bulley, Mrs. Rowcliffe, and Mr. Humphrey contributed to the rest of the programme.—The new Philharmonic Society gave its first Concert, on the 12th ult., in the Guildhall, with decided success. The programme was the same as that of "Selection Day" at the recent "Handel Festival," and the soloists included Madame Clara Samuelli, Miss Amy Bosworthick, Miss McGreeney, Miss N. Bulley, Mrs. Weeds, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. J. Bishop. The choruses were excellently sung, and valuable assistance was given in the accompaniments by Mr. H. Lake, who presided at the organ, and who also played Handel's Concerto in G. Mr. A. C. Faulk, to whom great credit is due, conducted.

PRESTON BROOK, CHESHIRE.—A vocal and instrumental Concert, in aid of the church funds, was given in Dutton Schools, on the 7th ult. The miscellaneous programme was rendered by Miss Christine Lynch, Mr. Nelson Stokes, Mr. Cuthbert Blacow, Mr. N. Dumville, and Mr. W. T. Haworth, the accompanist being Mr. Ernest Harrison.

READING.—An effective performance of Handel's "Samson" was given, on the 11th ult., in the New Town Hall, by the Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. W. H. Strickland. A competent vocal quartet was provided in Miss Mabel Berrey, Miss Marie Hooton, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Daniel Price. Mr. Rippon was the leader of the orchestra and Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt presided at the organ.

SCARBOROUGH.—On the 13th ult. "The Messiah" was sung by the Choral Union, the solo parts being taken by Miss T. Davy, Miss J. Langford, Mr. T. David, and Mr. A. F. Ferguson. Mr. W. H. Cass was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. A. M. Richardson conducted.

STAINLAND.—The Choral Union performed Handel's "Samson," on the 15th ult., with Miss Hollowell, Madame Cragg, Mr. J. Shakespeare Robinson, and Mr. William Roberts as soloists. The performance was very successful. Mr. C. Bettison led the band and Mr. Rickard conducted.

TRENT.—Mr. G. H. Fox, assisted by Mr. W. Stafford (violinist), gave his fourth public Organ Recital in the College Chapel, on the 13th ult., when he played Bach's Toccata in F, Guilmant's "Marche Nuptiale," and other pieces.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The performance, by Mr. F. Hunnibell's Choral Society, of Sullivan's "Golden Legend," proved so successful that it was repeated on the 6th ult., in the Great Hall, Stanford's choral ballad "The Revenge" being added on that occasion. Miss Medora Henson, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. E. Branscombe, and Mr. Daniel Price were again a most efficient solo quartet; Mr. H. Haarnack led the orchestra, and Mr. C. H. Cronk was the organist.

WALLINGTON.—The programme of the first Concert of the seventh season of the Musical Association, on the 13th ult., in the Parish Hall, consisted of Prout's cantata, "Alfred," and a miscellaneous selection, the solo vocalists being Miss C. Siviter, Mr. L. Fryer, and Mr. A. Wills. The accompaniments were rendered by Mr. E. W. Grocock and Mr. N. Carr, and Mr. G. F. Bruce conducted.

WEYBRIDGE.—Mr. J. Ivimey, assisted by Mr. A. Blagrove and Mrs. Helen Trust, were the executants of an excellent selection of high-class chamber music on the 8th ult., in the Village Hall.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—A new Oratorio, by Mr. G. H. Cox, entitled "Christus," consisting of sixty-nine numbers, was successfully produced, on the 13th ult., in the Agricultural Hall. The solos were well sung by Miss Ghita Corri, Miss E. Lloyd, Mr. Leyland, and Mr. Ackermann, and the choruses and instrumental portions of the work effectively rendered, under the able direction of the composer. Mr. Ward led the orchestra, and Dr. Mann presided at the organ.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. J. Harraway Slape, Organist and Choirmaster to Holy Innocents', Hornsey.—Mr. Frank Pulein, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Wrexham, North Wales.—Mr. G. F. Bruce, Organist and Choirmaster to Beddington Parish Church, Surrey.

CHOIR APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Frank Percy (Tenor), to Holy Trinity Church, Southport.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary Parish Churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, contains the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Thirty-three years have elapsed since the publication of the first English edition, and faithful to its original as that edition may have been in the main, it has been felt that closer adherence to the accepted standard text is attainable, and as far as is at all practicable, should be observed. With this view the present edition is issued. The chorales, choruses, and solos have been newly and independently translated from the original German words, and the adaptation of the narrative of the Evangelist, a task rendered perhaps somewhat less difficult and hazardous by the aid of the Revised Version of the New Testament, has been carefully reconsidered and re-arranged so as to preserve unaltered, as far as may be, the musical text of the original.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

* UNA

4TH AND 5TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 4, 1893."Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard."The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times."We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

† THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph."Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier."A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post."That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE
BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

* JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times."One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

5TH AND 6TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

† ISRAEL IN THE
WILDERNESS"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, * 7s. 6d.; † 5s. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU

AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs

BY THE

REV. E. V. HALL, M.A.

Late Precentor of Worcester Cathedral.

Price Eightpence.

Words, with music to the Hymns, price Twopence.

This is an attempt to provide music for Lent and for Good Friday of the simplest kind, for use in country churches. The music is interspersed with well-known hymns, in which the congregation may be invited to join. The Cantata may be used at a special service on Good Friday afternoon or evening, or on any day in Lent, and requires only a solo voice and a small choir.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

LAZARUS OF BETHANY.

Price 2s.; paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

"Mr. Shinn has the happy knack of writing popular music which is at the same time thoroughly good, and free from serious difficulties. This his latest work will find acceptance amongst choral societies and church choirs. The choruses are bold and effective. The solos are melodious, and suited to the words. The quartet, 'Blessed are the dead,' is really charming."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"Mr. Shinn is entitled to warm praise for his Oratorio, since it is obviously written to provide choirs of moderate capabilities with a work not too long, not too difficult, but withal melodious and musician-like, and, above all, faithful in its representation of the dramatic incidents of its sacred narrative. Upon all these grounds Mr. Shinn can claim a success."—The Keyboord.

"The work contains some remarkably well-written solos and choruses. There are two exquisite bass solos, and a quartet, 'Blessed are the dead,' is a lovely piece of part-writing. The concluding fugue 'Hallelujah Amen,' is a fitting climax to the work."—Sussex Daily News.

TWO BOOKS OF SONG

COMPOSED BY

JACQUES BLUMENTHAL.

(OP. 101.)

PRICE, EACH VOLUME, IN PAPER COVER, 4S.; OR, BOUND IN CLOTH, 6S.

PREFACE.

THE collective title given to these songs does not quite express the idea which the Composer had in view in writing them. But it was impossible to find an exact equivalent in English to the French Chansons Intimes or to the German Intime Liedchen.

In these short songs the Composer has tried to give expression to some of our deeper feelings or questionings—such songs as one might sing to oneself, when in the mood, or to some intimate friends.

The Composer is indebted to H.R.H. The Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) for the drawings representing respectively Shadow and Sunshine, graciously designed for these two Volumes by Her Royal Highness.

MASTER

STERNDALÉ BENNETT(Chester and Leeds Festivals, 1894; Queen's Hall, &c.)
(Pupil of Mr. BENHAM BLAXLAND).

Master STERNDALÉ BENNETT's beautiful voice and artistic singing have, on every occasion, given satisfaction, and he has had an experience (see répertoire) unsurpassed, both in London and the Provinces. Mr. BLAXLAND has also other highly-trained Solo Boys, who hold appointments at leading London Churches, and forty Chorus Boys (available week days). Refined tone, Cathedral style. Boys may be heard by appointment.

From Sir JOHN STAINER to Mr. B. BLAXLAND.

"You deserve warm congratulations on the admirable singing of Master John Sterndalé Bennett. He does your training great credit. The child himself has genuine musical feeling, which I trust will be of service to him in after-life."—Nov. 13, 1894.

From Dr. C. H. H. PARRY to Mr. BLAXLAND.

"I am glad to have the opportunity of saying that Master Sterndalé Bennett, who sang the part of first child in 'Judith' at the Chester Festival, did it most admirably. It has never been better done. He showed remarkable intelligence in phrasing and expression, and I am also indebted to you for giving him such an excellent idea of it. I am very glad I am going to have him for the 'Shepherd Boy' in 'Job,' at Leeds."—Nov. 10, 1894.

"Writing just after the splendid performance of 'Job,' at Leeds, I am most glad to say Sterndalé Bennett acquitted himself surprisingly well in the 'Shepherd's' music, and sang with remarkable intelligence and refined feeling, and gave just the right declamation to give the part true effect. (Signed) "C. H. PARRY."

"We have great pleasure in cordially endorsing the above.

(Signed) EDMUND WARD, } Hon. Secs.

THOS. PIERCY,

"Leeds Philharmonic Society, Nov. 14, 1894."

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

MR. WALTER COWARD.
MR. CHARLES ACKERMAN.
MR. HARPER KEARTON.
MR. W. H. BRERETON.

RECENT PROVINCIAL PRESS OPINIONS.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

Gave some exquisitely fine expositions of part-music.—Derby Express.
They go in for the humorous and are highly successful with it.
The German polka was deliciously funny.—Derbyshire Advertiser.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

Formidable rivals of the "Meister Glee Singers."—Bath Society Paper.

Their glees and part-songs give the purest delight—refined and exquisite vocal painting.—South Wales Post.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

As a "quartet" they are equal to any similar body, whilst as "solo singers" they are superior. Their performances were a succession of triumphs.—Midland Evening News.

The magnificent vocalism of "The Westminster Singers" was the feature of the evening.—Birmingham Gazette.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

The voices are pure in quality, the shading and expression artistic, and the enunciation clear and distinct; they became immensely popular with the audience.—Shrewsbury Chronicle.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

The concert was made especially attractive by the appearance of "The Westminster Singers." Their vocalisation was brilliant, and the audience were simply delighted.—Wolverhampton Express.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

Made a marked impression by their fine singing. Their performances were hailed with loud demonstrations of approval. We can fully endorse the favourable criticisms of the London Press.—Buxton Advertiser.

THE WESTMINSTER SINGERS

Fairly captivated the large and enthusiastic audience.—Bedfordshire Mercury.

Won golden opinions, and it may safely be said they form the best "quartet" in the country.—Darwen News.

ADDITIONAL ACCOMPANIMENTS.

It is not difficult to imagine some readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES throwing down the present issue in disgust at the sight of a term which is as repulsive as that of a scarlet cloth to a bull in the Spanish arena. But at the risk of offending worthy musicians I feel that the time has come for the discussion of this delicate subject from a fresh standpoint, and in order to make the matter clear it will be advisable to indulge in a brief retrospect of "additional accompaniments." It was Mozart, a master whom Wagner not unjustly described as the most perfect musician that has ever appeared, who incurred the ire of many lovers of Handel by the embellishments he made to the skeleton score of "The Messiah." No one can deny that in many respects these parts by the Salzburg master are utterly un-Handelian in character, but in the course of ages they have, so to speak, grown into the work as it was first presented to our forefathers, and few, if any, at the present day would care to hear "The people that walked in darkness" without Mozart's wailing chromatic harmonies, so poignantly suggestive of wandering spirits, seeking rest and finding none. Within the memory of many now living the late Sir Michael Costa was regarded as a great offender for the additional accompaniments he provided for the performances, on a scale hitherto unknown, by the Sacred Harmonic Society at Exeter Hall. It is not my present purpose to go into the question of the parts written by Costa, who, being an Italian by birth, probably regarded Handel's scores through Italian spectacles; but a more earnest and conscientious musician has never appeared, and everything he did was worthy of respectful consideration. Gradually, however, the clamour grew respecting the maintenance in their purity of the scores by old masters, and the fight was hottest when Herr Richter dared to present the late Robert Franz's edition of "The Messiah" at the Birmingham Festival in 1885. It mattered not that a learned and enthusiastic Handelian scholar had endeavoured to purge the score from errors, which in the course of ages had crept in, and had done his best to preserve the spirit of the original; the version was in some respects novel to English amateurs of the present generation, and it was rejected with contumely. More singular than this was the obloquy incurred by Sir Joseph (then Mr.) Barnby, when J. S. Bach's magnificent Passion Music according to St. Matthew was revived by him about a quarter of a century since, for withdrawing the accompaniments from the chorals and causing them to be rendered in the most delicate manner by well-trained voices unsupported. The effect was exquisite, perhaps the most tear-compelling being "O Lord, who dares to smite Thee," after the furious chorus "O tell us, Thou Christ." The fact that Bach did not compose these Lutheran melodies, but merely added his own masterly harmonies—which, as his voluminous biographer, Philipp Spitta, well observes, could scarcely have been intended to be sung by the congregation of the St. Thomas Kirche in Leipzig—was not taken into consideration. Within the past few years the question as to how the works of antiquarian masters should be rendered at the present day has entered upon a new phase. We have been informed in strenuous terms that a work by Handel, Bach, or any other old master should be given as nearly as possible in accordance with the composer's intentions, or, to quote a favourite formula, as the author "meant it to be." This sounds well, but it is specious and unsubstantial. We are given to understand that the masterpieces of the first half of the eighteenth century were scored precisely as their composers "meant them to be." The assertion is so ridiculous that it is scarcely worthy of serious argument, for a glance through the scores must be sufficient to convince any unprejudiced enquirer that Bach, Handel, Haydn, and Mozart did their best with the resources placed at their disposal, and had they been in possession of more would gladly have utilised them. Let us put a suppositious case. Mr. John Jones, we will say, is the leading musician in some obscure village, far removed from any important city in England, and he is asked to write a cantata for the local musical society, which consists of fifty indifferent singers, three fiddles, one flute, a violoncellist, and two cornets. He makes the most of the resources at his disposal, and the cantata proves to be a little masterpiece, so that it is eagerly taken up by large choral societies in the country, and is even given at the Albert Hall. Does the composer insist upon his three violins, one flute, one violoncellist, two cornets, and no more? As a matter of course he would re-score his work for full orchestra, or entrust it to some other musician capable of fulfilling the task, and feel grateful for the measure of appreciation secured for his modest effort. But now it is thought to be displaying a spirit of reverence towards Bach to re-manufacture the coarse-toned instruments used in his day—the long trumpet, the harsh tones of which simply split the ear. Formerly the high trumpet parts were allotted to clarinets, with effect surely more in consonance with the composer "as he meant it to be." To add one more point to the argument, the effort to reproduce the conditions of early eighteenth century performances is futile, for the same proportion of voices to instruments is impossible in our present concert-rooms. These remarks are mainly suggested by the welcome announcement of a Bach Festival in the Queen's Hall, by the association which has done so much for that which is noble in musical art during the last nineteen years. We are to hear the great Mass in B minor, the St. Matthew Passion Music, and a number of smaller works. Let me urge in all humility, though I do not imagine for an instant that my views will find universal acceptance, that on an occasion of such commanding interest the spirit rather than the letter be observed in the matter of the orchestration; for it is surely on high authority that we are told "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." By so doing we shall be paying the largest measure of homage to a master whom we all delight to honour.

H. F. F.

FROM MY STUDY.

FANNY PERSIANI, a great singer of whom old opera-goers still speak with unbounded admiration, was, in her day, living testimony to the fact that finished art can override natural disadvantages. Chorley, who, of course, knew her well, describes Persiani as "plain, pale, and anxious," while another authority has said that, though her aspect was exceedingly refined, she was "small and thin, with a long, colourless face, . . . with no beauty but her profusion of fine fair hair, while in her dress she was singularly tasteless. Her voice, too, was against her rather than in her favour; it was a thin, acute soprano, of great range upwards, clear and penetrating, but not full or mellow, blending ill with other voices and always liable to rise in pitch." Yet this badly equipped lady became one of the most famous singers of a time in which good singing was common. Chorley tells us how she conquered: "Every conceivable passage was finished by her to perfection, the shake perhaps excepted, which might be thought indistinct. Her execution was poignant, clear, audacious. She had the finest possible sense of accent. From her every phrase had its fullest measure. Every group of notes was divided and expressed by her with as much precision as the best of violinists brings into his bowing. And this was done with that secure musical ease which made her anxious, mournful face and her acute, acid voice forgotten. Madame Persiani's attack was not more unfailing than the delicate sensibility with which she gave every note its fullest value, never herself becoming breathless, rarely heavy." Here, then, was a triumph of skilled vocalisation, with very little aid from person or voice. Unlike her contemporary and colleague, Grisi, she had no great moments of passion; her stage qualifications stopping short at sensibility, which enabled her to personate sentimental heroines, such as Linda, with natural grace and effect.

Apart from her vocal skill, Persiani is interesting through association with persons and events of importance. It was for her that Donizetti wrote the part of Lucia, and she is connected with many of that composer's successes, her favourite characters being Lucia, Linda, and Adina ("L'Elisir d'Amore"). It was as Amina, however, that she made her début in this country. But Donizetti or Bellini mattered not, she could sing any music that the masters of the florid school chose to write. Through her husband, Madame Persiani was intimately connected with the establishment of the Royal Italian Opera in 1847. Lumley having declined to produce an opera by the husband of the prima donna, that gentleman conceived the idea of breaking down the manager's monopoly by putting up a rival enterprise. Mr. Sutherland Edwards tells the story in his book, "The Prima Donna," quoting largely from the late Willert Beale, whose father, when Persiani had developed the scheme far enough, undertook the management. The subsequent events are well known.

Madame Persiani, daughter of the famous tenor, Tacchinardi, was born in Rome, October 4, 1812, began to study at an early age, and sang prima donna parts in her father's private theatre when only eleven. She married at eighteen, made her début at Leghorn in 1832, appeared in Paris five years later, and came to London in 1838. For a long time she alternated between the two Western capitals. In 1850 she turned her attention elsewhere, but re-appeared in London as late as 1858, being then forty-six. "Her younger successors," writes Chorley, "sounded like so many immature scholars of the second class." Madame Persiani died at Passy, May 3, 1867.

Spontini filled too great a place in his day for any assumption here that the main facts of his life are unknown to the general reader, while as to his works, a discussion of their character and claims, to be worth anything at all, would take up far more space than I can occupy with these notes. Born (November 14, 1774) at Majolati, a village in the then States of the Church, Spontini was destined by his parents, simple cultivators of the soil, to the priesthood; but what might have seemed like mere chance circumstances drew his attention to music. The usual opposition had in this case to be encountered, and the lad ran away from home to the house of a maternal uncle, who placed him under a local professor. Then began that stately march to the goal of honour and renown which makes Spontini's career so interesting. His progress as a student was rapid, and soon operas began to pour from his pen. In 1804 he appeared in Paris, won the favour of the Empress Josephine, produced "La Vestale" and "Fernand Cortez," and then found himself on the pinnacle of success. He subsequently went to Berlin, establishing himself there in the highest position, and did not quit the Prussian capital till 1840. He then returned to Paris. When visiting his native village, in 1851, he was seized with mortal illness and died on January 24. The portraits of Spontini usually show him wearing many orders. Fétis gives a long list of these distinctions, and says that never was an artist so loaded with them.

The Wassail Song having recently been mentioned in these columns, I may add that a copy of both words and music appears in "Gloucestershire Notes and Queries," Vol. I., p. 54. The song is there given as sung in the hill country—the neighbourhood of—

Stair on the Wold,
Where the winds blow cold.

I append the tune and the words of the first verse:—

Mr. Kidson has kindly forwarded another version of the melody, taken from the lips of a Gloucestershire friend. It shows the variations to be looked for in the case of traditional tunes.

With reference to "George Ridler's Oven," it may be of interest to mention that a dinner ticket issued by the Gloucestershire Society in London, for the meeting of that body in 1793, has on it a tablet, supported by George Ridler and his dog. The song was sung at every banquet of the Society.

George Ridler is mentioned in an undated broadside song published or, mayhap, reprinted by the celebrated Robert Raikes:—

George Ridler's Oven, as I've been told, contains some curious jokes,

sirs,

And very much of it is said by many Glo'ster folk, sirs;

But ovens now are serious things, and from my soul I wish, sirs,

Your ovens here may ne'er want bread to fill the poor man's dish, sirs.

By some this song is ascribed to Charles Dibdin, but their authority is, to say the least, doubtful. It is probably much older.

Blakeney, whence came the stones that built the famous oven, is a village on the right bank of the Severn, some twelve or fourteen miles West of Gloucester. The parish is associated with personages less mythical than Ridler, if the following, taken from the register, be true: "Let it be remembered for the honour of this parish that from it first sounded out the Psalms of David in English metre, by Thomas Sternhold and John Hopkins; the former lived in an estate near Blakeney, called the Hayfield, and the latter in an estate in the tything of Awre, called the Wood End."

A very curious entry may be found in the parish register of Rodborough, under date January 22, 1748. It appears that disputes had arisen as to the right of using the "Singing Seat" in the church, and that these were serious enough to necessitate the calling of a public meeting. Accordingly the clergyman, churchwardens, singers, and principal inhabitants assembled, and drew up a code of regulations with regard to the pew in question. These facts are stated in a dignified preamble, after which come nine Articles, unique, I should say, in the troublesome annals of church choirs. Article I. declares that only the persons whose names are underwritten shall occupy the Singing Seat. Article II. stipulates that non-parishioners shall be excluded. Article III. gives the singers a right to fill vacant places, but provides that the right shall cease if not exercised within a year after the vacancy, and pass to the minister and churchwardens. Article IV. should be quoted: "That no person shall sit there unless he understands the rules of musick, and can (with a tolerable voice at least) sing the Psalm tunes." Article V. states that disputes among the singers shall be settled by the minister and churchwardens, and that whosoever refuses to accept their decision shall vacate the pew. The next Article is very curious. It decrees that persons having a right to a seat may sell it for five shillings, the vacancy then to be filled up according to Article III. The heir or executor of any person having such a right may dispose of it in the same way. But, according to Article VII., the price must always be five shillings, "neither more nor less." Article VIII. lays down that the users of the pew shall keep it in repair. Article IX. is, perhaps, the most curious of all: "That P.—P.—, of Stroud Parish, shall have liberty to sit in the said Pew, and make use of his Bassoon; but that no instrument of Musick but a Bassoon shall be used there." All these stipulations and agreements are solemnly subscribed by Nathaniel Bond, Minister, Daniel Chance, Churchwarden, five of the principal inhabitants, and eighteen singers. We get, through this entry, an interesting glimpse of a church choir 150 years ago, and find it a close corporation constituted on the most democratic principles, self-ruling, and enjoying absolute rights of user and sale. What would a modern clergyman say to such an imperium in imperio?

Dr. Jenner, the discoverer of vaccination, was an amateur of music. I have met with the following in Barron's biography of that excellent man: "Knowing that good company and good discourse were the sinews of virtue, he promoted them on all occasions. He was especially fond of music, and was a member of a catch club that met at Cam. He could also play on the violin and flute, and he was in the habit of forming select musical parties, where he occasionally was a performer. I have seen him in his latter years, after his renown had filled the world, and after the many cares attendant upon vaccination had often weighed heavy upon him, shake them entirely off; he would then take up a humorous strain, and sing one of his own ballads with all the mirth and gaiety of his youthful days."

In my collection of books illustrated by George Cruikshank is a scarce volume, entitled "The Age of Intellect, or Clerical Showfolk and Wonderful Layfolk. A series of Poetical Epistles between Bob Blazon in Town and Jack Jingle in the Country. By Francis Moore, Physician, Author of the celebrated Work, entitled Vox Stellarum, or a Loyal Almanack." This jeu d'esprit, published by William Hone in 1819, is for the most part savagely sarcastic and roundly abusive, after the manner of the day; "Old Moore" specially levelling his shafts at the clergy of St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey for turning those great churches into shows. It appears that, on the death of Princess Charlotte of Wales, a crowd gathered in St. Paul's hoping for some reference to an event which filled all hearts with sorrow. It was the turn of a minor canon, described as the Rev. Dr. H—, to officiate, and he duly appeared, but, "feeling some little difficulty in approaching his desk, in consequence of the numerous congregation assembled, retired in dudgeon." A passage to the desk was cleared later, to no avail, since not a clergyman connected with the place could be found. Exceedingly irritated, the congregation soon became turbulent. The scene is thus described :

Now Riot commenced her disgusting career,
And each votary armed with an aspect severe.
One attempting on clerical duties to preach;
On the monuments others commencing a speech.
Here the Constables pulling the Orators down;
There an Orator darting Defiance from frown.
Here Clamour her Babel-tongued banner displaying,
There Vergers the Posse Com'tatis arraying.

At this juncture, Attwood, the organist, intervened :—

Now as Canon or Bishop, Archdeacon or Dean,
To their shame be it spoken, were not to be seen,
The eminent Organist gracefully rose,
And gave birth to some strains which he did not compose,
Till, observing the assemblage extremely incensed,
Thus, with forte, extempore hem! he commenced.
"Hem! Ladies and Gentlemen, painful is truly
My sad situation. I came hither duly
To play on the beautiful instrument near me,
And, if I could do so, I'm sure you would hear me.
But sorry I am that I cannot comply with Your wishes, because the two peepers I spy with Perceive that the Choristers' seats have been seized
By more than conveniently there can be squeezed.
Now, if the fine singers can't get at their places,
You mustn't expect to be pleased with their faces,
And who doesn't know that they can't sing without them?
Who?—nobody surely who knows much about 'em.
Hem! Ladies and Gentlemen, every one knows
That I like to exhibit whate'er I compose,
And most willingly, therefore, I'd tip you a stave
On the grand Diapason, harmoniously grave.
But unless we've the Choristers I mustn't play,
And without us, alas! can the Clergymen pray,
Read the portions of Scripture called lessons, and preach,
Or the truths of Divine Christianity teach?
Unassisted by mine, or my deputy's aid
They'd a sad piece of work of it make I'm afraid.
And the bellows-blower even, tho' last in the list,
Would as soon as the Bishop, I believe, be dismissed.
Therefore, Ladies and Gentlemen, let me request
That your sad disappointment you'll coolly digest,
And, believe me, I'd fly in the dark, as a Bat would,
To do a kind act, or I'm not Timothy At * * *."

Attwood's harangue failed to calm the angry multitude, but the Lord Mayor, who had arrived on the scene, was more effective, and persuaded the congregation to wait peacefully. Still the clergy came not, whereupon there was another outburst, and a second speech from the civic chief. Presently, however, the storm blew itself out. Can any reader inform me as to the authority for this story?

I have found in Hilda Gamlin's "Emma, Lady Hamilton," a curious proof of the interest which George III. took in music. It is contained in a letter from Charles Greville to his uncle, Sir W. Hamilton, then English Ambassador to the Court of Naples: "My dear Hamilton, I write this on the subject of commissions. You are naturally very obliging, but when the moment passes, you omit doing what you intend, merely from want of recollection, till the moment elapses. I wrote you several letters on the subject of reeds for hautboys and clarinets, which you told me you would not forget, though you thought it an useless commission, being as good in London; but the King has repeatedly mentioned your forgetfulness, and has asked Fisher, who you were civil to, and he said you had sent them. But you must write me a few lines expressing your sorrow that those you sent had not reached me, and that you should send another parcel, and desire me to present them, and add some proper civilities to the giver of the commission; and my brother will be in waiting, and I shall send the letter to him, by which you will get out of the scrape. These little fiddle-faddle things are mountains at our Court." It is evident from this epistle—a choice specimen of English "as she was spoke" in high life a century ago—that the King had been making trouble concerning the non-arrival of the reeds. But what could that royal personage want with them? Did he affect to play the hautboy and clarinet himself? On this point I have no evidence. The Fisher mentioned by Greville was, probably, Dr. John Alexander of that ilk, violinist, composer, entrepreneur, and wife-beating husband of the famous Madame Storce. X.

NEW LIGHTS UPON OLD TUNES.

No. II.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER."

ONE of the sweetest of Moore's Irish Melodies, and perhaps the most popular, is "The Last Rose of Summer." We have heard it on street organs (the old barrel-organ of twenty years back); it has driven us half crazy when stumbled through on the next-door pianoforte by the next-door's little girl; it has been played in brilliant staccato, with variations intricate and many, by concert-room artists, utterly out of sympathy with the air, and who merely regard it as professional ammunition; in fact, we have all at various times inwardly, if not openly cursed it. But let a pure and sympathetic singer render the song with true feeling and freedom from either vulgar mannerism or false affectation, and we can acknowledge the beauty of the words and the exquisite character of the melody. Seeing that the tune is a favourite one with at least the more elderly of us, some gleanings respecting its source may not be uninteresting. The song and air "'Tis the last rose of summer" were first printed in Moore's fifth number of his "Selection of Irish Melodies," published in December, 1813. Its companions in the same number were the no less famous "The Minstrel Boy" and the "Young May Moon," with others not quite so well known. Moore gives the old name of the air as "The Groves of Blarney," a humorous song then in the height of its popularity.

It was one of Moore's daring feats, and showed his knowledge of the elasticity of Irish music, to use in this instance and in others an air which had previously become popular in association with comic words.

"Eveleen's Bower," for which he used a tune known as "The Dandy O!" and to which that song, "Peg of Darby," and numberless other comic ditties were sung, is another instance in point; and Moore was not mistaken; for his plaintive songs quickly, and for ever, annihilated all previous association. What poet of to-day would dare to adapt one of his most plaintive sonnets to an up-to-date music-hall air?

"The Groves of Blarney" was a burlesque poem singing the beauties of Castle Blarney, written by Richard Alfred Milliken some time about 1798 or 1799. Irishmen were then (and I presume are now) brilliant and witty, and Milliken was not the least witty or bright among the group of Irishmen who flourished at the end of the last century. He was a native of Cork and possessed his full share of native humour.

"The Groves of Blarney" is a song too well known to give in its entirety. It was originally about six verses in length, but many a rhymster has had a hand in subsequent versions, not the worst among them being Father Prout.

A couple of Milliken's verses, and the air to which the song was sung, are here appended.

The words of the song are from Crofton Croker's Popular Songs of Ireland, 1839, but the air is from one of Holden's Collections, and has no words attached to it there:

"THE GROVES OF BLARNEY."

(From Holden's "Irish Airs," circa 1800.)

The Groves of Blarney they are so charming,
All by the purling of sweet silent streams,
Being tanked with posies that spontaneous grow there,
Planted in order by the sweet rock close.
'Tis there's the daisy and the sweet carnation,
The blooming pink and the rose so fair,
The daffodown dilly, besides the lily,
Flowers that scent the sweet fragrant air.
Oh, Ullagoane, &c.

For 'tis there's the cave where no daylight enters,
But bats and badgers are for ever bred;
Being moss'd by natur' that makes it sweeter
Than a coach and six, or a feather bed.
'Tis there's the lake that is stored with perches
And comely eels in the verdant mud,
Besides the leeches and the groves of beeches,
All standing in order for to guard the flood.
Oh, Ullagoane! &c.

Father Prout has added:

There is the stone there that whoever kisses—
Oh! he never misses to grow eloquent;
'Tis he may clamber to a lady's chamber,
Or become a member of parliament, &c.

The "Ullagoane" given as a refrain at the end of each verse was, we may suppose, a wailing chorus in which the company joined the solo singer. Holden appends to his version of the air the few notes of music for it; it is omitted in all other copies. The circumstances of the composition of his song are narrated in a small memoir prefixed to a selection of "Poetical Fragments," by Milliken, and quoted by Crofton Croker, as follows:—

"An itinerant poet, with the view of being paid for his trouble, composed a song in praise (as he doubtless intended it) of Castle Hyde, the beautiful seat of the Hyde family on the river Blackwater; but instead of the expected remuneration the poor poet was driven from the gate by order of the then proprietor, who, from the absurdity of the thing, conceived that it could only have been meant as a mockery, and, in fact, a more nonsensical composition could scarcely escape the pen of a maniac. . . . The song first became a favourite with the lower orders, then found its way into ballads, and at length into the convivial meetings of gentlemen. It was in one of these that Mr. Milliken undertook, in the gaiety of the moment, to produce a song that, if not superior, should be at least equal in absurdity to Castle Hyde; and accordingly, adopting the tune and taking Blarney for his subject, he soon made good his promise," &c.

The original words of "Castle Hyde" here spoken of do not appear to have ever graced a collection of Irish poems or songs, and the curious in such matters might have some difficulty in turning up a copy. Crofton Croker, in his "Popular Songs of Ireland," 1839, does not give it, as might have been expected had he known it. The present writer has found a copy of "Castle Hyde" on a ballad sheet, and here presents it as a curiosity. It will be seen that it is quite as funny as ever Milliken made his "Groves of Blarney."

"CASTLE HYDE."

(From a Ballad Sheet.)

As I rode out one summer's morning
Down by the banks of Blackwater side;
To view the groves and meadows charming,
And pleasant gardens of Castle Hyde.
It is there you will hear the thrushes warbling,
The dove and partridge I now describe;
The lamkin sporting each night and morning,
All to adorn sweet Castle Hyde.

If noble princes from foreign places
Should chance to sail to this Irish shore,
It is in this valley they could be feasted,
As often heroes have done before.
The wholesome air of this habitation
Would recreate your heart with pride;
There is no valley throughout this nation
With beauty equal to Castle Hyde.

There's a church for service in this fine harbour,
Where nobles often in their coaches ride,
To view the streams and pleasant gardens
That do adorn sweet Castle Hyde.
There is fine horses and stall-fed oxen,
And a den for foxes to play and hide;
Fine mares for breeding, and foreign sheeping,
And snowy fleeces in Castle Hyde.

The richest groves in this Irish nation,
In fine plantations you'll find them there;
The rose and tulip and fine carnation
All vie with the lily fair.
The buck, the doe, the fox, the eagle,
Do skip and play by the river side;
The trout and salmon they are roving
In those clear streams of Castle Hyde.

I rode from Blarney to Castle Earnet,
To Thomastown and sweet Donerail,
To sweet Tilshanock and gay Rathcormick,
Besides Killarney and Abbey-fail.
The river Shannon and pleasant Boyne,
The flowing Barrow and rapid Bride;
In all my ranging and serenading,
I saw no equal to Castle Hyde.

Nothing could be more thoroughly Irish than the foregoing. It is apparently a hedge school-master's production, and, as before said, nothing could be funnier.

I have only come across one copy of the tune bearing the name "Castle Hyde," and that is the following, taken from a work entitled "The Irish Minstrel," a large octavo volume published in Edinburgh about 1825, edited by R. A. Smith. It is a companion volume to the Scottish Minstrel in six books, by the same editor; it has a modern song set to the air.

"CASTLE HYDE."

(From "The Irish Minstrel," circa 1825.)

The tune is undoubtedly an early Irish folk melody originally wedded to Celtic words, which the poet of "Castle Hyde" had displaced.

In George Thomson's "Select Collection of Irish Melodies," folio, Vol. II., 1816, another copy of the air "Castle Hyde" appears, put to one of Lord Byron's songs. A note mentions that the air was "communicated without a name by a friend," and apparently is an independent traditional version of the melody. It is as follows:

"IRISH AIRS."

(From Thomson's "Irish Melodies," 1816.)

"The Groves of Blarney" is also printed in Thomson's collection, but the copy I print from, Smollett Holden's "Collection of Old Established Irish slow and quick tunes," circa 1800, is the earliest I have found in print. After that follows Moore's version in 1813.

EUGÈNE VIVIER.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.

WHO, in the present day, remembers Eugène Vivier? The first time I met this remarkable musician, mining engineer, diplomatist, and professor of mystification he was complaining that Mr. Frederick Gye had not sent him a box for one of Angiolina Bosio's touching performances in "La Traviata." He had written to the manager, explaining that he was ready to shed tears and that he possessed a pocket-handkerchief; but that he wanted something more. "J'ai un mouchoir, mais pas de loge," he concluded. Yet his letter was left without a reply! After waiting a day or two and still receiving no answer, Vivier engaged the dirtiest crossing-sweeper he could find, made him put on a little extra mud, and sent him with a letter to Mr. Gye demanding "the return of his correspondence." The courteous manager of the Royal Italian Opera could scarcely have known that besides being one of the first musicians and quite the first horn-player of his day, Eugene Vivier was the most charming of men and the spoiled child of nearly every Court in Europe. Speaking to me once of the Emperor Napoleon, he said, in answer to a question I put to him as to Napoleon the Third's personal characteristics: "He is the most gentlemanly Emperor I know" (C'est l'Empereur le plus comme il faut que je connais).

"What can I do for you?" said this gentlemanly Emperor one day when Vivier had gone to see him at the Tuileries.

"Come out on to the balcony with me, Sire," replied the amiable cynic; "some of my creditors are sure to be passing, and it will do me good to be seen in conversation with your majesty."

Besides speaking to him familiarly within view of his creditors, the Emperor Napoleon III. conferred on Vivier several well-paid sinecures. He appointed him "Inspector of Mines"—which, from conscientious motives, knowing nothing of mining, Vivier never inspected; and he was once accused by a facetious journal of holding the post of "Librarian to the Forest of Fontainebleau."

There were only two other Emperors at that time in Europe; and to one of them, the Emperor of Austria, Vivier was sent on a certain occasion from Paris with dispatches; not, I fancy, in the character of Vely Pacha's secretary, the only quasi-diplomatic post he held, but partly to facilitate his travelling, and partly, it may be, for some private Imperial reason. Instead of being delayed, questioned, and searched at the frontier, as generally happened in those days—the days before 1859—to travellers entering the Austrian dominions, Vivier was treated by the Custom House officials and by the police with all possible respect; and journeying as an honoured personage—an emissary from the Emperor of the French—he in due time reached Vienna, and, hastening to the Palace, made known the object of his visit. It seems quite possible that the dispatches carried by Vivier may have possessed particular importance, and that Napoleon III. had motives of his own for not forwarding them through the ordinary diplomatic channels. Vivier had, in any case, been instructed to deliver them to the Emperor in person—one of those Emperors whom he numbered among his private acquaintances.

A Court Chamberlain had hurried out to receive the distinguished messenger; ready, after a due interchange of compliments, to usher him into the Imperial presence.

"Your Excellency!" began the Chamberlain, in the most obsequious manner.

"I am not an Excellency!" replied Vivier.

"General, then (Monsieur le Général)!"

"I am no General!"

"Colonel, perhaps, and Aide-de-Camp to his Imperial Majesty?"

"I am not in the army. I have no official rank; no rank of any kind whatever."

"Good heavens! then what are you?" exclaimed the Chamberlain, indignant with himself for having treated as high-born and high-placed one who was apparently a mere nobody.

"I am a musician," said Vivier.

Bounding with rage the Court functionary made an unbecoming gesture, such as Mephistopheles, according to the stage direction, should make in one of the passages of Goethe's "Faust."

"Very well, my friend," said Vivier to himself, "I will tell the Emperor of your rude behaviour; I will get you rapped on the knuckles (Je t'en ferai donner sur les doigts)!" And the uncourtly Courtier was, in fact, severely reprimanded.

At St. Petersburg Vivier took such liberties with the Emperor Nicholas that, if half the stories told against that monarch were true, the imprudent Frenchman would have been arrested, knouted, and sent to Siberia. He had just brought to perfection the art of blowing soap-bubbles. The whole secret of his process consisted, as he one day informed me, in mixing with the soap-suds a little gum. Using a solution of soap and gum he was able to produce bubbles of such size and solidity that they floated in the air for an almost indefinite time, like so many small balloons. In order to entertain the St. Petersburg public, Vivier would, in the most benevolent manner, take his seat at an open window and blow his gigantic, many-coloured, bubbles until these prodigies of aerostation had attracted a multitude of lookers-on. The delighted crowd applauded with enthusiasm. Vivier rose from his seat and bowed. Then the applause was renewed, and Vivier blew larger and brighter bubbles than ever. One evening, or rather one afternoon, the rays of the setting sun were illuminating a number of iridescent balloons floating high above the point where the Nevsky Prospect runs into the Admiralty Square, when the Emperor Nicholas drove past, or rather tried to do so—for his progress was interrupted at every step by the density of the crowd.

"What is the meaning of all this?" asked the Emperor Nicholas.

"It is M. Vivier blowing his soap-bubbles," replied the Aide-de-Camp in attendance.

"What, Vivier, the French musician who played the horn so wonderfully the other night at the Winter Palace, and afterwards entertained us so much with his conversation?"

"The same, Sir."

"Go to him, then, and tell him that I should be glad if he would choose some other time for his soap-bubble performances. How wonderful they are!"

The Aide-de-Camp forced his way through the crowd, went upstairs to Vivier's apartments, and told him that the Emperor desired him not to give his exhibition of soap-bubbles at half-past three in the afternoon, that being the time when His Majesty usually went for a drive.

Vivier took out a pocket-book, consulted it carefully, and, turning to the Aide-de-Camp, said with the utmost gravity: "That is the only hour I have disengaged."

Vivier, however, had had his joke, and his exhibition of soap-bubbles, or rather of gum-and-soap balloons, was now discontinued.

The horn-playing performance to which the Emperor Nicholas had made reference was marked by one strange, marvellous, almost inexplicable peculiarity. The player sounded on his instrument, simultaneously, a chord of four notes. To produce at the same time four different notes from one and the same tube seems, and must be, an impossibility. But Vivier did it; and the fact was certified to by Meyerbeer, Auber, Halévy, Adolphe Adam, and other musicians of eminence.

The only possible explanation of the matter is that Vivier executed a very rapid arpeggio, so that the four notes which apparently were heard together were in fact heard one after the other. The effect, however, was not that of an arpeggio, but of a chord of four notes played simultaneously by four different instruments.

Besides astonishing the learned by his four-note performance, Vivier would sometimes mystify his friends, learned and unlearned, by pretending that, in a side-room, he had three other horn-players with him when he was in fact alone.

For home and for out-of-doors use the mystifications practised by Vivier were as numerous as they were varied. In an omnibus, when some grave old lady had just risen from her seat, Vivier would assume an expression of the utmost astonishment, and suddenly take up from the place where the old lady had been sitting an egg, which, meanwhile, he had been concealing up his sleeve. Or, asked to pass a coin to the conductor, he would gravely put it into his own pocket. A well-dressed, well-bred gentleman, of charming manners, could scarcely be suspected of any intention to misappropriate a two-sous piece. But it interested Vivier to see what, under the circumstances, the lawful owner of the money would do. On one occasion Vivier in an omnibus alarmed his fellow-passengers by pretending to be mad. He indulged in the wildest gesticulations, and then, as if in despair, drew a pistol from his pocket. The conductor was called upon by acclamation to interfere, and Vivier was on the point of being disarmed when suddenly he broke the pistol in two, handed half to the conductor, and began to eat the other half. It was made of chocolate.

Vivier could not bear to see people in a hurry. According to him there was nothing in life worth hurrying for; and, living on the Boulevard, just opposite the Rue Vivienne, he was much annoyed at seeing so many persons hastening, towards six o'clock, to the Post Office on the Place de la Bourse. He determined to pay them out, and for this purpose bought a calf, which he took up to his apartments at night, and exhibited the next afternoon, at a few minutes before six o'clock, in the balcony of his second floor. In spite of their eagerness to catch the post, many persons could not help stopping to look at the calf. Soon a crowd collected, and messengers stayed their steps in order to gaze at the unwonted apparition. Six o'clock struck, and soon afterwards a number of men who had missed the post returned in an irritated condition, and, stopping before Vivier's house, shook their fists. Vivier went down to them and asked them the meaning of this insolence.

"We were not shaking our fists at you," replied the angered ones, "but at that calf."

"Ah! you know him, then?" returned Vivier. "I was not aware of that."

In time Vivier's calf became the subject of a legend, according to which the animal, still in Vivier's apartments, grew to be an ox, and so annoyed the neighbours by his lowing that the proprietor of the house insisted on its being sent away. Vivier told him to come and take it; when it was found that the calf of other days had grown to such a size that it was impossible to get it downstairs.

This calf was not the only animal that Vivier turned to jocular account. In London, when I first made his acquaintance, he had put out to board, in a house in one of the streets out of Regent Street, a cock, to which he pretended to be tenderly attached. He paid eighteenpence a week for its keep, and when from time to time he visited it he would ask the landlady to leave him alone with the bird, as though he had some important communication to make it. Then sobs would be heard, and after some minutes Vivier would rush frantically out of the house with his handkerchief to his eyes—that same handkerchief, perhaps, to which he made reference when in his letter to Mr. Gye he declared that he possessed "un mouchoir, mais pas de loge."

Vivier is now seventy-three years of age. He lives a retired life somewhere in the South of France, and has for sole companion a pigeon.

THE SONGS OF SCHUBERT.

THE "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, and the glorious Symphony in C, not to speak of other treasures, secure to Franz Schubert a place among the composers who successfully attempted the highest form of instrumental music. But it is as a song-writer that Schubert first became known: the marriage of poetry with music seems, indeed, to have been the special mission of his life. In Sir G. Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" the number of published songs is given as 457. But the complete edition of Schubert's works now in course of issue by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel will include those hitherto unpublished. The first volume of songs has just appeared; in all there will be no less than ten, containing 603 songs. These are being edited by Herr E. Mandyczewski, the well-known Custos of the Conservatorium "der Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde," Vienna. This first volume commences with an interesting preface from his pen, and is accompanied by a "Revisionsbericht" giving interesting details respecting autographs, poems, &c.

The songs which are appearing for the first time (and of these the first volume contains a goodly number) of course deserve, and, no doubt, will soon obtain, notice. For the moment, however, our remarks will be confined to the two documents above-mentioned. Schubert wrote his first song ("Hagars Klage") in 1811, at which time he was fourteen years of age. In his earliest songs he appears to have taken as model J. R. Zumsteeg, whose songs and ballads enjoyed great popularity at the beginning of this century, and whom, at any rate in the matter of musical invention, he soon surpassed. The ease and rapidity with which Schubert composed are well-known; but this new edition shows that he did not always consider what was quickly done, well done. Of many of his songs there is more than one version; some appear in even three and four forms. And besides this, there are a few sketches extant, and no doubt many have been lost. Schubert did not, as Beethoven, sketch in books, but on loose sheets of paper.

The songs in this new edition will all appear in chronological order, and in studying the developments of Schubert's genius, this will prove of immense service. The composer, for the most part, affixed a date to his manuscripts, so that there was little difficulty in pursuing this method. It may be mentioned that Herr Mandyczewski has had at his disposal no less than 415 autographs; for the other songs, copies and the earliest editions have been consulted. The latter, however, are stated to be frequently very faulty, both as regards text and music. Of some songs ("Gretchen am Spinnrade," "An Mignon," "Die Nonne," "Erl-König," &c.) there are two autographs, and in certain cases they differ; sometimes they are in a different key. It is known how, after Beethoven's death, many of his sketch-books were torn up, and leaves given away to friends and admirers of the master. And some of Schubert's autographs suffered a similar fate. Of the autograph of the famous song "Der Tod und das Mädchen," there are three small, precious fragments in the possession of the "Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde," and Herr Mandyczewski tells us that the sheet to which they belonged had evidently been cut up into from twelve to sixteen pieces; on one of these preserved fragments the date of composition is given.

Of the few sketches, we may mention the one of "Der Unglückliche," which is now in the possession of Herr Nic. Dumba, of Vienna; the voice part and the bass of the accompaniment are given. There are no corrections; the last sheet is missing. Of the long and magnificent song "Viola," the first edition differs from the autograph in the possession of Dr. Max Friedländer, and Herr Mandyczewski supposes, therefore, that the former is based on a second autograph.

There are two lovely settings published of Mignon's song, "So lasst mich scheinen bis ich werde," but there is also a tempting sketch, made in 1816, of a third attempt—which, alas! breaks off at the seventh bar! And still on the same sheet of paper (which, by the way, contains also his "Harfenspieler," as yet unpublished) there is a fragment (eleven bars) of a fourth setting; it begins in the middle of a phrase, and the rest must, therefore, have disappeared. Singers can console themselves with the two published versions; but these fragments bring forcibly to one's remembrance a still greater unfinished work by the same composer, and one which stands as a type of a life, humanly speaking, itself unfinished. Herr Mandyczewski has much to say about the magnificent series of songs known as the "Winter's Journey" ("Winterreise"). In several of his songs the words written by Schubert differ from those of their respective authors. This difference sprang from two causes. Sometimes Schubert, in the heat of composition, forgot the right word or words; on other occasions he deliberately altered. The "Winterreise" offers examples of both kinds. The editor points out many interesting variations in the music between the autograph and the earliest edition, on which later ones were based. With regard to the changing of words mentioned above, there is a curious instance in connection with "Die Nebensonnen" (No. 23 of the "Winterreise"). In the second verse of the first stanza Schubert wrote, in first composing the song, and unintentionally, angeschaut in place of angesehen, but at once corrected his mistake. Yet, on copying out the song, he again wrote angeschaut, which word passed into the first edition.

Of the wonderful "Schwanengesang" series, written in the last year of Schubert's life (no wonder that the title, though not the composer's, is considered appropriate), we are told that the autograph shows that Schubert intended writing more; so this last series forms yet another broken column in the composer's temple of fame.

The preface to the first volume of the Breitkopf and Härtel edition opens thus:—

"Among the greatest masters of German song we place Franz Schubert highest. He was the first to show of what manifoldness, what development, what wealth of contents this form is capable, and in many ways he has never been surpassed. To show how he became that which in him we love and honour; how he commenced, how he worked, how rapid and astonishing was the course of his inner development, and how, finally, he obtained mastery and freedom in the sphere most peculiarly his own—that is the aim of the present edition."

We are glad to be able to state that Dr. C. H. H. Parry has become joint-editor with Sir John Stainer of Novello's well-known series of Music Primers. The scope of the series will also be enlarged by including from time to time educational works which, from their more advanced character, can hardly be classified under the head of Primers. The literary ability possessed by Dr. Parry will be an additional guarantee that the high standard of this series will be fully maintained.

MUSIC-LOVERS in every part of the English-speaking world will have welcomed the announcement, made at the beginning of the year, that the distinguished Principal of the Royal Academy of Music would henceforth be known as Sir Alexander Mackenzie. Her Majesty has never conferred the honour of knighthood on a musician more deserving of it than the composer of "The Rose of Sharon" and "The Dream of Jubal," though, indeed, it is not alone as a composer who has never bowed the knee to Baal that the new musical knight has deserved well of his country. His untiring efforts in the cause of musical education, though most appreciated by those who have worked with him at the Institution which is at once his Alma Mater and his favourite child, and at the "Associated Board" of our two greatest music schools, are known to all who concern themselves with the progress of music; and, for the rest, he has long been recognised as a prominent member of that little band who, by general culture and its resulting social influence, has so much contributed, of late years, to raise the status of the musician. Let us hope that "noblesse" will "oblige" Sir A. C. Mackenzie to live long and prosper, and to considerably increase the already large debt which we owe him.

A SERIES of papers, entitled "Bononcini's Theft," from the pen of Mr. W. H. Cummings, has recently appeared in Musical News, telling, with all completeness, how the Italian composer passed off as his own a madrigal by Lotti, how the theft was discovered, and how it came about that Bononcini left this country in disgrace. The story, full of interest, both in itself and in its relation to the art of the day, will bear repetition. But Mr. Cummings and the editor of Musical News appear to labour under a belief that they are the first to make known the facts, as found in "Letters from the Academy of Ancient Music at London to Signor Antonio Lotti of Venice. With his Answers and Testimonies." The truth is, however, that all the circumstances were set forth in this journal many months ago, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, under the heading "The Downfall of Bononcini." It is only right that whatever credit attaches to precedence should be thus claimed.

DR. SPARK, the well-known Leeds organist, is quite alive to the importance of rendering his Recitals attractive by making them, when opportunity occurs, appropriate to any event that is in people's minds for the time being. Russia has, of late, been to the fore, and Dr. Spark has devoted two of his free Recitals in the Town Hall to a "Special selection of Russian music." His programme annotations, to which he puts his initials, are so characteristic that a few extracts deserve to be quoted. Of Lortzing, the composer of "Zar (sic) und Zimmermann," he tells us that "he led a wild, unsettled life, married before he was twenty, but was always passionately attached to music, which is remarkable for its naturalness, and is always graceful and pleasing." This is a sentence capable of more than one interpretation. But even this is not quite so bewilderingly oracular as the Doctor's note on Glinka, whose "Souvenir d'une Moscow" (sic) is included in the programme: "He was a prolific composer, and was the earliest of the Russians, as gifted as any, but not so accomplished as those who followed him, and greater advantages." In the case of Rubinstein we have some interesting personal reminiscences: "When he was last in Leeds, a few years ago, he paid a special visit to the Town Hall to hear me develop the power and beauty of its famous organ, with which he expressed himself highly pleased. He had a large, clumsy hand and thick peculiar fingers, but his touch, when required, was as delicate as Chopin's, and as powerful and crushing as a steam hammer.—R.I.P." Of Chopin's "Grand" Funeral March in B flat minor, which may, by a liberal interpretation, be reckoned as "Russian music," we learn that "This favourite morceau has been arranged for the organ, and performed by all the most distinguished organists in Europe, America, and the Colonies, wherever, indeed, a less familiar piece than Handel's 'Dead March from Saul' was required. It is admirably adapted to the genius of the organ, and has been constantly played by Best, Stainer, Bridge, Hopkins, Smart, Archer, Rea, Cooper, &c., with thrilling power and effect. Nothing has been written more organic (if I may use the word) than the lovely trio which intersects the March proper." It would seem that "Wagnerism" does not meet with Dr. Spark's approval, for he regards it, apparently, as one of Tschaiowsky's merits that his works "are fine specimens of originality, beauty, and power, and are not in the least tinged with blatant Wagnerism." The programme ends with Schubert's Funeral March, composed on the death of Alexander I., which we read had been introduced by the Doctor at a Concert a few days before, "but, owing to the displacement of the organist's eye-glasses, it could not be done full justice" (sic).

À propos of Mr. Grimshaw's letter on "Reform on the Orchestra," which appeared in our last issue, a correspondent writes: "If the trumpets and trombones were placed in the centre of the orchestra, and their place at the back taken by the wood-wind, the change might be a step towards the solution of a problem which has puzzled many Conductors, from Wagner downwards. Your readers know the famous passage in the Scherzo of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, where the second subject is played by the 'wood-wind' against the fortissimo assertion by the strings of the leading figure of the first subject. A similar effect occurs at the close of the first movement of Schubert's great Symphony in C, where the theme of the Introduction—also played by the wood-wind—is combined with an octave figure in strings ff. In these, and other passages to be found in the works of the great masters, the 'wood-wind' cannot make itself heard against the volume of sound which, in a modern orchestra, is produced by the strings—unless, indeed, these are played much less loudly than the composer has indicated. Wagner, it will be remembered, suggested re-scoring as a way out of the difficulty, and got, naturally, little thanks for so doing. Failing this drastic remedy, the adoption of some such plan as Mr. Grimshaw suggests might profitably be tried."

THE first volume of the new Breitkopf and Härtel edition of Schubert's songs, to which reference has been made in another column, contains no less than twenty-one numbers published for the first time—at least, so far as we can make out from the useful catalogue in Sir G. Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians." The new volume, unfortunately, has no marks to distinguish the new ones. No. 1, "Hagars Klage," was written by Schubert at the age of fourteen, and made such an impression on Salieri that he at once procured instruction in thorough-bass for the gifted youth. The autograph of the song, or, rather, scena, occupies twenty-eight (fifteen printed folio) pages. The music bears the marks of youth, but also of those of genius. The second, a setting of Schiller's "Des Mädchens Klage," written between 1811-14, contains some fine music. The passionate published setting of the same words bears the date 1816. No. 3, "Eine Leichenphantasie," poem by Schiller, occupies no less than eighteen pages. There are many changes of tempo, and the music, if unequal, shows at times both power and imagination. No. 4, "Der Vatermörder," is a bold, declamatory song, and trying for the voice. No. 8, "Die Schatten," is melodious and in many ways attractive; it begins, curiously, in the key of A and closes in C. Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 27 are settings of poems by Matthison, full of simple charm and delicious colouring. No. 25 is a beautiful, delicate song, the words of which have been set to music by Beethoven and Schumann, and also a second time by Schubert himself. It is the famous "Adelaide" of Matthison, or, rather, the poem rendered famous by the composers above-mentioned. But besides these songs, and a few others which now must be passed over, the volume contains different workings of songs already published. Everyone knows, or ought to know, that magnificent song "Der Taucher," with its wonderfully descriptive pianoforte accompaniment. But though long, its length is—to use Schumann's word—heavenly; it occupies no less than thirty pages of print. The published song, however, which has long been printed, is the second of two attempts made by Schubert; the second is practically a revision of the first. It would prove an interesting task to compare the two. And in similar manner we have Schiller's "An Emma" in three forms, and Goethe's "Schäfers Klagelein" and the "Scene aus Goethe's Faust" each in two forms. The number—to say nothing of the beauty and dramatic power—of Schubert's songs has often been the subject of wonder, but this new edition will add to that wonder; for, like Beethoven, Schubert tried and tried again, until, let us hope, he was satisfied.

THE new staff of the Saturday Review appears to include a comic reviewer of music, who, in our contemporary's issue of the 5th ult., adds to the gaiety of nations as thus: "On the whole, then, the bulk of the organ-music that has reached us is not pleasant matter for consideration. It almost seems as if organists, by too long neglect of rhythm, had lost all sense of its subtleties, and were unable, therefore, to appreciate true melody; if they seek something lively as a change from the pulseless flabbiness of their invertebrate fugues (we do not mean Bach's), and the charms of those 'soft voluntaries' which are merely hymn-tunes long drawn out, nothing appeals to their undeveloped, savage rhythmical sense save the music hall tunes of Wély and Mr. Michael Watson, the brazen, assertive Salvation Army marches of Mr. Hamilton Clarke, and, we may add, the shoddy of Widor and Guilmant. We cannot tell how else to account for the vulgarity and poverty of modern organ music." Again: "On going through the rest of Messrs. Novello's Services and Anthems we find it hard to distinguish one from another. There is no thematic matter, no life, no colour, and only in rare cases any technical mastery. If our composers would study with a modern eye and human heart the old burial service of William Croft (with Purcell's 'Thou knowest, Lord'), which has been re-issued by Novello, they might reach ground on which it is possible to build lastingly. There is blood in such music: it speaks to us with a human accent. Except for our two modern chords, painfully dragged in, the anthems of Messrs. Hugh Blair, Steane, Naylor, and Drs. Varley Roberts and Armes might have been written before Mozart's time; and Sir Joseph Barnby's 'Christians, awake,' suggests that his brain was weary after a bout of ballad-composing. In any of these one looks as vainly for love of beauty as for a hint of manhood, the best that is offered us instead being sickly drawing-room mediævalism. There is less sincerity in this, though performed in big cathedrals on never so grand a scale, than in Mr. Elliot's Voluntaries played on a wheezy harmonium in a dreary village church." Even those who are the butts of this comic reviewer cannot complain. The fooling is so obvious that the most simple reader will not take it seriously.

WE regret to see that Mr. G. A. Sala has, in his recently published autobiography, been indirectly responsible for the resuscitation of the old legend about Paganini's generosity to Berlioz. It appears that Madame Sala, Mr. Sala's mother, was a teacher of music, who gave occasional Concerts at which it was the etiquette for professional artists to give their services for nothing, or for very little. On the occasion in question, Malibran and Paganini were both engaged—for fees of fifty and thirty guineas respectively—and both stuck out for their terms. So when Madame Sala went to pay over the money she took the infant G. A. S. with her, thinking that the great artists would relent at the sight of the embryonic Emperor of journalists. However, to her sorrow, they both took the money. But as the mother and the child were leaving, Paganini ran after them, and with the words, "Take that, little boy," he thrust a piece of paper into his hand, which proved to be a bank-note for fifty pounds. Now, we do not wish for one moment to throw any doubt on the accuracy of Mr. Sala's recollection of this incident, which represents Malibran as grasping and Paganini as generous. But, as we have hinted above, it has lent new credence to the now entirely discredited version of the Paganini-Berlioz incident. That the 20,000 francs came to Berlioz through Paganini cannot be doubted, but he was merely the channel, not the fountain-head, the real donor, from feelings of delicacy, preferring to keep in the background. And as for Malibran's generosity, it would be "knocking in an open door," as the French say, to take up the cudgels in her behalf.

MUCH has been written about Pigeon-English, Baboo-English, and other perversions of our native tongue; but there is one dialect which has never hitherto engaged, as it should, the attention of philologists. This is the German-English in which advertisements from the Fatherland are couched. The lottery announcements, the instructions in boxes of toys, and other examples will readily occur to anyone, but for weird charm the price lists and circulars of German musical instrument makers would be hard to beat. One recently to hand thus describes the place where cheap fiddles are made: "The place, Erlbach in Saxony, with about 2,000 inhabitants, mostly musical instrument makers (including all their numerous fittings), consisting thoroughly in a divided house manufactory, there is no doubt may be at present still little known for foreign importers on account of the near Markneukirchen and in default of a railway connection, though in this country are very reliable and wilful producers." It further informs us that "the possessors of said firm, friendly men, correspond and speak english french german spanish and italian." Another friendly firm says: "By the present I have the honour to send you the designs and prices of my pianoes which rejoice the general favour of all my customers." This gentleman writes his circular in all the languages above-mentioned, and with equal beauty of style. And yet we are always having the German clerk held up to us as a linguistic prodigy. Verily our foreign friends take a terrible revenge for our maltreatment of their opera librettos!

MESSRS. BORWICK and Greene's Concert, which we notice elsewhere, has had the result of eliciting a very wonderful article from the Saturday Review. Thus, in speaking of the rendering of the "Dichterliebe," the writer observes that, with an inferior accompanist, "the delicate trickles of melody that almost gave one the scent of violets and woodbine would have been flattened and ironed out into common-place colourless academic counterpoint." The process of ironing out a trickle is, indeed, one before which, in the words of the hymn, "imagination's widest stretch in wonder dies away." Elsewhere the writer speaks of Mr. Borwick as being strong in "those gentler domestic emotions, essentially human, that in the beginning prompted man to drag his bleeding lady-love by the hair to his cave, that afterwards led him to adopt a less strenuous mode of courtship, and to become, as a rule, polite to all well-dressed mankind, and which, it is hoped, will eventually make us love our neighbours as ourselves." Perhaps the best description of this new style of criticism is furnished by the writer himself, when he speaks of "a nightmare dinner, where one is expected to take now a mouthful of beef, now of pudding, now of salt." One of the most aggressive of our poetasters has informed us that a Society has been formed for the Prevention of Cruelty to Minor Poets. Really there is room for some organisation which should exercise a somewhat similar function for the benefit of those artists who are made the targets of the hysterical nonsense slung at them by impressionist critics.

A SOMEWHAT alarming story comes to hand from Hungary. A ball took place in the town of Temesvar, preceded by a concert, at which the audience listened at loud-speaking telephones, fixed against the walls round the room, to a military band which was playing at Arad, to operatic selections given by artists in the theatres of Buda Pesth, and to popular songs which were being given in Szegedin. Then the room was cleared, and hundreds of young people danced for hours to music played in all these towns. "What possibilities," writes a foreign correspondent of the Manchester Courier, "this piece of news opens up before us. Soon one orchestra in a town will be able to play dance music for a dozen dances going on at the same time." We have preferred to call the news alarming, in view of the terrible disparity between supply and demand which is foreshadowed by the extension of this principle. For if an orchestra or a singer can be turned on or transmitted to a dozen towns simultaneously, a unit will suffice where twelve would have once been necessary. And yet in the face of this impending economy of talent, our schools and academies are turning out well-trained musicians in greater numbers than ever.

ON December 20, at a meeting of the Dublin Senate, a Grace was passed, on the motion of Professor Haughton, senior Proctor of the University, conferring on Professor Prout the degree of Doctor of Music honoris causa. Mr. Prout's eminent services to music, and his remarkable learning and ability should, the ordinary mortal may think, have long ago been recognised by a Doctor's degree, especially when it is remembered how few "Mus. Docs." have even half of Professor Prout's knowledge; but having made him Professor of Music at their University, the Dublin Senate, it seems to us, performed a work of supererogation in afterwards making him a Doctor. A Professor makes Doctors, or at least authorises them to be made, and is therefore on a higher plane than they. The University is to be congratulated, however, on its excellent choice of a Musical Professor, and that is the chief thing. By making him, in addition, a Doctor, they at least did no harm. With an Irishman in the Cambridge Music Chair and a Yorkshireman in that of Dublin, the "mutual reciprocity" of the sister nations should have nothing to fear.

WE are glad to note signs that the year in which falls the two-hundredth anniversary of Purcell's death is not to pass without fitting celebration of the genius of England's greatest musical son. Dr. Bridge has already devoted Gresham Lectures to the subject, in which new facts concerning the composer appear, and which we understand he intends to publish; and under his direction a special performance is being arranged to take place at the Abbey on November 21—the date on which Purcell died. It is hoped that one of Purcell's works for the stage, or selections from these, will be given during the year, and also that his instrumental music will receive attention. With the exception of a few songs, the bulk of his secular music is practically unknown to ordinary music-lovers. At the Abbey an anthem by Purcell is to be given each week, and Dr. Bridge hopes to be able to erect a new organ-case there in memory of his illustrious predecessor.

ON the afternoons of the 27th inst. and March 6, the Lectures to students at the Royal Academy of Music will be delivered by Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams, who will deal with the subject of Greek Music. "The Hymn to Apollo" will be sung by Mr. Wing, and Mr. Williams proposes to exhibit diagrams explaining the notation and "showing how close is the historical connection between our musical scale and that of the Greeks, in spite of the strange scales which certain writers are endeavouring to show are the only possible ones indicated by the notation." At these Lectures an interesting experiment will be made which has never before been tried in public. Mr. Williams will use for his illustrations several pianofortes which have been specially tuned by Messrs. Broadwood in exact accordance with the various scales described by Aristoxenus.

WE are asked by a well-known pianist to say that Herr Emil Sauer was trained, up to his seventeenth year, on the Deppe system, and that he owes his wonderful technique almost solely to that method. At the age of seventeen he went to Nicholas Rubinstein and studied with him for two years, at which time his training at the hands of others ceased altogether. Our correspondent adds that Herr Sauer speaks as enthusiastically of the Deppe method as did Miss Amy Fay and the late Miss Bettina Walker.

THE TALK OF TORQUAY.

SAID the people of Torquay,
"Oh, my goodness, do you see
Paderewski's shortly coming down from town,
With his pianistic feats,
And the prices of the seats
Seem, just like the great performer, coming down?"

Said the people of Torquay,
"We're all going, there will be
An enormous crowd of people in the hall;
And before he goes away
He will make a good day's pay,
Though he charges but five shillings for a stall."

Said the mighty Mr. P.,
"Do you dare suggest to me
I should play to wretched beggars such as these?
You will want me after that,
Me, to carry round a hat,
And to let the people give me what they please!"

Said the people of Torquay,
"Disregarding snowstorms we Struggled here through weather execrably bleak.
What is this? He will not play?
He has calmly gone away?
We should say of lesser men, Well, that is cheek!"

Said the people of Torquay,
"We might almost think that he Was an autocratic emperor, a Tzar;
Only kings are more polite,
There is no one who is quite
So conceited as these foreign players are."

And the thought occurs to me,
"One five shillings, that would be
More than poor Beethoven sometimes had per day.
But Beethoven, what was he
When compared to Mr. P.,
Or to any of the gentlemen who play?"

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

IN answer to my request for musical epitaphs, a Canterbury correspondent has been good enough to send the following curious example: "Here lieth the Body of PETER ISNELL (30 years Clerk of this Parish). He was respected as a pious and a mirthful Man, and died in his way to Church to assist at a Wedding, on the 31st day of March, 1811, aged 70 years. The Inhabitants of Crayford have raised this Stone to his cheerful Memory and as a Tribute to his long and faithful Services.

The Life of this Clerk was just three-score and ten, Nearly half of which time he had sung out Amen. In his Youth he was married, like other young Men, But his Wife died one Day, so he chaunted Amen. A Second he took; she departed; what then? He married and buried a Third with Amen. Thus his Joys and his Sorrows were Trable, but then His Voice was deep Bass as he sung out Amen. On the Horn he could blow as well as most men, So his Horn was exalted in blowing Amen. But he lost all his Wind after three-score and ten, And here, with three Wives, he waits till again The Trumpet shall rouse him to sing out Amen."

It is obvious that mirthfulness did not become extinct at Crayford when good old Peter Isnell, of "cheerful memory," passed away.

HERE is a fine saying of William Blake. Let all artists perpend: "I assert for myself that I do not behold the outward creation, and that to me it is hindrance and not action. What, it will be questioned, when the sun rises, do you not see a round disc of fire, somewhat like a guinea? Oh! no, no! I see an innumerable company of the heavenly host, crying 'Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God Almighty!' I question not my corporeal eye any more than I would question a window concerning a sight. I look through it, and not with it." Barren the window when the view beyond disappears. As said Wordsworth in his glorious Ode:—

But there's a tree, of many, one,
A single field which I have looked upon,
Both of them speak of something that is gone:
The pansy at my feet
Doth the same tale repeat;
Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

Apropos to William Blake, the gentlemen who are proclaiming the freedom of modern music from allegiance to the canons of art may be interested to read a verse from one of the "Songs of Innocence" and the comment made upon it by the London Quarterly Review for January, 1869:—

Sleep, sleep, happy child,
All creation slept and smiled;
Sleep, sleep, happy sleep,
While o'er thee thy mother weep.

The reviewer says: "Many such strains as these deserve to be better known than they are, notwithstanding the bad grammar that mingles with their innocent music. There is a serene unconsciousness of arbitrary human law in genius such as this; it floats with the lark in 'a privacy of glorious light,' where the grammatical hum of the critics cannot disturb its repose." We are reminded of the startling question of the Yorkshire orator when repudiating the bonds of syntax and pronunciation: "Who invented grammar, I should like to know? I've as much right to invent grammar as any of them." If the gentlemen aforesaid had their way, there would be plenty of musical "Yorkshire orators" among us. When the equivalent of William Blake makes his appearance, he may invent what grammar he pleases, but equal liberty will not be granted to upstarts whose only claim to notice is defiance of rule.

PRACTICAL jokes survive in the Isle of Man. Last summer Mr. John Dunn, after declining to play at a Concert in Port St. Mary, mentioned to the promoters a certain "Herr Lauderhof von Teufelsdreckschienen, who had just returned from a most successful tour in the Chinese Empire, where he had played on his newly acquired Straduarius violin, which had cost 3,000 guineas," adding that his friend was coming on a visit to himself, and would, no doubt, give them a solo. It says much for the insular innocence of Manxmen that this preposterous story was credited by the Concert-managers, who at once announced the distinguished foreigner as an attraction. Mr. Dunn then had to explain the "joke," which the meek islanders took in good part. The foregoing particulars have been supplied by Mr. Dunn himself, whom I should suspect of trying a "mild sell" upon THE MUSICAL TIMES but for his statement that they are "quite true." I note with admiration that Mr. Dunn subscribes himself, "England's Solo Violinist."

In 1837 the famous Lablache communicated the following to Le Monde Parisien: "The first time in my life that I ever felt the full effect of one of Handel's masterpieces, or became satisfied how beneficial it must be to a young musician, was at the great York Festival of 1835, when, in the immense Cathedral, a thousand musicians, directed by Knyvett, performed the oratorio of 'The Messiah.' I became speechless with admiration and surprise; it was as though I had seen a colossus of Michael Angelo advancing upon me." The passage I have put in italics is made particularly fine by the bold idea of a colossus advancing with ever more and more impressive grandeur.

I TAKE the following from St. Michael's Parish Magazine, Folkestone: "The other night at the choir practice, the boys were 'lazy' in singing over an old anthem they knew well. 'What are you about?' said Mr. Husband; 'I could play this anthem with my eyes shut'; and one little fellow, not intending in the least to say anything rude, instantly looked up and said: 'Bet you twopence, sir, you couldn't!'" Alack for the decay of veneration!

A CORRESPONDENT forwards a song entitled "Summer," published in a periodical known as Band of Mercy. It presents a striking case of ineptitude, and also a proof of the fact that nothing is too bad for print. One line will suffice by way of example:

But the summer's the sea-son that's dear-est to me.

There is no "mercy" here for accent and harmony.

MR. WHATELEY W. INGALL writes complaining of the remarks made upon his proposal to establish an orchestra rate for the purpose of encouraging music in our parishes. He urges that those observations were calculated to place him in a false position with regard to the readers of this journal and desires to set himself right. By all means. There was no intention to misrepresent Mr. Ingall, and there is much pleasure in quoting all that is material in a somewhat lengthy communication. Mr. Ingall writes:—

So far from grudging the deserving poor their simple requirements, I am in favour of adding occasionally an unasked-for luxury; and rather than impede education, I would seek to advance it in various useful directions, as witness my remarks in the same letter on Public Libraries. If you had printed the entire paragraph instead of dividing it, every intelligent person could easily have grasped my full meaning, for I say distinctly "this is not the time and place to animadvert upon the existing expenditure; but I am persuaded that under more careful and stringent management a sensible reduction, under these heads, might be effected." By this I mean, that well disciplined management had no need to be so costly, and that under more systematic arrangements, judicious and satisfactory purchasing could be effected at more economical rates; and I am convinced there is urgent need of reform in both these directions, which would certainly result in a marked diminution of parochial expenditure. I think, too, greater discrimination should be exercised in the admission of chronic idlers into the Union, with the view of lessening their number and correspondingly decreasing the outlay on this account. As to education, I have always endorsed that of the compulsory kind (and gladly would I welcome compulsory labour for the habitual loafer) within limits—that is to say, I uphold the principle, but have no faith in Free Education when indiscriminately applied, but only in really necessitous cases, where want of funds in the household is clearly proved. As it is, I have every reason to believe that this pinched class bears a very small percentage to the total of the children taught gratis; and, I repeat, that under these circumstances, the system, so enlarged, is detrimental to the better class ratepayers, and not only destitute of any recommendatory qualities, but mischievous in the extreme, being calculated to feed the till of the public house, to the manifest disadvantage of ratepayers' families.

The reader, now having before him Mr. Ingall's statement, quoted last month, and the foregoing more detailed utterance, can judge the matter for himself.

INCREASING knowledge of facts has crushed out many fond beliefs, and will soon make needful a revision of our proverbial expressions. We say "As mute as a fish," but fishes are not mute—not all of them. Read the following, which I take from a newspaper:

The scievia, a little six-inch chub variety of the lagoons of Italy, sticks its head above the water and sings a dainty song equal to that of some species of warbling birds. Irigia hirundo (the sea swallow) is known to every fisherman of the Danube and the Rhine by the peculiar grunting noise it makes. Irigia nolitans makes a whining noise like a puppy, while the scievia gather in bands to hold regular concerts, which no doubt originated the fable of the sirens. Some naturalists have likened the note of the gurnard to that of the cuckoo. There are many different kinds of fish which give utterance to more or less musical tones. The maigre, a large sea-fish, when swimming in shoals, utters a purring noise that may be heard from a depth of twenty fathoms. Lieutenant White, in his "Voyage to the China Seas," relates that his crew and himself were extremely astonished by hearing certain musical notes from beneath and around the vessel. They were various, like the bass notes of an organ, the sound of bells, the croaking of frogs, and a pervading twang which the imagination might have attributed to the vibrations of some enormous harp. For a time the mysterious music swelled upon them, and finally formed a universal chorus all around, but as the vessel ascended the river the sounds diminished in strength and soon ceased.

If I rightly remember, a talking fish was once exhibited in London. Will not some enterprising entrepreneur give us a Concert of singing fish? It would naturally take place at the Aquarium.

I HAVE received from Mr. Thomas Elliston, of Sudbury, some particulars concerning a monument erected since 1891 in the churchyard of Lavenham, Suffolk, to the memory of the Rev. Joseph Morrison Croker, for thirty-five years rector of the parish. Its interest for present purposes springs from the use of music as a part of the inscription. The monument is in the form of a cross, ten feet high, with three steps. On the face of the base is an inscription recording the names of the rector and his wife. "Upon the surface of the upper step," writes Mr. Elliston, "is inscribed:—

Such unfeign'd repentance teach us,
That Thine absolution reach us.

and just below, upon the riser, the verse—

Abide with me from morn till eve,
For without Thee I cannot live;
Abide with me when night is nigh,
For without Thee I dare not die.

On the four treads of the middle step is cut and leaded in musical notation the treble part of hymn tune, No. 252, Ancient and Modern (first tune in D); on the riser below the words of verses 1, 2, 6, and 7 (but, singularly enough, the first two lines of the first verse have changed places). On the lower tread is the treble of the tune (in E flat), No. 188, Ancient and Modern, and running round the lowest riser the words of verses 1, 2, 3, and 6, 'Jesu, meek and lowly.' A stone curb surrounds the grave. The above hymns and tunes were favourites of the deceased, who was a lover of music."

THE following sonnet comes as a lady's earnest tribute to supreme genius, and I cannot refuse it a place:—

MOZART.

Sweet singing bird! whose morning dawned so bright,
High music's splendour lit thy earliest days;
Thy true notes drew from all men wondering praise.
But that fair day soon darkened into night,
Thy life oppressed by poverty's chill blight,
Not all thy music thee from pain could save,
Thy wearied frame dropped to a nameless grave,
Thy spirit sought the land of deathless light.
Yet still thy music lingers with us here,
Like song of lark that's hidden in the sky—
A brooklet's ripple o'er the desert drear—
A spring of pleasure that is never dry!
Bringing to weary hearts new hope and cheer;
Truly, thou art not dead, and shalt not die!

E. D.

MUSIC in France is scarcely to be congratulated upon the popular use of many of its terms in connection with crime and criminals. A police cell, as everybody knows, is called a "violon," the window bars being compared to the strings of the instrument. Hence, to file through the bars is "jouer du violon," an equivalent expression being "jouer de la harpe." An old name for the stocks is "psalterion," and to be put in the stocks "mettre au psalterion." The Parisian slang for poor is "violoné"—applied to a man just out of prison and hard up. "Musette" being argot for voice, "couper la musette de quelqu'un" is to cut somebody's throat. The thieves call an informer of a certain class a "musicien," and "passer à la musique" signifies to be brought into the presence of informers for identification. "Musiquer" is a cardsharp's term for marking a card with the nail. All this is really too bad.

DR. CHRYSANDER has been good enough to send me, through Messrs. Schott, a reprint of Gottlieb Muffat's "Componimenti Musicali per il Cembalo"—a collection published at Vienna in 1735, under the patronage of the Emperor Charles V. The original edition was a small one, hence the excessive rarity of copies, while, as far as I can ascertain, the present reprint is the first. It must not be supposed that, admirable as Muffat's pieces are, they have been re-issued entirely on their own account. Dr. Chrysander has edited and the German Handel Society has published a new edition, because the great composer of "The Messiah" helped himself liberally to ideas from the Muffat collection. The result is to throw most interesting light upon Handel's procedure, but, for obvious reasons, the matter cannot be discussed in a paragraph. It deserves full consideration. I propose, therefore, to deal with the subject in THE MUSICAL TIMES for March, and to show, with the help of music type, some of the more important passages which Handel appropriated, together with the use he made of them.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

INTEREST in the work of this Society during the present season will culminate with the first performance in London of Dr. Hubert Parry's majestic Oratorio "King Saul," which is promised for the 7th inst. Meanwhile, brief reference is due to the two Concerts given during the past month. There was a minute of excitement when Sir Joseph Barnby stepped on the platform to conduct the Albert Hall shortened form of "The Messiah," on New Year's Day. That the esteemed Conductor should so soon be able to re-appear after a serious, if not dangerous, illness was felt to be a matter for general rejoicing, and executants and audience alike gave expression to this in a manner that must have convinced Sir Joseph Barnby of the great regard in which he is held by all classes of professional and amateur musicians. As to the rendering of "The Messiah," there is no need for details. The choruses went as smoothly as usual, and full justice was done to the solos by Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley.

"The Golden Legend," which is now looked for annually, was duly presented on the 17th ult., when a large audience assembled, testifying to the abiding popularity of Sir Arthur Sullivan's work. The choir was in very good form on this occasion, and the unaccompanied Evening Hymn was peremptorily encoired, Sir Joseph Barnby reluctantly yielding to the demand. Miss Esther Palliser was again the principal soprano, and sang her share of the music with artistic expression, though her voice did not seem to be quite in perfect order. Mr. Ben Davies, of course, gave satisfaction as Prince Henry, and a favourable opinion was generally conceived respecting Mr. Douglas Powell—a young baritone who appears to be rapidly coming to the front. Mr. Powell has a fairly powerful voice, of pleasant quality, and should, in due course, take a high position in his profession. The part of the Forester was well sung by Mr. Charles Copland.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The fifth Concert of Mr. Henschel's present series began with a fine performance of Brahms's "Tragic" Overture—one of the few examples of modern abstract music which it would not be ridiculous to offer as illustrations of the sublime in art, and one of the few examples of this master, be it said, that make it easy to understand the enthusiasm for him which, with certain minds, is fast becoming a cult, for none but a great musician could have written the "Tragic" Overture, and even with great musicians such inspirations are rare. Three other nobly beautiful works were in the programme—Mozart's "Ever young and ever fair" Symphony in E flat, the performance of which, though by no means devoid of delicacy, precision, tenderness, and grace, should have possessed a greater share of these qualities; Wagner's wonderful mosaic, known as "Siegfried's Journey to the Rhine," and the "Tannhäuser" Overture, which is becoming a little hackneyed as a Concert piece. Mr. Diémer, whose finished and brilliant technique and refined style won him last year a host of admirers in London, played Saint-Saëns's Fourth Concerto, and pieces by Chopin, Stojowski, and Liszt. In the softer portions of all these he gave unalloyed pleasure, but—possibly misled by the size of the hall—in the forte passages he struck his Erard so viciously that it yielded sounds resembling nothing so much as blows upon a tea-tray. Your Erard is an aristocrat among pianofortes, and when rudely treated knows how to snub the offender most effectually.

"HÄNSEL UND GRETEL."

HUMPERDINCK's fairy opera "Hänsel und Gretel," which, last year, was played in over forty towns of Germany, and has, we understand, already made a rich man of its composer, was produced at Daly's Theatre on Boxing Day for the first time in this country, and in English, an excellent translation of the libretto having been specially made by Miss Constance Bache. The book, by Adelheid Wette, based on one of the charming tales of the brothers Grimm, is eminently suited for musical treatment, by reason of the simplicity of its plot, the contrast of its incidents, and the variety of feelings which the musician is required to embody. The supernatural element also contributes not a little towards the rapprochement of drama and music. So that altogether these merits quite outweigh the comparative lack of strong dramatic interest, which, at one time, was feared as a possible danger to the success of the work in this country. With regard to the music of the work, it combines geniality, tunefulness, and humour with dramatic power, mastery of form, counterpoint, harmony, and orchestration to an extent that almost justifies us in calling the composer "a latter-day Haydn." Like that great master, Herr Humperdinck has drawn largely upon the phraseology of folk-song for his themes, and like Haydn he develops them with an economy and ingenuity that reveal the true artist, who, from every little seed of melody, knows how to extract flowers innumerable. The opera was produced under the musical direction of Signor Arditì, who also first introduced "Cavalleria" to an English audience, and under whose experienced bâton the orchestral portion of the score, which, in portions, is as complex as that of "Die Meistersinger," came out well, and yet did not overpower the singers—albeit none of these had phenomenal voices. The chief burden of the performance falls on the representatives of the two children, who are on the stage nearly the whole time. These parts were delightfully played and sung by Miss Marie Elba—one of the best stage "boys" we remember to have seen—and Miss Jeanne Douste, who, in spite of the fact that her artistic experience has been gained chiefly as a pianist, acted with much tact and point. The Father and Mother were adequately represented by Mr. Charles Copland and Madame Julia Lennox, and Miss Edith Miller (as the Witch), though scarcely experienced enough to realise the full possibilities of the part, lacked neither spirit nor intelligence. Her broomstick dance narrowly escaped an encore. Miss Marie du Bedat and Miss Jessie Hudleston impersonated the Fairies of Sleep and Dawn respectively.

Mozart's pretty little operetta "Bastien und Bastienne," which had not before been played in England, preceded "Hänsel und Gretel," and served not only to please, but to revive wonder at the precocity which made such a work possible to a composer of the mature age of twelve. Very interesting, too, was it to note, in their embryonic state, peculiarities familiar to all in Mozart's later works. The little piece was carefully sung by Miss Hudleston, Mr. Reginald Brophy, and Mr. Joseph Claus. The two works were played nightly, and at several Matinées at Daly's Theatre, up to the 25th ult. They were announced to take place in the daytime, at the Gaiety Theatre, dating from the 28th ult.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

THE series of German plays given at this theatre during December gave way, on New Year's Day, to Strauss's lively comic opera "Die Fledermaus," which has not been heard in London since its performance at the Alhambra in 1876. Travelled Englishmen need not be told that the bright and humorous little work holds the stage abroad, though it is practically unknown here. Its plot, of a mild "Palais Royal" order, is not too improbable, and offers plenty of opportunity for good character-acting; and the music, though quite subordinate in quantity—the piece could quite well be played without it—is of such excellent (light) quality that it might be trusted to save even a poor libretto, which is saying a great deal. It is in Strauss's most characteristic manner; that is to say, full of tunes of the most irresistible sort—tunes that make you want to jump up and dance to them, which ring in your ears for days afterwards, and which haunt you with something of the fascination of certain strains of Schubert. There must surely be an influence peculiar to Vienna! The company which interpreted the opera was, as regards all the chief characters, of quite remarkable excellence, Mesdames Cservary and Borges carrying off the honours among the ladies, and Herren Klein, Katzorke, Karfiol, Petersen, and Schulhof creating the greatest amusement throughout the evening by their clever acting and singing—the latter being, however, less satisfactory in one or two instances than the former.

The same company, with certain additions and subtractions, also gave Millock's "Der Bettelstudent," on the 12th and following evenings, and again scored a success due to bright music, a fairly amusing play, and a spirited and eminently intelligent performance. Both works were directed with skill and energy by Herr Victor Hollander, whose orchestra, though small, lacked neither vigour nor good-will—it is tone-quality, however, left something to be desired.

THE MUSIC TO "KING ARTHUR."

THE heroic sentiment and wild passion of Mr. Comyns Carr's version of the Arthurian legend, which, under the title of "King Arthur," was produced by Mr. Henry Irving, on the 12th ult., at the Lyceum Theatre, lends itself so sympathetically to music painting that it is to be regretted Sir Arthur Sullivan has not written a special series of Entr'actes for this most artistic and sumptuously mounted play. It may be true that even a Lyceum audience pay but little attention to musical preludes, although this statement is open to question, since a few irrepressible chatters will effectually hide many listeners; moreover, if Mr. Irving were guided only by the principle of wide appreciation, many artistic details now seen on the stage would be omitted. In the absence of introductions specially written for the various scenes, Sir Arthur has done, perhaps, the next best possible by his selection from his previous compositions. The abbreviated version of his "Marmion" Overture, written for the Philharmonic Society Concerts of 1867, breathes a spirit of romanticism that befits it for its position of Prelude to the prologue, and the Imperial March at least suggests the martial and regal element of the first act. The excerpts, however, from the "Tempest" music, which precede the second and fourth acts, and the portion of the Symphony in E which ushers in the third act, are less suggestive of that which follows them in the play. More satisfactory is the incidental music proper. The most effective portion of this is heard during the prologue, the impressiveness of which is greatly enhanced by the graceful choral song sung by the spirits as they float in the magic mere, and the subdued instrumental accompaniment to the spoken text, during the recital of which themes are heard subsequently associated with the sword Excalibur and the Queen, Guinevere. The number next in importance is the "Chant of the Grail," written for mixed voices, and appropriately founded upon a broad, church-like subject. This is developed at some length, ultimately becoming jubilant in character as the knights depart, full of confidence, in search of the Holy Grail. A charming May Song, written in three parts, sung by the Queen's handmaidens, much increases the enjoyment of the beautiful scene, when the curtain rises upon Act 2, and the "Sleep" chorus which accompanies the "Passing of Arthur" also heightens the dramatic effect. The skill of the composer is especially noticeable in the suggestive rise and fall of the soft instrumental music which follows, with remarkable faithfulness, the speeches of Merlin, in some instances the rhythm of the verse being most happily echoed by the music. It only remains to add that Mr. Meredith Ball conducts an excellent orchestra and that the vocal numbers are effectively sung.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THESE performances were resumed on Saturday afternoon, the 12th ult., with a programme consisting wholly of familiar and esteemed works. It would be superfluous to praise Beethoven's early Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in A (Op. 12, No. 2), or the Bonn master's last Sonata in C minor (Op. 111), which, according to announcement, was given by desire. Mr. Leonard Borwick's rendering of the most remarkable Sonata in two movements ever penned is technically and intellectually perfect, though perhaps a little cold in the first movement. Brahms's String Sextet in G (Op. 36) may not be quite so popular as the earlier work in B flat (Op. 18), but it shows a great advance in individuality of utterance. The first and last movements are veritable tone-poems of a pensive character. Mr. Hugo Becker played Locatelli's Violin Sonata in D—as transcribed for violoncello by Signor Piatti—very finely, and Mr. Santley sang airs by Handel and Rubinstein in his best manner.

The first Monday Concert of the New Year was to have opened with Rubinstein's Quartet in F (Op. 17, No. 3), an early work by the Russian virtuoso and composer, but the production could not take place owing to the sudden illness of Mr. Becker, and Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29) was substituted, Mr. Ould taking the violoncello desk. The only other concerted work was Dvůřák's very fine Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81). Mr. Leonard Borwick, the pianist of the evening, was heard at his best in Schumann's Fantasiestücke (Op. 111), and Mr. David Bispham sang Schubert's inspired song "Der zwerge" with fine expression.

For the first time at a Saturday performance Smetana's Quartet in E minor was presented, on the 19th ult., and was again so well received, in spite of its constructive irregularities, that it will probably form a feature in many future programmes. The delicate and perfectly artistic rendering of Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata in C (Op. 53), by Miss Ilona Eibenschütz, evidently satisfied the majority of the audience, though it lacked power. But Beethoven's music admits of variety in interpretation and the performance of Miss Eibenschütz fully merited the applause it received. The only other instrumental work in the programme was Brahms's splendid Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26), a finer example of the composer's genius than the companion Quartet in G minor (Op. 25), which, however, may at present be the more popular of the two. Madam Bertha Moore was happy in her choice of songs—Liszt's "Knowest thou the Land" and Henschel's "Hush thee, my Babe"—and in their execution.

Rubinstein's promised Quartet in F (Op. 17, No. 3) was duly performed on Monday, the 21st ult., this being the last Concert we can notice at present. It appears that the Russian composer and virtuoso wrote in all about ten String Quartets, of which the present is one of the earliest. Though not altogether symmetrical in construction, the movements are not marked by the painful diffuseness and irregularity which mar some of Rubinstein's later utterances. The two middle sections—Allegro in A minor and Adagio in C—are full of expressiveness and charm, and there is much of interest in the first and last movements. The Quartet was not by any means difficult to follow at a first hearing, and it evidently created a very favourable impression. The pianoforte solo was also a novelty, being several movements from Bach's French Suite in B minor, beautifully played by Miss Eibenschütz. If pianists would draw more frequently upon the old master's Suites, and leave alone distorted versions of his organ works, amateurs would be grateful. Mr. Norman Salmond was admirable in Handel's "O ruddier than the cherry" and two songs by Brahms, and the Concert ended with Beethoven's early Pianoforte Trio in G (Op. 1, No. 2).

MESSRS. PLUNKET GREENE AND LEONARD BORWICK'S RECITAL.

THE last of these enjoyable and, from an educational point of view, valuable performances, took place in St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of the 11th ult. It is much to be wished that Messrs. Greene and Borwick will give another series of Recitals in London at no distant date, especially as the large attendance on the present occasion showed that they are already meeting with due appreciation. Perhaps the most interesting feature in the programme was Schumann's cycle of songs, entitled "Dichterliebe" (A Poet's Love). They are sixteen in number, and form a portion of that wonderful series of 138 songs which Schumann penned in 1840, when he was made happy by his union with Clara Wieck. But the lyrics do not all exhale the spirit of happiness; some are imbued with that of melancholy, which ever seemed congenial to the composer, notably "Ich grolle nicht," the most familiar of the set. At any rate, Heine's verses could not in any case be more picturesquely illustrated in music, and Mr. Plunket Greene infused into their interpretation all the artistic feeling they demand. Subsequently, the admirable vocalist introduced some old Greek, Breton, and Hungarian melodies, so that his share of the programme was thoroughly interesting. Nor was that of Mr. Leonard Borwick unworthy of comparison. Commencing with Bach's "Suite Anglaise" in A minor (No. 2), the pianist passed on to harpsichord pieces by Scarlatti, and pieces for the modern keyboard instrument by Professor Stanford, Mr. A. Somervell, Mr. F. Korbay, and Schubert—Liszt, all of which were beautifully played, the Recital being indeed an unqualified success.

DOLMETSCH CONCERTS.

THE first of a series of four Concerts of the kind identified with Mr. Dolmetsch's name was given at the Salle Erard, on the 15th ult., before a large and distinguished audience. It consisted entirely of English music of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Beginning with three most expressive pieces for three viols by King Henry VIII., it included songs by Henry Lawes, Purcell, and still earlier composers whose names are unknown; divisions on a Ground by Christopher Simpson, harpsichord pieces by Purcell, a Suite for four viols by Matthew Locke, six pieces from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and a Suite for viols and harpsichord by W. Lawes. All these works—so delightfully fresh to modern ears, so old and yet so new—were presented exactly as intended by the composers. The vocal pieces (most artistically sung by Mr. Douglas Powell) were accompanied, some by the lute, others by the harpsichord; the virginal pieces were played on an instrument made in Venice in 1550 and described by Mr. Dolmetsch as "probably the oldest keyboard instrument in playing order"; those for harpsichord were played on the magnificent instrument belonging to Mr. Fuller Maitland; and those for strings on instruments of the ancient type. The net result was a thoroughly "old-world" evening, the spell of which was but slightly broken by the modern costumes of performers and guests, and the interesting historical remarks of the concert-giver. The executive honours fell to Miss Hélène Dolmetsch and Mr. Fuller Maitland. The young lady's performance on the Viol da Gamba of the enormously difficult piece by Christopher Simpson was a veritable triumph; and Mr. Maitland once more made plain the fact that, as a performer on the "predecessors of the pianoforte," he has at present in London no rival. Of the remaining Concerts of the series, to be respectively devoted to Italian, German, and French composers, the second was announced to take place on the 29th ult. The third and fourth will take place at Queen's Hall on the 12th and 29th inst.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—LECTURES.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN began, on the 16th ult., in the Concert-room of the Royal Academy, a proposed series of Lectures on the life and works, more particularly the pianoforte works, of Beethoven. The lecturer commenced his remarks by a brief description of the circumstances which surrounded Beethoven's early life, drawing therefrom many useful lessons for the benefit of his numerous listeners. The pianoforte pieces analysed on this occasion were the Rondo in A, published early in 1784; the seven Bagatelles (Op. 33), the eight Variations on a Theme for four hands, by Count Waldstein; and a little-known Sonata in D for four hands. Several of the Bagatelles were played by the lecturer, who called attention to the signs of humour contained in the first, the enharmonic changes observable in the one in F, and the use of the inverted pedal and syncopated bass notes in the Coda of the Bagatelle in D, as all indicative of the idiosyncrasies of the master's subsequent music. The Variations and the Sonata were excellently rendered by Miss Wilson and Mr. G. Aitken.

MUSIC AT THE GROCERS' COMPANY'S SCHOOL, HACKNEY.

IT is not often that we can spare space to notice school performances of music. Such events are, as a rule, more appropriately chronicled in the columns of our contemporary, the School Music Review. But there are occasions when school concerts are of such exceptional merit that they deserve to be recorded in the widest possible manner, if only in order that the responsible teachers may have the credit and public recognition that are their due. The recent performances of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera "The Gondoliers," at the Grocers' Company's School at Hackney, certainly come under this head. The opera was performed four times (on the 22nd, 27th, 28th, and 29th ult.) to large audiences (freely invited).

It was admirably staged, and all the parts were astonishingly well performed by boys. Even the dances, the well-known cachucha and the gavotte, were simply excellent, and excited the enthusiasm of the crowded audiences. Some of the boys displayed unusual talent in acting and singing. The choruses showed the finest training, the upper notes being delivered with a fervour, attack, and tone not often heard even on the operatic stage. Of course, some arrangement was necessary to get over the difficulty of adapting the boys' octave to the tenor and bass octave; but the ingenuity of Mr. Ernest Newton, the Conductor, was fully equal to this emergency. The accompaniments were played by a small band (to a large extent composed of old boys) aided by a pianoforte, at which Mr. F. Pickford presided. We understand that the headmaster, the Rev. C. G. Gull, himself assisted to drill the boys.

TENTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

(FROM OUR DUBLIN CORRESPONDENT.)

NOTWITHSTANDING the severity of the weather, about 150 members of English and Scottish Sections attended the Dublin Conference on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th ult., making, with about 100 members of the Irish Sections, a total of 250 or more.

At the opening meeting, on the 2nd ult., in the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor welcomed the Society to Dublin in a pleasant and genial manner, and, after the Report had been read and passed, Sir John Stainer gave an address, entitled "Does music train the mind?" He drew a comparison between the amount of study required for a musician to qualify himself for his profession at the present day and that of a Greek musician who set the chorus of a play to music; and, after speaking of the attitude of modern society towards music, said that modern music must train the mind in so far as its true interpretation required the aid of the intellect—the musician had to know what he thought as well as what he felt. The musician himself could no longer remain a mere clever craftsman. He must explore all the bye-paths on either side of his course, he must be familiar with the gradual development of his art as well as the form in which it was at present exhibited to them; and, what was still more important, he must realise the fact that all this training had for its sole object the better appreciation in himself, and the better interpretation for others, of the beauty, the idealism, and the emotional expression of the creative genius of the composer. In short, the art of music was inviting the help and interest of all who were pushing forward in the foremost van of intellectual advancement. The facts which surrounded the art of music and its effects called for investigation from philosophers, scientists, historians, and students of all kinds. This outburst of intellectual life compelled modern musicians to strive to keep up to date in all that concerned their art and its exposition; and it was calling into the ranks of the profession young men who half-a-century ago would have considered it beneath them, but who now found that it afforded, if seriously undertaken, a fine mental training and a splendid arena for intellectual progress.

On the same afternoon the Conference re-assembled in the front Hall of Trinity College, when a paper on "The growth of Handel's 'Messiah'" was given by Dr. A. H. Mann, with lantern pictures of a number of manuscripts, showing the original form of many of the themes in "The Messiah." Dr. Mann showed the written dates, indicating that the work was finished, in twenty-four days, but he considered that this represented the mere writing out, and that the composition itself was a work of time. The Lecture was further illustrated by voices and orchestra, Professor Prout playing the pianoforte parts. On Wednesday evening the Leinster Section gave a brilliant Conversazione and Reception in the Science and Art Museums, 2,000 guests being present.

On the 3rd ult. the morning meeting was held at the Royal Dublin Society's Council Hall, Dr. C. W. Pearce presiding. The chairman read a paper on "Organists and their relation to the Clergy." He referred to this relation as being somewhat strained at present, and gave numerous instances of cases in point, some of which were very humorous. Mr. Algernon Rose followed with an essay on "Greater Britain musically considered," and opened out a scheme of consolidation between all workers in the field of music throughout the Empire on which the sun never sets, for their advantage both in the present and particularly in the future. He said that the outlook of our musical posterity, without such association, was not a very rosy one. No discussion was allowed on either paper. After an exhibition of lantern views illustrative of the life of Handel, and explained by Mr. Norman Cummings, the meeting separated, and the remainder of the day was devoted to seeing the sights of Dublin, notably Guinness's Brewery.

In the evening a Concert of the most enjoyable character was given by the members of the Irish Sections, consisting chiefly of their own compositions. Nothing too long or of too serious a nature was allowed on the programme, but, on the contrary, after a selection of part-songs and solos, the Leinster Section entertained their musical brethren with a musical joke in the shape of an Irish Toy Symphony, in which the gravest members of the profession were to be seen and heard playing instruments hitherto unknown by name, shape, or sound. Mr. Frank Manley, who conducted, also took a humorous view of his business, and the continued laughter which accompanied the performance showed how much the joke was appreciated.

On the 4th ult. (Friday) business was resumed in the Royal Dublin Society's Library, Dr. Mann occupying the chair. A paper, entitled "Responsibilities of a Music Teacher," was read by Miss Margaret O'Hea, of the Leinster Section, which was listened to with interest and debated with spirit, and commanded a hearty vote of thanks. Mr. Chadfield "On Registration" was then heard. In the course of his able paper he insisted that the Incorporated Society of Musicians is the basis of registration, as it embraces members of all other Institutions which were in themselves exclusive, as the Universities, the Chartered Colleges, and other examining bodies, and that its machinery for registration is complete. In replying to a cordial vote of thanks, Mr. Chadfield stated that he would submit a plan to the members. The General Meeting of the Society took place at 3 p.m., in the Royal University of Ireland. Mr. John Barrett, of the Western Section, was chairman, and the business was of a routine character. Sir A. Mackenzie, Professor Niecks, and Professor Prout were elected chairmen for the next Conference in 1896, and Signor Randegger chairman of the General Meeting. A Banquet at the Shelbourne Hotel, at which Sir John Stainer took the chair, and a Ball and Supper at the Mansion House, by invitation of the Lady Mayoress, concluded the Conference festivities.

Compositions by the following members of the Incorporated Society of Musicians were heard during the Conference: Sirs J. Stainer, A. Sullivan, R. Stewart; Drs. Culwick, Jozé, Marks, Smith; Messrs. Reay, Rooke, Seymour (Mus. B.s); Barry, Bast, Cowen, Esposito, Horan, and Marks, jun. The principal executants were: Misses E. Oldham, A. Elsnor, E. Connolly, J. Rosse, L. Hackett, and A. Shellard; Messrs. E. Cox, M. D'Alton, J. Marchant, C. Kelly, J. Horan, and Th. Werner.

Edinburgh was unanimously selected as the next place of Conference.

GRESHAM LECTURES.

MORE than usual interest was imparted to Professor Bridge's Hilary series of Gresham Music Lectures, delivered at the City of London School, owing to the first and third and a portion of the second being devoted to the results of the lecturer's recent researches concerning the life and works of Henry Purcell, who died November 21, 1695, and the bi-centenary of whose death the Professor thus determined to celebrate. Much careful and original investigation had revealed that the house in Little St. Anne's Lane, Westminster, so long regarded as Purcell's birthplace, is undeserving of that honour, and that there is no proof that the composer ever lived in Dean's Yard, or that he inhabited a house situated there which now bears his name. No record of his baptism had been discovered, and no ratenayer of the name of Purcell was to be found in the Westminster rate-books for 1658 and 1659. It was proved, however, that Purcell's father lived in the Great Almonry, which stood just opposite the present Westminster Palace Hotel, from 1661 to 1664, in which year he died, and the register of St. Margaret's parish showed that "Widow Purcell" lived in Tuttle Street (now Tothill Street, near the Aquarium) from 1665 to 1680, when she gave up her house and went to live with her son. In 1681 the composer paid rates for a house in Great St. Anne's Lane, "beyond Westminster Abbey," and it was to this house that (in 1683) were invited purchasers of his first set of six Sonatas "for violin, with a thorough bass." Two years later he moved to a house in Bowling Alley East, at the back of Dean's Yard, now the upper part of Tufton Street, and for the last two years of his life he paid rates for a house in Marsham Street. The moral humorously drawn by the Professor from the discovery of these facts was "Always pay your rates—it may be useful to your reputation hereafter." From the coat of arms on his tomb and other evidence it would seem that Purcell came of a Shropshire family, that his wife's name was probably Peters, and that she was possibly a daughter of a Captain Peters, who lived in the parish of Westminster. In The Post Boy for November 28, 1695, had been found: "Dr. Purcell was interred at Westminster in a magnificent manner. He is much lamented as a very great master of music." No entry could be found of Purcell's marriage, which, however, the Professor thought took place in 1681; and, in corroboration of his wife being a Peters was the fact that one of Purcell's children was named Mary Peters, and a certain B. Peters (possibly a brother-in-law) witnessed his will. The Professor dismissed the story of Purcell's death having been caused by his wife refusing to admit him one stormy night, on his returning home after a carouse, as inconsistent with the amount of work he accomplished in so short a period. Concerning this work, the Professor had much to say of an instructive and interesting nature. Purcell was shown to have been greatly influenced by the Italian school, through the medium of Nicola Mattei, a brilliant violinist, who came to England in 1672, and who, according to Roger North, was the means of establishing the Italian style of music in this country. Purcell, in his remarkable preface to his first set of Sonatas above referred to, dedicated "to the reader," declares his endeavour to imitate the Italian method of writing, and explained the meaning of several Italian terms, such as Adagio, which were thus probably used by an English composer for the first time. It was remarkable that Corelli's first set of twelve Sonatas were published the same year as those of Purcell, but the latter had written his some time previously, as Purcell, in his preface, refers to the delay caused in their publication, owing to the thorough bass being "engraven, a thing he had not at first intended." They were the first Sonatas of the kind we possessed written by an Englishman, and in common with other productions from the same pen exhibited a marvellous perception of beauty and appropriateness of expression. In conclusion, the Professor said he had not made these researches in any ungrateful spirit to the efforts of previous investigators, but that "Time's glory was to unmask falsehood and bring truth to light."

The vocal illustrations consisted of a trio, "Sweet Tyranness," published in 1667, which, owing to Purcell being then only nine years of age, had been attributed, but the Professor thought erroneously, to Purcell's father; a two-part song from the incidental music to "Epsome Wells," a comedy written by Thomas Shadwell and played at the Duke's Theatre in 1673; the well-known song, "Nymphs and Shepherds," and the chorus, "In these delightful pleasant groves," from "The Libertine," another play by Shadwell; and a selection from the same writer's version of Shakespeare's "Timon of Athens," of which in his dedication he modestly says, "I can truly say I have made it a play." The instrumental excerpts were Purcell's sixth Sonata in four movements for two violins and a bass, a work possessing great charm, and the Overture and "Curtain tune on a Ground," from "Timon of Athens."

Purcell's and his wife's coat of arms, a portrait of the composer, and a sketch of the house in Pye Street, which until now had been regarded as the composer's birthplace, were amongst the exhibits.

The second Lecture was devoted to "Early Organ Music," the composers mentioned being Claudio Merulo the "player of the second organ in St. Mark's, Venice," in 1533, and the earliest composer to write music that displayed the distinctive genius of the organ; Giovanni Gabrieli, who succeeded Merulo at St. Mark's, Venice; Jan Pieterzoon Sweelinck, of Amsterdam, whose compositions contained the first examples of the use of the pedals independently; Samuel Scheidt, a native of Halle, and the pioneer to improve organ music in the Lutheran Church; and the Italian, Frescobaldi, the first musician to make one idea generate others, and one of the originators of the fugue form. The work of the three last-named culminated in Bach. Some amusing anecdotes were also told concerning Froberger, who came to London in 1662, and in such poverty as to be glad to accept the position of organ-blower to Dr. Gibbons at Westminster Abbey. Specimens of the writings of some of the above-named organists were excellently played on the organ in the hall by Mr. Davan Wetton, the last piece being a Toccata in A, by Purcell, a brilliant and masterly composition, which it was difficult to believe had not emanated from the illustrious Bach.

The final Lecture, delivered on the 18th ult., dealt with the life and writings of Arcangelo Corelli, the choice of this excellent old master as a subject for discourse being peculiarly appropriate by reason of the influence his writings exercised on English music in Purcell's time, and also by his having died on January 18, 1681. The Professor bore eloquent testimony to the artistic character of the works of Corelli, which laid the foundation of modern violin music. The examples played included a delightful Sonata for violin solo, most sympathetically played by Miss Lilian M. Wright, and a Concerto Grosso, or triple concerto, with accompaniment for stringed orchestra, also admirably played. A most capable string quartet was provided at the Lectures in Miss L. M. Wright, and Messrs. Hopkinson, Hobday, and Werger, who at the last Lecture were assisted by a small orchestra, under the direction of Mr. J. E. Borland; and the vocal excerpts were most effectively sung by Messrs. W. Fell, E. J. Bell, D. Price, and chorister boys from Westminster Abbey.

"IS SECULAR MUSIC SACRED?"

THIS was the title of an address delivered by the Rev. E. Husband, incumbent of St. Michael's, Folkestone, at his 19th monthly "Sunday Afternoon for the People," on the 6th ult. Mr. Husband prefaced his remarks by Henry Ward Beecher's saying: "All good music is sacred if it is heard sacredly, and all poor music is execrably unsacred." "What was secular music?" he asked, and answered: "There is no such thing, in reality, as 'secular' music." Music could not be divided into sacred and secular—it was one. Music was music or it was not. If music were divisible into sacred and secular, then to keep the secular part on earth and send only the sacred half up to Heaven was to send an incomplete and imperfect thing to Heaven. But just as in jewellery there was real gold and imitation gold, so under the name of music there was real music and imitation music. But we could not call imitation gold "gold," nor a piece of glass in a ring a "diamond." So, bad music was not really music, but a horrible insipid imitation—a desecration of a divine thing.

To many the question whether a piece of music was sacred or secular was decided by the fact whether it was used in a church or upon the opera stage; others (a large number) decided by the printed title. If, for example, a march were called "The May Day March," it was "secular"; but if the same piece had its title altered to "The Cathedral March," then it would instantly become "sacred." Mr. Husband here played three hymn tunes—one from "The tune book as used at St. Alban's, Holborn," the others from a work entitled "Hymns and tunes carefully selected from all sources, both old and new, and of the most spiritual character," and, in contrast to these, a few bars from Wagner's "Tannhäuser," and said: "The hymn tunes are termed 'sacred.' I cannot, myself, allow that they are 'music' at all; but, using popular language, I will say that they are 'secular' to the very core, while the example from 'Tannhäuser' is, I maintain, thoroughly sacred music, because it is true, pure, inspired music." Surely, the speaker continued, it was an insult to human intelligence to call these hymn tunes "sacred" and the excerpt from "Tannhäuser" "secular." If two coins appearing to be sovereigns were to be tested, their value was not decided by the fact that both were stamped with a like image, but whether they were made of real gold. So, he maintained, the sacredness of a musical composition was not decided by its title, or whether it were the music of a mass or an opera, but simply by the test whether the composition was really inspired music or only that worthless imitation of real music that often went by the name of "sacred music," just because it was so-called "Church music," or had a name connected with sacred things on its title-page. Music was sacred wherever it was played, be it in church or theatre.

REVIEWS.

Six Easy Pieces for the Violin, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Composed and Illustrated with Original Drawings on the Stone, by Hubert Herkomer, R.A. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is a sumptuous publication, most creditable to all who have had to do with it. The musical man, if he be in any degree a bibliophile, will give it a place in the most honourable and best cared-for part of his library, as representing within one cover a notable union of arts and crafts. Professor Herkomer does not now appear for the first time as composer and illustrator. His "Idyll," published a few years ago, was an even more important demonstration of varied powers than the "Six Easy Pieces." That work, however, was costly; its successor, being moderate in price, stands a good chance of achieving popularity, and of preparing the way for other examples in which the union of the Professor's pen and pencil shall be happily exemplified. The solos, respectively entitled "Frühlingslied," "Klagelied," "Liebeslied," "Herbstlied," "Wanderlied," and "Abendlied," carry out the promise of the title in being "easy." They are, for the most part, simple pieces in aria form; but the diversity of the subjects has enabled the composer to secure ample variety of effect, and, therefore, needful contrast. The entire book might be played through at a sitting without weariness, not only for the reason just stated, but also because Professor Herkomer shows in most instances a fine sense of melodic propriety in relation to the subject dealt with. No purpose would be served by an examination of the pieces in detail. They tell their own unaffected story in a manner that needs no interpreter. There are as many full-page illustrations as songs, all of them boldly drawn and strikingly effective. The artist has secured a certain unity by making, in every case save one, the same female figure representative of the idea expressed by the titles. In the "Frühlingslied" this graceful, lightly-draped form gathers flowers on a bank. In the "Klagelied" it stands out from a black background with covered head and drooping face, the arms thrown up in abandonment of grief. In the "Herbstlied" the autumn wind is blowing the garments and hair into wild confusion. So with the others, the happiest use being made of the significant, even eloquent figure. We commend this publication to amateurs of taste. A limited number of copies are issued with the illustrations on vellum and signed by the artist.

Studies in Modern Music. (Second Series.) Frederick Chopin, Antonin Dvořák, and Johannes Brahms. By W. H. Hadow, M.A. [Seeley and Co.]

MR. HADOW's earlier volume of essays—so elegant in style and so acute in perception—inspired the grateful reader with an agreeable anticipation of further favours from the same pen—anticipations which have been fully realised in the volume before us. We are not prepared to say that the book is without faults. One encounters, for example, a certain intellectual intolerance which leads the writer at times to indulge in such exaggerations as the statement that "there is no more melancholy spectacle of human infirmity than a so-called 'Ballad Concert' of the present day." And, again, Mr. Hadow's excessive fondness for literary parallels—often exceedingly felicitous—occasionally leads him into disputable comparisons, as, for example, when he calls Goldmark a musical Meredith. But such blemishes as these may be readily overlooked in view of the general sanity of his critical attitude, and the happy mixture of wide culture and special training which he invariably contrives to focus on the matter in hand. The amount of labour and research condensed into these pages is really remarkable. Thus the study of Dvůrák is not only by far the most exhaustive account of the Bohemian composer and his works which has yet appeared in the English language, but includes the results of a pilgrimage to Prague, where Mr. Hadow consulted the scores of Dvůrák's unpublished operas. Dvůrák is treated not as an isolated figure, but in relation to his antecedents and environment, and in particular to the remarkable renaissance of art in Bohemia, of which Mr. Hadow gives a succinct but vivid historical sketch. In proof of Mr. Hadow's impartiality and immunity from partisan spirit, we can give no more striking instance than the way in which he deals with the burning question of the relations of Chopin with George Sand. His ardent sympathy with and admiration for Chopin as an artist never blinds him to his shortcomings as a man, and whether we agree with the view advanced in these pages or not, there can be no doubt as to the skill with which he collects and marshals his evidence to rebut the charges of callousness and heartlessness brought against the great novelist. By way of a general introduction Mr. Hadow prefixes to his biographical studies a preliminary section, in which he has added a superstructure to the essay on Musical Criticism in his former volume. After discussing the faculty of appreciation, and the three "main types of affection" under which the mode in which we are influenced by music may be classified, Mr. Hadow arrives at the conclusion that while Art "contains sensuous and emotional elements, the importance of which there is no need to undervalue, it is only artistic if it subordinate them to the paramount claims of reason. Even the purest and noblest emotions," he continues, "do not constitute a sufficient response. We are only in a position to criticise those when we have passed through the emotional stage and emerged into the intellectual region beyond. To judge a composition simply from the manner in which it works upon our feelings, is no better than judging a picture or poem merely from our sympathy with its subject." Into Mr. Hadow's elaborate and interesting analysis of formal beauty—in other words, of the intellectual laws on which artistic perfection ultimately depends, exigencies of space will not permit us to enter. But we may call special attention to the valuable sketch of the evolution of the complex organism of the sonata form. As regards the future, Mr. Hadow holds that while there will be new methods in the days to come, the principles of Art will remain unaltered. "No doubt," as he puts it, "there will be further modification of detail—some 'Shakespearian convention' abandoned, some scheme of artistic composition revised; but every step that brings greater freedom will bring greater responsibility, and will shift the issue from artificial laws to the great code of human intelligence." In the concluding pages on Function, Mr. Hadow pronounces unhesitatingly against the opinion that music has any immediate moral bearing. He is very happy in his condemnation of the quest of the recondite or of "musical euphuism," as he calls it, and he dwells with much force on the futility of that carping criticism which rejects a work because it is not great or flawless. To quote his words: "It is only conceit and dishonesty, and self-conscious artifice, that merit absolute and unqualified reprobation." In the essay on Chopin, apart from the question on which we have already adverted, we may note the sound sense which Mr. Hadow displays in dealing with the legendary treatment of Chopin's youth by his biographers; his spirited defence of Chopin in his character of the "exquisite" and carpet-knight; his happy explanation of Chopin's conflicting attitudes towards his work before and after it was in proof; and the very acute remarks on the effect on Chopin's style of the tonality of his native music.

Here is an excellent summary of the weaknesses of Chopin: "When he is at his strongest, we miss that sense of reserve power, that quiet irresistible force, 'too full for sound and foam,' which characterises the dignity of the noblest art. He can be passionate, vehement, impetuous, but he expends himself in the effort. He can express agitation, challenge, defiance, but he lacks the royal magnanimity that will never stoop to defy." The biographical sketch of Dvůrák is not only full, but enlivened by much interesting and even diverting matter. The only disappointing thing about it is that Mr. Hadow should have treated the events of the last five years so perfunctorily, and shirked the burning question involved in the use of the negro melodies by Dvůrák in his last Symphony and Quartet. The "appreciation" which concludes the chapter is admirably done. "He is always," writes Mr. Hadow, after some searching remarks on Dvůrák's melody and rhythm, "rather hampered than aided by the collaboration of the poet; his chromatic style is better suited to strings and wind than to the peculiar limitations of the human voice; his vigorous rhythms are in some degree impeded by the slower articulation of the words; his sense of form finds its most natural expression in symphonic and concerted music." As in the case of Dvůrák, Mr. Hadow has spared no pains in the compilation of the purely biographical part of his sketch of Brahms. We may cite, in illustration of the ingenuity of Mr. Hadow's literary analogues, his comment on the episode at Leipzig, when, at a performance of Brahms's E minor Symphony, the audience trooped out after the third movement and left the Finale to be played to empty benches: "It may be remembered that the subscribers to Fraser's Magazine once threatened to withdraw their patronage unless the editor discontinued a farrago of exasperating nonsense called by the unmeaning name of 'Sartor Resartus.'" In regard to the gradual growth of an appreciation of Brahms's works in this country—we may incidentally observe that Madame Schumann was the first to play one of his works in public in England, in the year 1856, on the occasion of her first visit—Mr. Hadow does well to recognise the services of Sir George Macfarren in his "admirable essay on the 'German Requiem.'" His view of Brahms is summed up in the sentence in which he observes that "he has completed, for present purposes, the emancipation of musical form, not by the false freedom of anarchy, but by the true freedom of a rational code"; and in answer to the possible objection that Brahms's music is circumscribed in its range of feeling and wanting in gaiety, he points out that "it is merely a relic of primitive barbarism that makes us look upon music as an adjunct to conviviality, as a pleasant emotional stimulus designed for the amusement of an idle hour. Music is an art of at least the same dignity as poetry or painting, it admits of similar distinctions, it appeals to similar faculties, and in it, also, the highest field is that occupied with the most serious issues." Res severa est verum gaudium, in short, is Mr. Hadow's motto, and his whole book testifies to the truth of the adage. It is the outcome of much earnest study and thought and cannot fail to refresh and stimulate any right-minded reader.

Chapters on Church Music. By the Rev. R. B. Daniel.
[Elliot Stock.]

"THE present volume is an attempt to treat Church music as considered not only from an artistic, but also from a devotional and a practical point of view." Such is the opening sentence of the preface of a thoughtful series of essays that will be read with profit by all, although the subject is one upon which there is little likelihood of there being common agreement. The author is well qualified to speak on this matter "as one having authority," for he is not only a clergyman of the Established Church, but has served as organist of the Parish Churches of St. Mary Bredin and St. Mary Bredman, Canterbury, and, moreover, has listened to the musical services of the Greek, Roman, and Lutheran churches. Very many of his remarks will meet with common acceptance; others, however, will excite protest. With regard to hymns, every thoughtful worshipper will agree "that words and music that do not come up to a high standard of excellence are unworthy to be used in divine service." Mr. Daniel's opinion on congregations participating in the rendering of the church service will, however, meet with less general approval. To him "the choral service seems unsatisfactory . . . silence is not praise, and listening to singing, and thinking how beautiful it is, is not prayer." The choral communion he "cannot away with," and he bluntly denies that music can increase the solemnity of this service, although he admits there is rubrical authority for singing the "Creed, Ter Sanctus, and Gloria in Excelsis." Other statements are still more open to question, as that "Ave Marias are often sung" in some of our Protestant churches. His attitude towards Gregorian melodies may be gathered from the following: "Their great age is an insufficient reason for preferring these feeble beginnings of Church music to the tunes of modern music, and affirming them to be the best music for use in public worship." All organists may read with profit the remarks on the responsibilities and requirements of their office; and all clergymen, especially those whose parishes are in the country, will find food for thought in the chapters on "Women and boys in church choirs," although Mr. Danieſ takes a somewhat narrow view in his objections to the employment of boys as chorists. He totally ignores the salutary moral influence thus brought to bear on thousands of boys, and seems to be ignorant of the excellence of the singing of our little lads in the majority of our churches. The respective duties of the clergyman and the organist are admirably defined; and, as coming from one of themselves, it may be hoped that the former will be duly impressed with the truth of the statement that "in almost every case clergymen, by troubling themselves about the music, defeat their own purposes. Unquestionably they would ensure having good music by securing the services of good and reliable organists, and then leaving the choir and the direction of the music in their hands."

Novello's School Music. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The fact that the title we have given to the present brief review should be possible speaks much for the advance in musical education as regards young people. Very recently we noticed a considerable quantity of music intended specially, if not exclusively, for school purposes; but more is to hand, showing clearly a distinct demand. Mr. Hamilton Clarke provides the vocal scores of two juvenile operettas, "Pepin, the Pippin" (words by Mr. Joseph Despicht), and "The Missing Duke" (words and music both by Mr. Hamilton Clarke). It need scarcely be said that the music in both works is at once bright, piquant, and simple, for the composer possesses the rare secret of being able to write without elaboration and yet with effect. The vocal scores of the cantatas have Staff and Tonic Sol-fa notations, and musicians who have the conduct of juvenile classes will find it well worth their while to make acquaintance with "Pepin, the Pippin," and "The Missing Duke." A similar composition is "Red Riding-Hood's Reception," also described as an operetta, with libretto by Edward Oxenford and music by Thomas Facer. This will employ a number of young people of both sexes, and elaborate stage directions are given. The music is full of tune and artistic touches, though certainly not too difficult for juvenile performers. Books 48 and 49 of "Novello's Two-Part School Songs" contain together a dozen compositions and transcriptions by various writers, including Handel, Schumann, Rubinstein, Abt, Pinsuti, Myles B. Foster, and Battison Haynes. Books 50 and 51 each consists of half-a-dozen bright and, as to the words, humorous songs for schoolboys, verses and music by the Rev. W. J. Foxell. Differing from these is a book of twenty-five "Songs for the Little Ones," by W. W. Pearson, intended for nursery and infant school. They are mainly elementary and tuneful settings of time-honoured nursery rhymes. Book 5 of "Part-Songs for Treble Voices," edited by Mrs. Carey Brock and Miss A. Sidebotham, is meant for children of somewhat larger growth, its contents being five compositions and arrangements in two and three parts. With the exception of the last two books, the whole of the above are printed in both the accepted notations.

The Miller and his Wife. Song. Words by R. S. Hichens. Music by J. M. Capel. [Robert Cocks and Co.]

Scots Minstrelsie. A National Monument of Scottish Song. Edited and arranged by John Greig. With original coloured illustrations by J. Michael Brown. Vols. 4, 5, 6. [Edinburgh: T. C. and E. C. Jack.]

ABOUT a year ago we dealt with the claims of this interesting collection as exemplified in the first three volumes. The completion of the work shows that the praise we were then able to give to half is deserved equally by the whole. The number of beautiful Scottish melodies is so great that Mr. Greig has found it easy to maintain in the later volumes the level of interest and beauty established in the earlier ones; and, for the rest, his accompaniments have been modelled on the plan laid down from the first, and the historical, biographical, and critical notes are as full of information as could reasonably be expected in a work intended for popular use rather than for reference or antiquarian study. Vol. 6 contains a glossary and a general index, both of which bear evidence of thought and care.

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 223-227.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

In the first of these pieces we have an Intermezzo in D minor, by C. Charlton Palmer, marked Andante quasi allegretto, but rather sad and plaintive in character, with scarcely varying rhythm of two quavers in the second and fourth beats of every bar, 4-4 time. But the effect is not monotonous, and the writing is at once musically and easy. No. 224 is a Grand March by Hamilton Clarke, bright in character, melodious, and easy to play. The other compositions are by Mr. E. Bossi, and consist of an Andante con moto, an "Aspiration," and a "Grand Chœur," being Op. 97, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. The first is a piquant and melodious movement, discursive and rather elaborate, but not difficult as regards the work for the pedals. The close is exquisitely peaceful. The next curiously named piece is an Allegretto in A flat, and resembles the former in two respects, in that it has an agitated middle section and comes to a very quiet ending. The Grand Chœur may possibly recall the well-known work with the same title by M. Guilmant, the key, D major, and the time measure, 3-4, being identical. It opens and concludes in grandiose fashion with full chords, and towards the middle there are some effective fugato passages, but the whole cannot be regarded as difficult.

Cremona. An Account of the Italian Violin Makers and their Instruments. By Friedrich Niederheilmann. Translated from the original, with Notes and an Appendix, by W. H. Quarrell, M.A. [Robert Cocks and Co.]

THIS little volume contains a large amount of valuable information. Within the space of less than a hundred pages it deals with the origin of the violin; the six schools of violin making—Brescia, Cremona, Naples, Florence, Venice, and the Tyrol; the development and perfection of violin making and the old Italian varnish; discusses labels, deceptions, forgeries and other subjects of interest to lovers of instruments played with a bow; gives an account of the collector, Luigi Tarisio, who did so much to make known the now famous Italian makers of violins, and whose enthusiasm was so great that it is said of him, "When once he had sold a masterpiece he never lost sight of it, and only waited for a favourable opportunity to get it once more into his possession"; and furnishes an exhaustive list of names of the Italian violin makers (with characteristics of their works), and of minor makers, manufacturers of lutes, &c.

Nearer, my God, to Thee. Sacred Song. Music by Thomas Adams.

Angel Voices. Song. Words by Hubi Newcombe. Music by Clement Locknane.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE first of these is furnished with a pianoforte and ad libitum violin accompaniment, and is an unpretentious but effective setting of the well-known hymn.

The second is a more conventional addition to what is commonly regarded as appropriate for Sundays at home, but is melodious and grateful to sing. Both songs are suitable to a mezzo-soprano or a baritone voice.

Mazurka Fantastique en la. Pour Violoncelle et Piano. Par Leo Stern.

Studies in the Style of the Great Masters. For the Pianoforte. By J. H. Bonawitz.

[Robert Cocks and Co.]

MR. STERN has written a melodious and bright Mazurka for the instrument which he plays so well. It is well adapted for performance in the concert-room, but its difficulties are not great, and those that may exist for the executant are justified by their effectiveness.

The Studies are remarkably clever imitations of the styles of four great masters, who shall be nameless here as in the music, the idea evidently being to induce the student to find out by analysis of the originals the composers suggested. The little pieces are short and musically interesting, and are specially welcome as conducive to the cultivation of versatility, a quality of which the ordinary pianist is in most cases deficient.

Song of the Nubian Girl. Words by Moore. Music by J. Jacques Haakman.

Come back, dear Love. Song. Words by Herbert Eldcroft. Music by Alfred J. Dye.
[Charles Woolhouse.]

THE setting of Moore's well-known lines is delightfully unconventional, and happily reflects the spirit of the poem. Its vocal compass is contained in the octave from E to E.

The second song is a tuneful love song, the passion being, however, interfered with by over-repetition of some of the lines.

The Nameless Lassie. Words by James Ballantine. Music by Alexander Mackenzie, Arranged by his son, A. C. Mackenzie. [Robert Cocks and Co.]

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE comes of a musical family. His grandfather and father were violin players, and the latter published Scotch airs for violin, also songs. The arrangement of his father's music must have been to the son a labour of love. The character of the song is thoroughly Scotch, and both melody and accompaniment have the charm of simplicity.

Barcarolle; Nymphean; Recollection. By Ernest H. Smith. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THESE are three simply written, tuneful pianoforte pieces, suitable to young players or those of moderate executive ability.

Chaminade Melodies. Chant et Piano. [Joseph Williams.]

THESE are twelve in number, of which No. 8 is a "Chant d'Amour" and No. 12 an "Aubade." Both songs are furnished with French and English words, the original by Ed. Guinand, and the translation by Clifton Bingham, and both are excellent specimens of the refined modern French song. They are best suited to tenor vocalists.

Russian Romance; Ninon; Minuet; Pioneer, Mazurka Fantastica; Gavotte Moderne. For the Pianoforte. By Ulric Nadje. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THESE pieces combine effectiveness with moderate difficulty in a manner that will doubtless ensure their welcome in many homes where the love of music is great and the executive ability small.

Octavo Anthems, Nos. 465-471. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE title-pages of the first and second of these may to some give surprise. They are Nos. 1 and 2 of "Six Two-part Anthems for Ladies' or Boys' Voices," by Myles B. Foster. The use of the female voice in the Church of England is not yet common, but the thin end of the wedge has been inserted, and the barrier of custom and prejudice will, in all probability, soon break down. The present simple compositions are "The night is far spent" and "There were Shepherds," both being written in a musicianly style, and thoroughly modern in expression and general feeling. In continuation of this series we have "Is it nothing to you?"

for Lent or Good Friday; "Why seek ye the living?" "It ye then be risen with Christ," and "Eye hath not seen." These are all what may be termed seasonable anthems—that is to say, most suitable for special occasions in the Church's year—and should be very warmly welcomed in places where adult male voices are not available. No. 471 is "Be ye therefore followers of God," by Alfred S. Baker, a four-part anthem, without solo parts, smoothly written in a church-like style, and in A flat, a key that was, of course, not available when organs were tuned according to the mean-tone system.

Sketches. Eight Short Pieces for the Pianoforte. By Walter Wesché. Part I. [Robert Cocks and Co.]

THIS first part contains only four numbers, and after the fashion set by Schumann, and so faithfully followed by modern composers, each one has a superscription. The general title of the work answers thoroughly to the character of the music, which is fresh, pleasing, and, moreover, modern in spirit.

Toccata. Pour le Piano. Par L. Palmieri.
[Robert Cocks and Co.]

THIS is a pretty little piece; not difficult, though requiring a neat finger and a light touch. The incessant semiquavers divided between the two hands, and some of which have to be accentuated in order to bring out the graceful melody, make of this Toccata an excellent piece for teaching purposes.

FOREIGN NOTES.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—On December 21 a new two-act opera, "Cherubina," by the young composer, Leo Blech, was produced at the Town Theatre, and well received.—A tremendous programme was that of the third Subscription Concert—nothing less than Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and "Missa Solemnis"! Herr Schwickerath conducted.

BAYREUTH.—It has now been definitely decided that there will be no Wagner performances this year at the Festspielhaus. Some weeks will, during next summer, however, be devoted to rehearsals for next year's revival of the "Ring of the Nibelung."—Miss Marie Brema, of London, is at present studying the part of Brünnhilde with Madame Wagner.—The municipal authorities have declined to acquire the Wagner Museum of Herr Oesterlein, of Vienna. This very valuable and all but complete collection of Wagneriana, which surely should be preserved in Germany, may now, very likely, be sold to an American bidder.

BERLIN.—During the year 1894 forty-nine works were performed at the Royal Opera, of which nine were in one act and four in two acts. Wagner heads the list as regards the number of performances, his operas having been given on sixty-seven evenings; Humperdinck is an easy second with forty performances of his "Hänsel und Gretel," within the short space of three and a half months. Hummel's "Mara" was given twenty-three times, Mascagni's "Cavalleria" twenty-seven times, Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" and "I Medici" each twenty-two times, Verdi's "Falstaff" nineteen times, Smetana's "Sold Bride" and Weber's "Freischütz" each twelve times. Of Gounod's "Faust" (called "Margarethe" in Germany) nine performances were given, of Bizet's "Carmen" seven, Rossini's "Barber" six, Mozart's "Zauberflöte" seven, "Don Giovanni" five, "Figaro" four, Meyerbeer's "Prophet" five and his "Africaine" three.—On the 11th and 22nd ult. the Philharmonic Choir, under Herr Siegfried Ochs, gave two performances of Berlioz's "Requiem." The work was given in exact accordance with the composer's intentions—five orchestras, fifteen drums, &c.—and, according to Dr. Otto Lessmann, in an all but ideal manner. The choir especially distinguished itself by a superbly finished performance of its task, Dr. Lessmann awarding it what he considers the highest praise, by expressing a doubt whether any of the famous English Festival Choirs could surpass Herr Ochs's singers.

BRESLAU.—M. Massenet's works are becoming increasingly popular in Germany. His "Herodiade" was performed here for the first time on December 25, and very favourably received.

BRUSSELS.—At the Théâtre de la Monnaie a new opera in three acts and six tableaux, entitled "L'Enfance de Roland," written and composed by M. Emile Mathieu, was produced on the 15th ult. The libretto is considered weak and the drama faulty in construction, but the music is praised almost without reserve. The part of the young hero was taken by a new singer, Madame Bellina, a Russian, who made a highly favourable impression, and is hailed as a coming star of considerable magnitude. The work was well received.

BUDA PESTH.—Wagner's "Meistersinger," which had not been heard here or seven years, was revived on the 5th ult. The glorious work did not hit the taste of the public in previous years, but the warm welcome given to it on this occasion seems to indicate that Buda Pesth music-lovers have at last become sensible to the matchless beauties of the unique score. Herr Arthur Nikisch had taken enormous pains over the rehearsals, and the performance was, consequently, an admirable one.

CHEMNITZ.—Professor Carl Reinecke's comic opera "Der Gouverneur von Tours" was performed, for the first time, at the Town Theatre, on December 23, and very favourably received.

DANZIG.—The local Gesangverein, conducted by Herr Georg Schumann, scored an emphatic success with its recent first performance of M. Edgar Tincl's Oratorio "Franciskus." Herr Paul Kalisch, of Berlin, sang the title rôle. The striking work seems to be as uniformly successful in German Concert-rooms as Herr Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" in the theatres.

DRESDEN.—At the third Symphony Concert of the Royal Court Orchestra, under Generalmusikdirektor Schuch, a Symphony by the late French composer, César Franck, was performed for the first time in Germany. The work, which is in three movements (the Scherzo being wanting), created a deep impression, and according to the distinguished critic, Ludwig Hartmann, it is in nearly every respect a masterpiece. Franck's polyphony especially is said to be marvellous and almost worthy of Bach.—Mr. Percy Sherwood, an English musician residing here, recently played a Pianoforte Concerto of his own composition at a Philharmonisches Populäres Künstler Concert, and achieved a great success. He was twice recalled and enthusiastically applauded. He also played solos by Rubinstein, Mendelssohn, and Raff, and, in addition, an encore piece. Mr. Sherwood is a Professor at the Dresden Conservatoire and the Conductor of an important Choral Society—the Neustädter Chorgesang-Verein.

DÜSSELDORF.—An essentially "modern" programme was that of the fourth Concert of the "Städtische Musikverein," under its able Conductor, Herr Julius Buth. It included Eugen d'Albert's prelude to his opera "Der Rubin" and his second Pianoforte Concerto (played by Madame d'Albert-Carreño), Richard Strauss's "Italian" Symphony and E. Humperdinck's choral ballad, "The Luck of Edenhall."—"Jüngstes Gericht" (The Last Judgment) is the title of a new symphonic poem for orchestra by a local musician, Herr H. Willesen, which was produced here, on December 23, with what some of the papers describe as a "sensational success."—Liszt's "Saint Elizabeth" has lately been given twice at the Town Theatre as an opera, and with complete success.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAINE.—M. Massenet's "Werther" was performed here for the first time on the 10th ult., and well received.

GOTHA.—E. Tinel's Oratorio "Franciskus" was performed here recently for the first time, under the direction of Professor Tietz, and made a great impression. The performance, with Herr Emil Pinks, of Leipzig, in the title rôle, was an extremely good one.

GHEENT.—The director of the local Conservatoire, M. Adolphe Samuel—a composer of whom next to nothing is known in England, though he is in his seventy-second year—recently produced a new "Symphonie mystique," with choruses, before an invited audience. It bears the title "Christus," and is divided into five parts, which are respectively called "Nazareth et Bethlehem," "Le désert de Judas," "Les scènes de l'apostolat," "La Passion," and "L'hosanna final" (Advenit regnum Dei). The strange work made a deep impression, and was at once accepted by Professor Willner, of Cologne, for performance in that town. Not the least peculiar thing in connection with this Symphony is the fact that its author is a Jew.

HAMBURG.—On the 2nd ult. M. Massenet's realistic opera "La Navarraise" was performed for the first time at the Town Theatre, without, however, creating any particular sensation.—Herr Eugen d'Albert must surely have come to the conclusion at which many men of genius have arrived before him—viz., that the public may be safely "written down an ass." This is what happened to him: He had arranged to give a Concert here, on the 10th ult., in aid of the funds which are being collected for the erection of a monument to the late Hans von Bülow. The day arrived, but it was found that the public had subscribed in such ridiculously small numbers that the projected Concert had to be abandoned. Such a slight to an artist who, in Germany, enjoys the reputation of the greatest living pianist, is bad enough, especially considering the object which he had in view; but it seems positively insulting when we hear that about the same time this self-same "art-loving" public was attracted in enormous numbers to half-a-dozen Concerts given by the little pianoforte prodigy, Raoul Koczalsky! It was enough to make the redoubtable Hans rise from his ashes and deliver himself of one of his biting sarcasms at the expense of the Hamburg public, which he worked so hard, and evidently with so little success, to educate.

LEIPZIG.—Johannes Brahms was the hero of the last week in January. On the 27th ult. he played his two new Clarinet Sonatas with the famous clarinetist, Herr Mühlfeld, from Meiningen; on the 29th the superb Bohemian Quartet (Herren Hoffman, Suk, Nedbal, and Wihan) gave a Brahms evening, with the assistance of Herr Eugen d'Albert as pianist; finally, at the fifteenth Subscription Concert, in the New Gewandhaus, on the 31st, the master conducted his two Pianoforte Concertos played by Herr d'Albert, and his "Academic" Festival Overture. Lucky Leipzigers!

LILLE.—A new three-act opera, by M. Emil Ratez, the Director of the local Conservatoire, and entitled "Lydéric," was produced here, on the 10th ult., with much success. The work is written on the strictest Wagnerian lines—musical declamation in the vocal parts, the "endless melody" and plenty of Leitmotiven in the orchestra.

MAGDEBURG.—On December 25 a new one-act opera, "Astrella," by a local musician, Herr Grunewald, was produced here with complete success. The libretto is founded on Prosper Mérimée's novel "Colomba," and its author, Herr Tannenhof, has succeeded in concocting an effective, logically developed little drama, to which the composer has written effective, though not strikingly original music. On the same evening Herr Kaskel's one-act "Hochzeitsmorgen" was given here for the first time, without, however, meeting with much favour.

MANNHEIM.—The opera "Die Hexe" (The Witch), by the Danish composer, August Enna, was, on December 23, played here for the first time and well received.

MARSEILLES.—At a Concert given by the "Association Artistique," on December 23, the final scene of Act 1 and the Charfreitagsszauber from Act 3 of Wagner's "Parsifal" were given for the first time in France (outside Paris), before an audience of 2,500, and made a profound impression.

MAYENCE.—At the sixth Symphony Concert Spohr's all but unknown Double Symphony for two orchestras, "Irisches und Göttliches im Menschenleben" (The Worldly and the Divine in human life), was performed here for the first time. The peculiar work has only three movements, which are respectively entitled "Kinderwelt" (child life), "Zeit der Leidenschaften" (the time of the passions), and "Endlicher Sieg des Göttlichen" (final victory of the Divine). At the same Concert Miss Marie Brema, of London, created much enthusiasm by her superb singing of the final scene from Wagner's "Götterdämmerung."

MEININGEN.—The choral societies of Hildburghausen, Sonneberg, Saalfeld, Salzungen, and Meiningen intend holding a three days' Musical Festival here in September next. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" and Brahms's German "Requiem" will be performed, and Professor Joseph Joachim, with his quartet party, and Eugen d'Albert have been invited to take part. Generalmusikdirektor Steinbach is to conduct the Festival, which will be under the protectorate of Duke Georg.

MILAN.—The Scala Theatre opened its new season, on December 26, with M. Reyer's opera "Sigurd," which, however, was by no means a success.

MOSCOW.—The Imperial Russian Musical Society, conducted by Professor Vafonoff, gave a Rubinstein "In Memoriam" Concert on December 15. The programme opened with the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and included various compositions by the deceased master. The audience numbered several thousands, and the receipts, amounting to about 5,000 roubles, will be added to a fund which is being collected for the purpose of erecting a monument in St. Petersburg to the composer of the "Ocean" Symphony.

NAPLES.—Signor Luigi Romaniello recently gave a Concert, at which several new works from his pen were produced with much success. They included a Symphony in D, a symphonic poem, "Il Corsaro" (after Byron's "The Corsair"), and a Pianoforte Concerto, played by the composer.

NUREMBERG.—M. Massenet's opera "La Navarraise" was performed here, for the first time, on the 1st ult., under the direction of Kapellmeister Prill, and very favourably received. The German title of the work is "Das Mädchen aus Navarra."

PARIS.—M. Théodore Gouvy has been elected a Member of the Academy of Fine Arts, in the place of the late Anton Rubinstein.—Bach's B minor Mass was performed, on the 6th ult., by the Société des Concerts, under M. Taffanel. The colossal work was not heard in France till 1891, since which date the performances of works by the great cantor have been steadily increasing in number in Paris.—Considerable indignation has been caused by the news that the contract between Herr Felix Mottl and the directors of the Gaité Theatre, in accordance with which the famous conductor was to direct a number of performances of Berlioz's operas, has been cancelled in the most unceremonious manner, because the Grand Opéra has expressed an intention to produce one of the great master's works—which it is to be has not transpired.—At the sixty-fifth Concert given by the Société de Musique d'Ensemble, directed by M. René Lenormand, Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Scotch Rhapsody (Op. 21) was performed in an arrangement for two pianofortes (eight hands) and strings.

PRAGUE.—A new opera, "Donna Anna," by E. N. von Rezniček, was produced at the German Landestheater, on December 16, and achieved a great success.—On the 1st ult. Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" was given for the first time at the same theatre and most favourably received.

ROUEN.—"Calendal," a new four-act opera, by M. Henri Maréchal, was recently produced at the Théâtre des Arts, and very favourably received.

ST. PETERSBURG.—It is reported that amongst the papers of the late Anton Rubinstein a sealed packet has been found, bearing the words "Cantatas" to be opened on the day of Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Conservatoire.

STRASBURG.—Wagner's "Götterdämmerung" has been added to the répertoire of the local Town Theatre. It was given for the first time on December 23.

THE HAGUE.—"La Navarraise," M. Massenet's latest and most decided success in opera, was enthusiastically received on its recent first performance here. This result was no doubt in a great measure due to the very fine rendering of the work.

TILSIT.—"Das Turnier zu Kronstein," a new romantic opera, by Herr Kraft-Lortzing, was recently produced here with considerable success.

VIENNA.—On the 6th ult. Berlioz's dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet" was performed in its entirety under Hans Richter. Incredible as it may appear, the work had not been heard in Vienna without cuts since 1846!—At a recent Concert given by Eduard Strauss with his famous orchestra, his brother, the lately feted Johann Strauss, conducted the first performance of his newest composition, the Waltz which he wrote for the well-known German illustrated paper, Die Gartenlaube. The reception of the piece was enthusiastic in the extreme, and the whole set of Waltzes had to be repeated. Brahms, Goldmark, and Brüll, the three foremost Viennese composers of the day, were amongst the audience, and no doubt appreciated the Waltz King's delicious strains as fully as any dance-loving "fesche Wienerin."—Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" has at last reached this town. It was given, for the first time, at the Court Opera, on December 18, in presence of the fortunate composer, and had quite an exceptionally enthusiastic reception.—"Der Probekuss" (The Sample Kiss), Herr Millöcker's latest comic opera, was produced at the Theater an der Wien, on December 22, and adjudged one of this clever composer's best efforts. Its success was complete.

WESEL.—At a recent Concert given here, under the direction of Kapellmeister Weyler, three new works by Karl Pottgiesser, a talented Munich composer, were brought to a first and very successful hearing. They were two Ballades for male chorus, baritone solo, and orchestra, and entitled respectively "Die Vätergruft" and "Das Schloss am Meere," and a setting for baritone solo, chorus, orchestra, and organ of the thirteenth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Corinthians.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The musical lull which usually follows what may be described as the first half of our musical season—namely, the annual Christmas "Messiah" Concerts, that come as near the festive date as possible—was broken, on December 22, by the inauguration of a short season of grand opera, in the Ulster Hall, by the Valentine Smith Opera Company, which visits us yearly at this time, and may now be looked on as more or less of an institution. The operas performed were, with one exception ("Cavalleria Rusticana"), the same as last year—to wit, "Bohemian Girl," "Maritana," "Il Trovatore," "King for a Day," and "Fra Diavolo," in which Mr. Valentine Smith, Mr. W. Franklin, and Miss Sinico, with other lesser lights, sustained the principal parts. On the 14th ult. Mr. Lawrence Walker gave the second of his series of Classical Concerts, in the Ulster Minor Hall, assisted by Mr. Theodore Werner (solo violinist) from Dublin and Miss McKissack of this city. The attendance was very good. On the same evening Mr. Wm. Ludwig, with his Concert-party, gave a Ballad and Operatic (costume) Concert in St. Mary's Hall. The soloists were Miss Chrystal Duncan, Miss Emily Rasey, and Mr. Edwin Rennie, with, of course, Mr. W. Ludwig; and Miss Florence Ludwig as accompanist. On the 18th and 19th ult. Madame Fanny Moody, with Mr. Charles Manners, Miss Lily Moody, Mr. John Child, Mr. W. Dever, and Miss Gordon Nunn (violin), gave operatic Recitals in costume, in the Ulster Hall. The programmes included Gounod's "Philemon and Baucis" and the Garden Scene from "Faust."

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Christmas season is generally a dull one here in musical respects, and our record of the past two months certainly shows no exception to the rule. A Concert given by the Amateur Orchestral Society (Conductor, Mr. Halford), on the Saturday evening preceding Christmas, was miserably supported—as was perhaps to be expected here. A good performance it was, however, of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," &c. Perhaps the most important production was that of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new opera "Jeanie Deans," which was given during the "six night" stay of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, very soon after the first performance of the work at Edinburgh. The opera was well received—as it indeed deserved to be—and very appreciatively discussed by our local critics, but it would be insincere to say that it "bit" very deeply; this, perhaps, owing mainly to the peculiar reserve, if not positive frigidity, which always characterises the Birmingham public in face of new productions. The usual "Messiah" performance, by the Festival Choral Society, took place on Boxing Day, on which occasion the Town Hall was filled to its utmost seating capacity. This yearly performance of the great English Oratorio brings, as upon a pious pilgrimage, a large number of honest country souls to our city; and it would not be exaggerating the fact to say that the majority of these worshippers of Handel, though they may not boast of very wide musical attainments, know at least every note of "The Messiah" by heart.

During the past half-year some exceedingly interesting Organ Recitals have been given by the City Organist, Mr. Perkins, upon the fine instrument under his charge at the Town Hall. Well-known organists from outside, too—such virtuosi, for instance, as M. Guilman and Dr. Peace—have also appeared. Under the conditions laid down by the municipal authorities, who (a little late in the day) now have agreed to comply with Mr. Perkins's reasonable demand for a yearly subvention, the performances given by Mr. Perkins himself have been mostly gratuitous. His programmes have been throughout well selected—a happy hitting of that difficult "medium" between the too "popular" and the too classic.

A very interesting programme, of the "mixed" order, was that of a Concert given, toward the close of the past year, by Miss May Berry, at the Masonic Hall. In the same hall a very popular and successful Concert was given on December 11, when that very clever performer upon the banjo, Mr. Cammeyer, and certain confrères—to the number of twenty and more (all banjists or mandolinists)—re-appeared. Mr. Percy Stranders—one of the Professors at the Institute School of Music—has been giving a series of high-class Pianoforte Recitals. His technique is of the advanced type, and altogether he may be considered one of our best performers; he requires, however, to exercise a little more self-restraint and a little more respect for the composer's text. The Saturday Afternoon Concerts of the Society of Artists (painters) have been thronged throughout the season. Mr. Oscar Pollack (director) has found it impossible to satisfy the shoals of "artists," amateur and professional, eager for an opportunity to exhibit (gratuitously) their talents—an interesting "sign of the times." A well-staged amateur performance of Sullivan-Gilbert's "Ruddigore" (under Mr. Priestley's direction) has amused again the holiday folk at the annual re-union of members of the Midland Institute. Mr. Paderewski gave a Recital on the 21st ult.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE has been much more music in Bristol since Christmas than is usually the case at this period of the year, but little of it has been of first-class importance. A Concert at Bedminster Town Hall, on December 28, calls for remark from the fact that Miss Clara Butt and Miss Maggie Purvis (a companion of hers at the Royal College of Music) were among the vocalists.

The lack of adequate support accorded the really excellent orchestral band (directed by Mr. Theo Carrington), which gave several Concerts in the handsome Pump Room of the Clifton Spa, has led to the discontinuance of these performances. Concerts still take place once a week, but the attendances have not always been adequate. The band of the Scots Guards was engaged, on the 5th ult., to give a couple of performances, at both of which there was a crowded audience. The venture proving so successful, the band of the 1st Life Guards was brought down on the 12th ult., and again a large assemblage gathered to hear the playing of the visitors. The Bristol Sullivan Quintet sang at the Concert on the 19th ult. Seemingly there is much in a name and in variety; otherwise it is a mystery why folk should flock in crowds to listen to performances of military bands and neglect to support a good home-chosen orchestra, which, it was hoped, might be permanently established at the Spa.

A series of Promenade Concerts, by the Scarlet Hungarian Band, which commenced on the 11th ult., is to be continued at the Victoria Rooms until the end of the present month.

The singing of several choruses and the beautiful Evening Hymn from Sullivan's "Golden Legend" were noteworthy features in the Concert at Totterdown Baptist Church, on the 9th ult.

Mr. Carl Armbruster lectured on "The Wagner Festival performances at Bayreuth," in the Hall of the Merchant Venturers' Technical College, on the 16th ult.

The third annual Concert of the Clifton Amateur Orchestral Society took place at the Spa on the 17th ult. About seventy members, under the direction of Mr. E. Pavey, were united in the performance of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Mendelssohn's "Athalie" Overture, Edward German's Incidental Music to "Henry VIII.," Suppé's "Dichter und Bauer" Overture, and some smaller pieces. The playing of the amateurs was very creditable and showed that their studies are well directed. Madame Jessie Strathearn, Miss B. Grant, and Mr. F. Rose contributed songs.

The Downend Choral Society, a flourishing young organisation, gave a Concert, on the 21st ult., when Niels Gade's "The Erl-King's Daughter" was brought forward and interpreted with pleasing results, the solos being taken by Miss Florence Folwell, Mrs. Harold Bernard, and Mr. W. Ernest Young. In the second part of the scheme were the part-songs "Break, break" (Macfarren), "The Victor's Return" (Mendelssohn), and "The Lullaby of Life" (Leslie), and Eaton Fanning's glee "The Song of the Vikings." Songs were added by Mrs. Bernard, Miss Folwell, and Miss Hodge, and violin and violoncello solos were played by Mr. Harold Bernard and Mr. Percy Lewis respectively. The performance of two Dances for orchestra, from the skilful and scholarly pen of Edward German, was a feature of the Concert. Mr. Harold Bernard was the Conductor.

The Concert of the Bristol Madrigal Society, the chief event of the month, took place on the 24th ult., too late for detailed notice here.

MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE second of Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral Concerts was given, on December 20, by the Scottish Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Henschel. The performances were excellent throughout, and it is to be hoped that the Concert-givers will be enabled, through liberal support, to renew the series each year. The programme included Beethoven's Overture "King Stephen," Dvorák's new Symphony "From the New World," selections from Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, and MacCunn's Orchestral Ballad "The Ship o' the Fiend." The Symphony, with its quaint themes and masterly orchestration, made a most favourable impression. Mrs. Henschel was the vocalist and gave a most delightful rendering of Handel's "Lusinghe più care," Mignon's song, "Connais-tu le pays," by Ambroise Thomas, and Henschel's "Spring."

An interesting Recital was given, on December 18, by Dr. Peace, of Glasgow, on the new electric organ in the Gilfillan Memorial Hall. Mr. Hope-Jones gave a short and popular explanation of the instrument.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE has been a lull in musical matters in Norwich and the district during Christmastide, but signs are plentiful of brisk business in the immediate future.

The most important event has been the fourth Concert of the Norwich Orchestral Union, given in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 10th ult., when Handel's cantata "Alexander's Feast" formed the chief attraction. Taking into consideration the juvenility of the Society and the inexperience of many of its members, perhaps a less ambitious choice would have been wise; but, in spite of failings here and there, the execution of the work reflected credit on all concerned—a result due, in a great measure, to the continual and unceasing work of the Conductor, Mr. Ernest Harcourt. "Alexander's Feast" has not been heard in Norwich since 1868, so that it came as a novelty to the present generation. The quartet of principal vocalists comprised Miss Louise Burns, Mr. Hubert L. Fulkerson, Miss M. Gazeley, and Mr. J. J. Manning, the two latter being residents in Norwich. With one exception the choruses were sung with precision, and the band (led by Mr. Walter Johnson) faced the difficulties before it with courage; but in the accompaniments to several of the songs it was over-weighted. Mr. H. D. Flowers did useful "filling in" work on the organ. In the second part of the programme songs were sung by Miss Burns and Mr. Fulkerson. In addition to the Overture to "Masaniello," which was well played, the band was heard in an Orchestral Romance, composed by Mr. E. Harcourt several years since, but never given in public before. This is a musical representation of the four Seasons, the violoncello being frequently used as a solo instrument. Without giving a technical description of the work, it may be sufficient to say that it shows evidence of considerable constructive ability; but the band failed to bring out the various points lucidly. Mr. George Clarke was highly successful on the solo instrument. The Romance was very favourably received. The Concert closed with Fanning's spirited chorus "The Vikings."

The Popular Organ Recitals, held in St. Andrew's Hall on Saturday evenings during the winter months, under the superintendence of Dr. Bunnett, the City Organist, have been largely patronised this season. That held on the Saturday before Christmas Day was interspersed with carols selected from the three sets issued by Dr. Bunnett, and others, sung by a voluntary choir. The series for the New Year commenced on the 12th ult., when Miss Serpell and the Cathedral Precentor were the vocalists, and Master Green, an extraordinary juvenile violinist, residing at Yarmouth, contributed violin solos.

The Norfolk and Norwich School of Music, Limited, has been duly incorporated as a non-profit sharing company, with a capital of £1,000, divided into £1 shares. The first directors are Dr. Bates, Dr. Bunnett, Mr. A. R. Chamberlin, Mr. C. R. Gilman, Mr. H. P. Gould, Dr. H. Hill, Mr. Kingston Rudd, and Mr. George White, with Mr. W. Heaver as Secretary. Suitable studios have been engaged, and the School will commence operations early in March.

An Organ Recital was given in St. Stephen's Church, on the 18th ult., by Mr. Walterhain, interspersed with anthems sung by the Church Choir. Mr. F. W. B. Noverre contributed two violin solos.

The Diss Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's "Messiah," in the Corn Hall, on the 10th ult. The band and chorus consists almost entirely of local residents, but the former had the advantage of being led by Mr. Henry Morley, a member of the Richter Orchestra. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Montgomery, Miss Vera Galbraith, Mr. C. J. Butler, and Mr. Robert Grice. With Mr. A. Hemstock at the organ and Mr. T. M. Pullen as Conductor a capital performance can be recorded.

At the Concert given by the Harleston Musical Society, on the 10th ult., Gade's cantata "The Erl-King's Daughter" filled the first half of the programme. A small band and chorus rendered a good account of the choruses and accompaniments. The soloists were Miss Hartcup, Miss M. Tilney, and Mr. F. Daines (Norwich Cathedral); and Mr. R. H. Chignell conducted.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It cannot be said that the "Young Scotland" school is inactive, or that it is denied opportunities of bringing compositions before the public, when in two consecutive numbers of THE MUSICAL TIMES it is our duty to notice such important works as Hamish MacCunn's opera "Jeanie Deans," the cantata "The Kelpie," by Learmont Drysdale, and the shorter ballad, "Sir Patrick Spens," by W. Augustus Barratt. "The Kelpie" is a ballad written by Dr. Charles Mackay on an old Scottish legend of the familiar "Spectre's Bride" genus, although in several important details the Scottish version differs from those of Germany, Bohemia, and other countries. Dr. Mackay's poem has been slightly altered in order to allow of the dramatic cantata treatment; and Mr. Drysdale in his score has enlisted the services of soprano and tenor soloists, chorus, and full orchestra. The work opens with a very effective paraphrase of the "Walkürenritt," and in the course of the cantata we have repeated proof of Mr. Drysdale's familiarity with such works as the "Flying Dutchman" (very appropriately drawn on for the gruesome tale of the sea), "Tristan," and others. There are nine choruses, all well wrought out, and effectively written for the voices. The best are: (No. 1), "He mounted his steed"; (No. 10), "He lifted her"; and (No. 15), "They dug a grave." The solo parts are less convincing, and the love duet, which ought to have been the emotional climax of the work, is singularly ineffective. It is in the orchestral writing undoubtedly that Mr. Drysdale has been most successful, and he shows throughout the composition greater freedom and variety than he had hitherto attained. There is also a fullness of effect, which, however, too frequently and too continuously runs riot in exuberance. A composer cannot always be at his best, however; and after a reference to reminiscent themes, want of spontaneity in the solo music, and orchestration which is sometimes almost overwhelming, there are many points to be selected for high praise, particularly in the choral writing. The cantata ought to become a favourite with large and capable societies.

Mr. Barratt's ballad is of modest dimensions. It is what the young composer naively calls an old work, as it was written some two or three years ago. The well known poem is subjected to very familiar treatment; a few bars' orchestral introduction and an almost continuous narrative committed to the chorus, broken only twice by the baritone solo for a few bars, and by an interlude, which, after a short and effective description of the sinking of Sir Patrick's good ship, gradually leads the mind to the picture of the desolate halls of Dunfermline town. The work is instinct with life and abounds with graphic touches; we may single out the King's mission "To Norway o'er the faem," Sir Patrick Spens's first short solo, the sinking of the ship, and the last chorus, "O lang may the ladies sit," for a special word of praise; but undoubtedly the pleasantest feature about the work is its genuineness, the singleness of its artistic aim, and the promise it holds out of better things from the young student, who is still at work in the classes of the Royal College of Music.

Mr. Paderewski gave the third Concert of his provincial tour in Edinburgh on Monday evening, the 14th ult., when the Music Hall was filled by an enthusiastic crowd eager to hear the great pianist. The programme included Weber's A flat Sonata, Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," pieces by Mendelssohn and Paderewski, as well as a representative selection from the works of Chopin and Liszt. Enthusiasm grew and spread as the Recital showed ever new proof of Paderewski's power and wide sympathy; and at the end of the performance he received such an ovation as is granted to very few artists in this cold degree of latitude.

On the 21st ult. a Wagner programme at Messrs. Paterson's series of Orchestral Concerts attracted an audience which found even all the available standing-room too inadequate for it. Besides the well-worn and inevitable, however indispensable and welcome, "Tristan Vorspiel" and "Walkürenritt," the programme included a selection from "Parsifal," the "Siegfried Idyll," and the "Waldweben" and "Trauermarsch" from the Trilogy; and never has Mr. Henschel's success in his work among us been more strikingly shown than in the performances he secured.

On the 19th ult. an audience, nearly as large and as enthusiastic, was drawn to the third "Saturday Popular" by the promise of the C minor Symphony (Andante and Finale superbly played), "Land of the Mountain and the Flood" and "Merry Wives" Overtures, Max Bruch's "Scotch" Fantasia for violin and orchestra (in which Mr. Sons was very successful), and songs (Senta's Ballade and some of Brahms's German "Volkslieder") carefully sung by Miss Fillinger.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

GOSSIP of a more or less wild complexion is rife as to the future of the Scottish Orchestra Company. As has already been noted in this journal, the attendance at both the classical and popular Concerts has been very far from what it ought to be; it seems, indeed, as if a remarkable apathy towards the scheme had set in. Much money has already been lost, and it is quite futile to imagine that the shareholders will continue to bear the brunt of the battle very much longer. Certain, moreover, it is that what is known as the Guarantee Fund cannot again be raised to any appreciable extent, should it be even thought of, against next season's operations. At the hour of writing, nothing whatever has been fixed regarding a successor to Mr. Henschel. The salary attached to the office will be so ample—whether or not it is maintained at its present figure—that a really good man should be found without a great deal of difficulty. Just at present, then, it seems to be more to the purpose to discover some means whereby the tangible interest of the musical public can be thoroughly aroused.

A brief record of last month's local doings will suffice. These began with the time-honoured New Year's morning performance of "The Messiah," when an enormous audience welcomed the Glasgow Choral Union on its appearance in Handel's work. The Concert, it should be mentioned, was one of a series given by our premier Choral Society on its own account, and in accordance with arrangements made with the Choral and Orchestral Union. The band of the Scottish Orchestra Company played the accompaniments, Mr. Bery was at the organ, and Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted admirably. Madame Belle Cole, Miss Antoinette Trebelli, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Braxton Smith were the soloists. At the evening Concert Mr. Henschel resumed the bâton, when Mr. Black again sang, and the Scottish Orchestra interpreted a familiar programme. On the following Saturday the band was at the City Hall, under the auspices of the Abstinists' Union; and on the 8th ult. it returned to its own special habitation in the West-end of the city, when Brahms's F major Symphony was given with but indifferent success. The programme also contained Scharwenka's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor—played by Madame Augarde—and Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture. On the 12th ult. Beethoven's C minor Symphony had another welcome hearing, and at the ninth Classical Concert (15th ult.) Gounod's "Gallia" and Verdi's "Requiem" formed the programme of the evening. The chorus was that of the Glasgow Choral Union, the Scottish Orchestra again lent its valuable aid, Mr. Bradley conducted, and the solos were assigned to Miss Marie Fillunger, Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Daniel Price. But once more—and the tale is truly a melancholy one—the "house" was a sorry sight—rows upon rows of empty benches. The third Chamber Concert of the series took place on the 17th ult.—a veritable clarinet night, inasmuch as Brahms's Quintet in B minor (Op. 115) and Mozart's fine old-world Quintet in A were the leading features in the programme. An orchestra of ninety-five performers was announced for the evening of the 22nd ult., when the programme was entirely Wagnerian.

At Mr. Paderewski's Recital, on the 16th ult., the great Polish pianist was heard in Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 111) and in selections from Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt.

The banquet to Mr. August Manns, on the evening of the 21st ult., was attended by a large and representative company anxious to honour the veteran Sydenham chef. In the unavoidable absence of the Lord Provost of Glasgow, the chair was taken by Brigadier-General Sir Donald Matheson, K.C.B., who during the evening presented Mr. Manns with a handsomely mounted conductor's bâton, subscribed for by the Musical Festival Executive Committee. An address was also presented by Mr. Julius Seligmann on behalf of the Glasgow Society of Musicians. An admirable programme of music had been devised for the occasion, and the presence of a large number of ladies contributed to the picturesque appearance of the tables.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OPERA has been to the front throughout the past month, and while the various performances of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company have been the best possible within their own limits, it is to be regretted that the support of the public has not been of equal all-round generosity. The features of the season have been the revival of Mozart's operetta "Bastien and Bastienne," and the production of Hamish MacCunn's "Jeanie Deans" and Tasca's "Santa Lucia," and last, but best of all, Humperdinck's "Hänsel and Gretel." The first-named little work is naturally more of a curiosity than anything else, but contains much charming music, which is doubly interesting because of its shadowing forth some of the later glories of the Salzburg musician. The opera by the Scotch writer has met with a cordial reception, the initial hearing being given under the bâton of the composer, and the venture of giving to such a young writer so important a commission was fully justified. Of the Italian work, it may be briefly and fairly said that it belongs to a school now very much in the ascendant, and of which Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" stands as a prototype. Thus three distinct nationalities of art have been represented, but for the last-named novelty we must go back again to the German Fatherland, and anything more delightful than the fairy story as told in Humperdinck's music it would be difficult to imagine. For the rest, a goodly list of old favourites in the way of operas, ranging in style from Balfe's "Bohemian Girl" to Wagner's "Tannhäuser," has gone to fill the weekly bills of the season, and presumably all tastes have thus been pleased. The present conductors of the company are Messrs. Claude Jacquinet, Leo Feld, and G. Slapofski; and the band and chorus have been fully equal to the requirements of the area of the Royal Court Theatre.

Distinction has been lent to the regular Organ Recitals at St. George's Hall by the presence of M. Alexandre Guilment at the famous instrument. The wisdom of the recent action of the Liverpool Corporation in abandoning a system of monopoly has by now been made fully apparent, and, in addition to the distinguished French performer named, a large number of organists of undoubtedly high attainments have been kept on the rota. Further in this direction, excellent Recitals have been given at various churches, especially by Mr. Branscombe at St. Margaret's, by Mr. Grimshaw at Renshaw Street, and by Mr. Stammers at St. Agnes's. The most important movement in sacred music has, however, been a performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," with orchestra, at Sefton Park Church, under Mr. T. Hague Kinsey.

Two Philharmonic Concerts have been given, on the 8th and 22nd ult. respectively. At the former the Haydn répertoire was drawn upon for the Symphony, and the other orchestral pieces were Mackenzie's "Britannia" Overture, Smetana's "Vysehrad," and the March from Massenet's "Scènes pittoresques." Sir Charles Hallé's descent from the rostrum to the clavier is always acceptable, and his playing of Grieg's A minor Concerto proved a welcome contribution to the often over-developed pianoforte playing of the present day. For the second Concert of the month Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony—the "Pathétique"—was announced, together with Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris" and Weber's "Jubel" Overtures.

The second Concert of the Schiever Quartet took place on the 26th ult., at the Art Club, and, as at the preceding performance, outside help was enlisted in the person of Miss Mary Hillhouse, a most artistic vocalist. But naturally the chief interest of such occasions gathers round the chamber music, and the latest effort of Messrs. Schiever, Akeroyd, Courvoisier, and Fuchs worthily carried forward those excellent traditions which they have made their own.

The Sunday Society inaugurated the music of the second half of the present session on the 20th ult., in St. George's Hall, when the orchestra, conducted as usual by Mr. Argent, was augmented to eighty performers for a Wagner programme. The latter included songs by Miss Minnie Hunt and Mr. W. Paul, of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE most important musical event of the first month of the year was the production, by Sir Charles Hallé, of the "Samson and Delilah" of Saint-Saëns, with such adequacy of preparation as afforded sufficient opportunity of arriving at an estimate of the purely musical qualities of the opera, apart from such dramatic effect as might be derived from scenic representation. Being the one choral novelty of the season, evidently Mr. Wilson had spared no trouble in the drilling of his forces; and, probably, he would have been glad had the demands upon the choir been in every respect greater. Carefully putting aside all expectation excited by its title, it is clear that the author desired to give a higher tone to his work than the exigencies of the theatre demand, or readily permit. In the first scene there are evidences of an ambition to employ the choir, both contrapuntally and dramatically, as a real force, and not as forming the mere framework of the picture. But here, as in all the Israelitish music, and even in much of that assigned to the Chief Priest of Dagon (Mr. Santley), there is a want of individuality and of contrasted character, so that the entrance of the Philistine Maidens, with their freshly tuneful little three-part song, brings a sense of relief. The interest of the work lies not only centred, but absorbed in the two chief characters, and far more completely in the temptress than in the very easily tempted hero. In portraying the Philistine Woman (Madame Sandon)—bent upon the destruction of the champion of the Israelites—and the weakness of her victim the composer was more within the limit of his powers than in depicting Samson (Mr. Lloyd) in his stronger and better mind. Most of the music assigned to Delilah is flowing, natural, tuneful, and of somewhat voluptuous character: whereas what may be called the religious strains of the Hebrews have always an artificial character. Especially is this noticeable in portions of the opening movement, wherein the strophes suggest the processional hymn of a Parisian church, with its pseudo-plain-song, accompanied by a few brass instruments. But much of the second act is really charming. It opens with a beautifully scored song, "To-night, seeking hither your presence," where Delilah declares her expectancy of her recreant lover and her vengeful purpose; and, after her long dialogue with the High Priest of Dagon, closes with the powerful, if somewhat spun-out, duet which leads up to the ruin of Samson. After that the interest subsides. The remainder of the tale is familiar, and the music scarcely rises to its depicting. In the third act the blind Samson bewails his fate. The interior of the Temple of Dagon is supposed to be displayed, and the orgies of the worshippers commence with a setting for the full choir of the two stanzas of the Spring part-song of the first act, leading to a weak Bacchanalian dance to which castanets, cymbals, and triangles strive to give character, and to the closing scene of destruction. Throughout the opera the instrumentation and colouring are of the now familiar style of the composer, often rich and sensuous, sometimes really powerful; but occasionally weak, as though more involved in laboriously working out themes scarcely worthy of elaboration than in honestly contributing to the general effect.

Of the other Concerts of Sir Charles Hallé's series, I must record the performance (December 27) of the Symphonie Pathétique of Tchaikowsky, with its skilfully constructed Allegro con grazia in 5-8 rhythm, and many interesting points, but prevailing lugubriousness; the bright and, in construction, masterly Overture "Britannia," of Sir A. C. Mackenzie; the orchestral Fantasia "España," of Chabrier (a welcome relief from the "Peer Gynt" and "Sigurd Jorsalfar" selections with which we are too conversant); the sympathetic rendering of Beethoven's Concerto in C, by which Sir Charles recalled the enjoyable days of calm, classical, finished pianoforte playing; an admirable performance of the great "Eroica" Symphony; the enthusiastic reception of Lady Hallé after her indisposition; and the first appearance at these Concerts of a young local aspirant—Miss Pauline Sant Angelo—who has played at the Gentlemen's Concerts also with success and with promise of maturer power. Of the performance of "Elijah," on the 24th ult., nothing need be said.

At the Gentlemen's Hall we have had, besides one of the Subscription series of entertainments—at which Miss Sant Angelo played and Mr. Alfred Jordan sang pleasantly, and Miss Clara Butt excited the hope that, with such magnificent endowment of voice, she may not rest satisfied with any except the very highest place among our native artists—the second of the Chamber Concerts of Mr. Willy Hess, when Smetana's Quartet "Aus meinem Leben" was given for the first time here; and, in addition to the playing of some selections from Brahms and Chopin by Miss Fanny Davies, we enjoyed the reading by the Concert-giver of the "Legende" (Op. 17) of Wieniawski and the Mazurka in G of Zarzysky.

The Paderewski Recital, at the Free Trade Hall, was extremely successful, artistically as well as pecuniarily; and the receipts must almost have equalled those of Rubinstein's farewell appearance.

Mr. Pyne has resumed the Organ Recitals at the Town Hall, Mr. Lane undertakes a Mascagni night with his Philharmonic Choir, and Mr. Cross continues his popular Concerts at the Young Men's Christian Association.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE is absolutely nothing of any interest to record in connection with music in this locality during the past month—not even a Christmas performance of "The Messiah." There was a time—and that not so long ago—when amateurs were heard to complain of the too frequent performances of Handel's familiar master-work at this season of the year; but, alas! times are changed, and certainly not for the better, as regards music in this district. These remarks apply principally to Newcastle-on-Tyne, as the centre of musical activity in the Northern counties. It is quite a rare thing now to hear a work of any pretension for voices and orchestra in Newcastle, and such performances as may be given can only rank as of second-rate importance. This is not as it should be, and it is to be hoped that so unsatisfactory a state of affairs will cease to exist before another musical season dawns.

Arrangements for the forthcoming performance of Dr. Joseph Parry's dramatic Oratorio "Saul of Tarsus," by the Newcastle Harmonic Society, are in a forward state.

But the principal event of the present month in Newcastle will be the performance, on the 26th inst., of Sullivan's "Golden Legend," by the Gateshead Choral Society. The fact that so popular a work as "The Golden Legend" has never yet been heard in Newcastle is a striking proof of the lamentable state of affairs, musically, here.

The Newcastle Chamber Music Society announced its sixty-third Concert for Tuesday, the 29th ult. The artists were Mr. Willy Hess (first violin), Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs (second violin), Mr. Speelman (viola), Señor Pezze (violin-cello), Mdlle. Marie Fillunger (vocalist), and Mr. J. M. Preston (pianoforte). The programme included Mozart's Quartet in C (No. 6), the Andante and Variations from Schubert's posthumous Quartet in D minor, and Beethoven's Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4).

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Philharmonic Choir gave a miscellaneous Concert on the 10th ult., under the direction of Mr. Marshall-Ward. Its own contributions to the programme were Dr. Hiles's "Hushed in Death," Wolstenholme's "Sleep, my Dearest," Meyerbeer's "Ave Maria" (from "Dinorah"), Bishop's "Blow, gentle Gales," and the Market Chorus from "Masaniello." All these were most excellently sung, especially Wolstenholme's delightful part-song, which gave full scope for the pianissimo effects so well attained by this choir, and Bishop's glee, in which the finished phrasing was most marked. The solo vocalists were Miss Marguerite Hoare, Mr. Charles Chiley, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, whose selections were marked by excellent taste. The two gentlemen gave, with excellent dramatic perception, the duet in the first act of "Faust." A stirring song, "The Cavalier," composed by Mr. Marshall-Ward, was sung by Mr. Chilley and deservedly encored; and Stephens's new song, "Hey for the Fishing Fleet" (words by Miss Marshall-Ward), was given with full effect by Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. Harold Henry contributed two interesting violin solos—the Andante from Hans Sitt's Concerto and Hubay's "Czardas."

At Mr. Allen's second Classical Concert the artists were Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, Mr. Speelman, Mr. Whitehouse, and Mr. P. Ludwig; Miss Cantelo officiating at the pianoforte. Mr. Whitehouse, whose fine playing ensured him a welcome, gave us Saint-Saëns's "Le Cygne" and "Allegro Appassionata" (a fortunate departure from the beaten track). Mr. Willy Hess, too, was very happy in having selected the Adagio from Spohr's eleventh Violin Concerto, in which his finished technique and fine tone had full scope. Dvorák's Quintet in A (Op. 81) and Schubert's Quintet in C (Op. 163), with a portion of Beethoven's "Serenade" Trio, completed the programme.

The D'Oyly Carte combination has fulfilled a six nights' engagement at the Grand Theatre in a round of Gilbert and Sullivan operas, with something like its usual success.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE "Robertson" Concert, in aid of St. Paul's Church, drew a crowded audience, in the Burslem Town Hall, on the 2nd ult. The Rev. N. C. Robertson, Mr. W. Sherratt, Miss Robertson, Mr. Jack Robertson, Mr. Stuart Varcoe (violin), and Mr. Barlow (euphonium) supplied the programme.

For the fourth Meakin Popular Concert, on the 8th ult., the admirable band of the Royal Artillery was the attraction. Under the direction of Sergeant-Major Walker, a long and varied programme was carried out most successfully. Miss Florence Shee was the vocalist. The audience, as usual, was thoroughly interested in the programme, giving unstinted praise to the performers. Considerable discussion has taken place in local musical circles concerning the effect of these Concerts upon the musical education of the district. Many contend that opportunity should be given to the local artists at these Concerts; but, on the other hand, it is pointed out that the founder never intended to allow the Concerts to become experimental, but to bring high-class performances within the reach of the people. The unqualified success of the Concerts is undoubtedly due to the judicious selection of principals by the hon. secretary (Mr. G. Barlow).

The Victoria Hall, on the occasion of the St. John's Schools Annual Concert, was well filled, and the performance reflected great credit upon Mr. Walmsley, the capable Conductor.

All the local choral organisations have resumed rehearsals after the brief vacation.

The North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society (under Dr. Swinnerton Heap) has an early performance of "Elijah" in view; the Hanley Glee and Madrigal (Mr. Garner), "The Revenge"; while Burslem Tonic Sol-fa Choir (now under the bâton of Mr. T. Hulme, J.P., C.C.) will prepare a miscellaneous programme.

At the quarterly meeting of the North Staffordshire Tonic Sol-fa Committee, the arrangements for the usual examinations were made and the report of the former examination received and adopted.

Miss Mary Richardson, prior to a Concert tour in Scotland, gave an Evening Concert at Silverdale, being assisted by a strong list of local performers.

The Concert of the 17th ult., by Miss Edith Hooley's Orchestra and the Hill Top Choir, at the Burslem Town Hall, attracted a crowded audience. In addition to instrumental pieces and part-songs, under the direction of Mr. T. Hulme, J.P., C.C., a few solos were rendered. Miss Tertia Bennett's singing calls for special mention. Messrs. F. C. Bennett and Wood accompanied.

The Pianoforte Recital of Mr. Paderevski, on the 29th, closed the musical programme for the month.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE last weeks of 1894 were, as usual in this county, and especially in the West Riding, given up almost entirely to performances of Handel's "Messiah." Of these it may suffice to consider a few of the most conspicuous. Among the chief choral societies of the West Riding are those of Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, and Halifax. All these gave "The Messiah" during the week before Christmas, and it is satisfactory to note that in each case some advance was shown. The improvement was not in the excellence of the chorus singing, for West Riding chorus singers have long ranked high in their interpretation of Handel's music, but rather in matters of detail connected principally with the band. In this respect there was room for improvement, for a slovenly tradition had crept in that called loudly for reform. A year ago the Leeds Philharmonic Society led the way by the adoption of Franz's scholarly edition of the Handel-Mozart score. The result was so favourable that it was used again this year, and with excellent effect. Indeed, it is doubtful whether a more generally satisfactory performance of the orchestral part of the Oratorio has ever been given in Yorkshire. The soloists were Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Sarah Berry (who sang with just the right amount of expression and no more), Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. David Bispham. Mr. Bispham, who made his first appearance in Leeds, sang most artistically, his rendering of the frequently omitted air, "Thou art gone up on high," deserving particular mention. Mr. Alfred Broughton conducted. Franz's version was this year adopted by the Dewsbury Choral Society, which had not given "The Messiah" since Mr. George H. Hirst became Conductor. The performance indicated in many details the care and intelligence taken in preparing the Oratorio, and though some of the Conductor's tempi were not in accordance with tradition, they always had some sound reason to recommend them. The soloists were Madame Clara Leighton, Miss Berry, Mr. Blagbro, and Mr. W. Thornton, a thoroughly efficient quartet. The Huddersfield Society's performance demands a high place on account of the excellence of the choral singing; indeed, it is difficult to imagine Handel's choruses sung with greater weight and breadth. The orchestra, on the other hand, was below the average, and the trumpet obbligato was quite unworthy of the occasion. Though the usual version was adopted, there was an improvement noticeable in several matters of detail, showing that the Conductor, Mr. J. Bowling, is alive to the necessity of giving Handel's masterpiece in a less slipshod fashion than has hitherto been the custom. Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Eleanor Rees, and Messrs. W. Green and D. Hughes were the soloists. The Halifax performance was one of all-round excellence, and showed the same tendency towards greater finish in the instrumental details that has been noticed with regard to the other societies. Mr. W. H. Garland conducted and the principals were Miss Regina Atwater, Miss M. Hooton, Mr. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Norman Salmond. Of "The Messiah" performances we are considering, that of the Bradford Old Choral Society was the only one that showed little or no advance from corrupt traditions. Still, it was a good performance, the chorus being fresh and bright. Its chief claim to distinction was the individual reading of the bass solos by Mr. Frangon Davies, whose performance was full of points of interest. Miss Emily Squire, Miss Berry, and Mr. E. Branscombe were the other soloists. Here, as at Dewsbury and Halifax, Mr. Tomlinson was the principal trumpet, and played the obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound" with rare precision and beauty of tone. Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw was the Conductor.

At Bradford the Subscription Concerts were resumed on the 11th ult. Dr. J. C. Bridge's "Chester" Symphony was the most prominent thing in the programme. Though improved by the removal of the weakest of the six movements, the March, it tends to lengthiness. Still, it is a clever and interesting work, showing a pleasing gift of melody and marked ingenuity of treatment. Weber's Concertstück was played with charming grace and ease by Miss Pauline Sant Angelo, and Grieg's "Sigurd Jorsalfar" Suite, capially played by Sir Charles Hallé's band, formed a notable feature of the programme. Madame Ella Russell was the vocalist. At Leeds, the Messrs. Haddock gave one of their "Musical Evenings" on the 15th ult. A Trombone Quartet, consisting of Messrs. Colton, Davis, Eatherley, and Booth, were, from the comparative novelty of such a combination, the sensation of the evening. Miss Ada Wright, the pianist, made her first appearance in Leeds and played pieces by Chopin, Chaminade, and Moszkowski in a thoroughly musicianly and refined style. On the same date one of the Huddersfield Subscription Concerts took place. A programme of Chamber Music included Beethoven's Quartet in G (Op. 18, No. 2) and Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 81), in which Messrs. Hess, C. R. Briggs, Speelman, and Fuchs took part, with Mrs. E. Haley as pianist. Mr. Edward Lloyd was the vocalist. On December to the Scarborough Instrumental Society gave a highly interesting Concert, including several unfamiliar works. Miss Alderson-Smith, an exceptionally able amateur violoncellist, played Max Bruch's Canzona for violoncello and orchestra (Op. 55), and Mr. W. H. Cass played Beethoven's well-known Romance in G for violin. Miss J. Langford was the vocalist and Mr. F. de G. English the Conductor. On the 16th ult. Mr. S. Oppenheim gave a Pianoforte Recital at Leeds. A long selection of pieces, from Beethoven to Liszt, including a Scherzo by Brahms and a Ballade by Reinecke, proved the player to be possessed of exceptional execution, and only lacking in tenderness to be an artist of the first rank.

The Mirfield Choral Society, on December 21, gave Handel's "Joshua," very successfully. The soloists were Mrs. James Wilson, Madame S. Cragg, Messrs. Child, Driffield, and Barnes. Mr. Clark Ainley conducted. Under Mr. W. Squire, the Ripon Choral Society gave "The Messiah," on December 26, with Miss Beecroft, Miss Bingley, and Messrs. Parratt and Knowles as principals. On New Year's Day the Keighley Musical Union gave a Concert, of which Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was the most important feature. Though without an orchestra the performance was not ineffective, and Miss Ada Lee, Miss D. W. Jackson, and Messrs. Blagbro and Browning formed an efficient quartet of principals. Mr. Arthur Burnley conducted.

On the 18th ult. the newly-formed Harrogate Musical Society gave its first Concert. Haydn's "Creation" was the work chosen for performance. The principals were Miss Alice Holman, Mr. Wills Page, and Mr. W. Thornton. The chorus was good and the orchestra quite as efficient as might fairly be expected.

At the last meeting of the Leeds Festival General Committee it was settled that the Festival should take place on October 2 to 5, and a list of principal choral works was agreed to. These were Mass in D (Beethoven), "The Messiah" (Handel), "Walpurgis Night" (Mendelssohn), "Stabat Mater" (Dvorák), "Flying Dutchman" selection (Wagner), "My Spirit was in Heaviness" (Bach), "In exitu Israel" (Wesley). It was stated that Sir Arthur Sullivan, to whom, as Conductor, the list had been submitted, had expressed his approval, with the exception of Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," to the suitability of which he expressed some doubt. It would be interesting to know on what grounds this doubt was expressed, as it might have been thought that the "Stabat Mater," which first brought the Bohemian composer into prominence in this country, and still in the opinion of many remains his masterpiece, was eminently suited for any Festival programme. As "The Messiah" has not been given at a Leeds Festival since 1874, the most revolutionary musician could not object to its introduction, while the pre-eminence of West Riding choruses in Handelian music makes one look forward to a phenomenal performance.

MUSIC IN WILTS AND HANTS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A CONCERT given in the County Hall, on the 16th ult., by the Countess of Radnor, is, so far as Salisbury is concerned, the only event of interest to record here. A small orchestra of strings played some pieces of a light character, and songs were sung by Lady Radnor, Lord Folkestone, and Madame de Fonblanque-Campbell. Miss Emily Shinner gave two violin solos. The proceeds of the Concert were devoted to the funds of the Early Closing Association in this city.

At Marlborough Mr. Bambridge's Carol Concerts have become annual events, and that which took place in the Town Hall, on the 4th ult., was one of the most interesting yet given. The programme included several new carols as well as one or two old favourites, all of which were admirably sung by a well-trained choir of fifty voices, amongst the most popular being Sir Joseph Barnby's exquisite settings of "The Virgin is hushing her Baby to rest" and "Darkness fell on the weary earth," and Dr. Bridge's "Sweeter than songs of summer." The Concert was pleasantly varied by sacred songs sung by Mrs. Peyton, Mr. Stuart Higges, and Mr. Leader; and Miss G. Corbens played Mackenzie's "Benedictus" as a violin solo. Mr. W. S. Bambridge conducted.

On the 3rd ult. an Organ Recital was given in the Abbey Church, Romsey, by Mr. R. Sharpe, of St. Mary's, Southampton, assisted by Mr. H. Winslow Hall as vocalist. The object of the Recital, which was well attended, was to raise funds for necessary repairs to the organ. The Romsey Musical Society, conducted by Mr. Moss, gave a Concert in the Town Hall, on the 15th ult. Mendelssohn's Psalm, "As the hart pants," was the chief feature of the first part of the programme, the usual miscellaneous selection composing the second part. The band and chorus, which had been carefully drilled by the honorary conductor, numbered about fifty performers, and the solo vocalists were Madame Eva Scorey and Mr. Sidney Kendall. Miss F. E. Moss, a young lady of decided talent, was the principal violinist.

At Andover, Mr. Arthur Bennett's Concert, which took place in the Town Hall, on the 15th ult., afforded an opportunity of hearing some excellent performances upon the violoncello and pianoforte by Mr. Prosper Burnett and Mr. Christopher Young respectively, the latter, a pupil of Mr. Dannreuther, being a player of quite exceptional ability. The vocalists engaged were Miss Kate Thomas, Miss Nellie Edwards, and Mrs. Rogers.

At the Garrison Chapel, Netley, a special musical Service was held on Thursday, the 3rd ult. The "Christmas music" from "The Messiah" was well rendered by the choir, augmented for the occasion by a number of ladies and gentlemen of the neighbourhood, Mrs. Williams presiding efficiently at the organ. One or two carols and a chorus from Mozart's Twelfth Mass were also excellently sung, and the "service" was altogether an interesting and impressive one.

On December 31 Afternoon and Evening Concerts were given by Mr. J. G. Luard, in the Town Hall, Ryde. The choirboys of the Parish Church, of which Mr. Luard is organist, sang some part-songs very creditably and performed Haydn's Toy Symphony apparently as well to their own delight as to that of the audience. Mrs. Colenutt was the vocalist, and Mr. Du Domaine played some excellent violin solos.

The Southampton Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. H. M. Pike, re-assembled for practice on the 21st ult., Haydn's "Creation" being the work selected for performance at the next Concert.

The third of a series of Chamber Concerts was given in the Town Hall, Chippenham, on the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. Brotherhood. The programme was an excellent one, and included Schubert's Octet in F (Op. 166) for two violins, viola, violoncello, bass, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, and Haydn's String Quartet in D (Op. 64, No. 5). Miss E. Shuttleworth played a pianoforte solo by Rubinstein, and Miss F. M. Brotherhood gave a good rendering of the Allegro from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in E minor (Op. 64). Mr. A. Wetten was the vocalist.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON December 20, in the Church of Zion and St. Timothy, three works were given by the Church Choral Society, in a way that was a source of much congratulation to the enthusiastic director, Mr. Richard Henry Warren. "The Cradle of Christ," by Dr. Bridge, was first sung, and its presentation on this occasion gave the desired opportunity of hearing a new English work under the most favourable auspices possible. Its part-writing and chorus effects were the most pleasing, though the entire work seemed a good, easily comprehensible setting of the text. Mozart's "Requiem" followed as the second number. The daily press offered numerous criticisms of Mr. Warren's tempi in this selection; but we are inclined to favour what was the result of ripe deliberation on his part. The church is exceedingly resonant, and the Mozart music contains many rapid voice passages, which would have suffered both in dignity and in clearness under a more rapid beat. Liszt's 13th Psalm proved a successful climactic ending to the programme. In this, Mr. McKenzie Gordon, the tenor soloist, made a particularly favourable impression, singing in good voice and in excellent style. The work of both chorus and orchestra was also a decided credit to the occasion. The other soloists were Mrs. Schilling, Miss Alice Mandelick, and Dr. Carl Martin, all of them well chosen and all of them successful in their parts.

In the same week the Musical Art Society, under Mr. Frank Damrosch, gave the first Concert of its second season. The programme was mainly made up of old motets appropriate to Christmastide, by such composers as Palestrina, Nanini, Vittoria, Calvisius, and Cornelius. Mr. Frank Damrosch has too often demonstrated his ability as a conductor of choral works to tempt us to add words of praise here. His Society of solo voices is, perhaps, less choice in its make-up than it was a year ago, though, for that very reason, all the more credit is due to him that no falling-off in the quality of its work was perceptible.

Undoubtedly the event that has attracted the most attention thus far this season was the production of the first two acts of Mr. Walter Damrosch's new opera, "The Scarlet Letter," by the Symphony and Oratorio Societies, on the 5th ult., the composer himself conducting. The tributes paid Mr. Damrosch on this occasion by chorus, orchestra, and audience were overwhelming in their enthusiasm, and the applause was answered by a graceful speech from him.

The musical treatment of the opera book is as strictly after the lines of Richard Wagner as could be possible without becoming open to the charge of plagiarism, and the orchestration is so beautiful, to the smallest detail, as to be a complete surprise to all American musicians. The chorus-writing is on so grand a scale as to suggest serious doubts as to its practicability for the stage, but with the Oratorio Society the ensemble effects were little short of superb. The melodic and solo portions were of such character as to frequently make the discriminating subscribers to the Symphony Society demand repetitions—an unusual state of affairs in the circle of the conservative habitués of the Symphony Concerts.

The programme of this Concert was as follows:—Part I., Symphony 3, in E flat (Mozart). Part II., "The Scarlet Letter" (Walter Damrosch), opera in three acts, the dramatic poem by George Parsons Lathrop (new, first time)—a. The First Act, entire; b. "Scene in the Forest," from Act Second; Hester, Lillian Nordica (by kind permission of Messrs. Abbey and Grau); Arthur, Wm. H. Rieger; Chillingworth, Giuseppe Campanari (by kind permission of Messrs. Abbey and Grau); Wilson, Ericsson F. Bushnell; Governor, Conrad Behrens; Brackett, James F. Thomson; Puritans, the Oratorio Society chorus of 400. Among the soloists, Madame Nordica and Mr. Giuseppe Campanari clearly out-classed their associates, and were of no small assistance to Mr. Damrosch in obtaining the marked success attending the production of "The Scarlet Letter."

"The Messiah" was given three times in Christmas week by the Oratorio Society, and repeated again in the following week. The choruses were sung as well as they usually are at these Christmas performances in the matter of technical delivery, but better than they usually are in the matter of tempo. There has always before been a tendency to rush the choruses, with the resulting sacrifice of breadth to brilliancy. No such criticism could be offered this year, nor did the additional dignity in tempo cause any lack of the old-time brilliancy and spirit. The soloists were Mesdames Nordica (soprano), Carlotta Desvignes (contralto), Messrs. David G. Henderson (tenor), and Watkin Mills (bass).

MUSIC IN MONTREAL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON December 21 the Philharmonic Society gave its eleventh performance of Handel's "Messiah" in the Windsor Hall, which was crowded to the doors. Their Excellencies the Governor-General and the Countess of Aberdeen were present.

The Society's chorus this season numbers 290 members, and their intimate acquaintance with the great choruses was shown by the confidence and precision with which they were sung.

The soprano and contralto soloists were Montreal ladies, Miss Ella Walker, of the Royal College of Music, London, being the soprano, and Miss Maud Burdette, the contralto. Both ladies acquitted themselves with distinction. Mr. W. H. Rieger and Mr. Clarke sang the tenor and bass solos most artistically; Mr. E. N. Lafricain, of Boston, was the trumpet soloist. The orchestra was local and, though not very strong in numbers, accompanied very acceptably.

At the next Concert, on the 19th inst., Haydn's "Creation" will be given. This work, which bids fair to rival "The Messiah" in popularity with the Montreal public, is now an annual event.

The Philharmonic Society's Annual Festival takes place on April 2, 3, and 4, when Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," and Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" will be performed. There will also be one Matinée of miscellaneous numbers for orchestra and soloists. English readers will be interested to learn that Mr. Watkin Mills, who is now singing in the large cities of the States with great success, will sing the title rôle of "Elijah."

A new and very important phase in Montreal music is the formation of a Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Professor Couture. The orchestra consists of some forty-five musicians, gathered principally from the various theatres. As the players are engaged at night, the Symphony Concerts have to be given in the afternoon, but this does not deter the public, who are enjoying the really excellent music in very large numbers. The improvement in music and in musical taste in Montreal during the past few years affords great gratification to those who have worked so hard to bring about such excellent results.

THE Society of Women Journalists held its second meeting at the Society of Arts' Room, on the 18th ult., when a paper, "On Musical Criticism," was read by Mr. Sidney R. Thompson. He sketched, with considerable acumen and humour, the essential qualifications, natural and acquired, of a good critic, laying it down that wide technical knowledge, catholic sympathies, emotional susceptibility, and literary skill were the chief of these. It was also necessary that the critic's moods should not bias his judgment, and that he should have strength of mind enough to bestow praise on his enemies or blame on his friends when, as often happened, they deserved it. Mr. Thompson also contrasted the requirements of criticism intended respectively for daily, weekly, and monthly, and for technical and untechnical papers, and touched upon the strain, mental and physical, which a conscientious London musical critic was bound to bear. Mr. Thompson contended that the best criticism would be a judicious combination of the methods of the old, or "authoritative," and the new, or "impressionist," schools. The "old" critic may at times have made too much of the grammar of music, but the new critic was often entirely ignorant of it. Literary skill and emotional susceptibility did not absolve him from the necessity of knowing "the difference between a trio and a concerto." Mr. W. H. Pollock was in the chair, and a large number of well-known journalists and critics were present. The discussion was, however, very brief.

DR. E. H. TURPIN, the Warden of Trinity College, presented, on the 16th ult., the diplomas and certificates gained at the forty-third half-yearly higher examinations. Ten candidates were successful in obtaining the Association of the Institution: The Misses Baker, E. A. Durnford, G. R. Howatson, A. L. Mixer, B. H. Rennie, K. E. Yeoman; Messrs. P. S. Hallett, J. S. Maskery, J. H. Smethurst, and William Titterton. Three passed as Licentiates: the Misses Kate Fairbridge and Eliza Hammond and Mr. C. W. Bowdler. The Pianoforte Accompaniment prize was won by Miss M. Phillips; and the Maybrick prize for ballad singing was awarded to Miss H. V. Ambrose. Only one certificated organist was announced, Mr. M. P. Balme. Mr. B. E. Dudley took honours in the harmony test. In his usual address to the students, Dr. Turpin said that the candidates who had presented themselves for the examinations had been more numerous than on any previous occasion, and about fifty per cent. of these had passed. He advised all to make a thorough study of harmony and counterpoint, both of which were as necessary now when we had to find a path through the intricacies of modern music as they were 140 years ago.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, President of the Royal College of Organists, distributed, on the 11th ult., the Diplomas of Fellowship to the nine successful candidates out of the 103 who presented themselves at the recent examinations held at this Institution. The following were the recipients:—R. O. Beachcroft, W. C. Bliss, W. B. Brookes, L. A. Cane, J. H. England, C. W. Fisher, P. Harmon, A. E. Hull, L. H. Keay, J. C. Long, F. Shaw, W. L. P. Twining. The following received from Professor Bridge, on the 18th ult., the Diploma of Associate-ship:—W. Abbott, W. Adams, M. Andrews, W. H. Bell, Miss A. G. Bennett, C. J. Brennan, H. Brookes, A. Carr, N. Christie, M. E. Cooke, H. J. R. Covey, J. H. Cowan, Miss A. Einhauser, Miss F. Gabriel, B. K. Gillon, H. S. Gorst, W. Grocock, T. Halsall, E. G. Hartley, F. Holloway, H. Humm, W. H. Ibberson, A. Ingham, A. B. Ingham, W. F. Kingdon, H. Lunn, Miss C. M. Lyde, A. Mann, A. J. Naish, D. Parkes, G. T. Patman, A. N. Price, N. G. Richards, C. Ridgway, J. F. Semple, W. Slater, E. N. Taylor, H. Thompson.

An impressive performance of the first two parts of Bach's Christmas Oratorio was given, on the 6th ult., in St. Mary Abbots, Kensington. The principal solos were sung by Mrs. Hutchinson and Miss Hilda Wilson, both ladies doing justice to the fine music. The choruses were effectively rendered by the choir, the varying sentiments of the text being intelligently expressed and the tone admirably shaded. Mr. Henry Bird, who presided at the organ with his usual skill, was assisted by an efficient orchestra, and Mr. L. S. Higham conducted. There was a crowded congregation which was invited to take part in the singing of the chorales. It was somewhat surprising, however, to receive an intimation that the previous rendering of this work last year resulted in a deficit of over £20, and that unless the offertory on this occasion defrayed this year's expenses these performances would be discontinued. We trust the warning had the desired effect of awakening some doing parishioners to a sense of their responsibilities.

DR. C. J. FROST has been appointed head of the music section of the Goldsmiths' Company's Technical and Recreative Institute at New Cross. As during last year the number of entries for musical instruction amounted to 1,650, the importance and responsibilities of the position are obvious, and the Goldsmith's Company may be congratulated on having accepted the services of so able and experienced a musician. A series of Organ Recitals will be given by Dr. Frost, on Thursdays, at the Institute. Each Recital will be devoted to composers of one of the following nationalities: German, French, English, Italian, Belgian, and Scandinavian.

MISS ALICE BLOGG secured a full audience at her Matinée, or, strictly speaking, Chamber Concert, in the Salle Erard on Saturday afternoon, the 12th ult. A feature of the programme was Beethoven's seldom-heard Trio in B flat for pianoforte, violin, and clarinet (Op. 11), in which the Concert-giver was assisted by Miss Fanny Woolf and Mr. Sydney Brooks. Miss Alice Blogg is a pianist of considerable ability, as was proved by her rendering of minor pieces by Bach, Scarlatti, Schubert, Chopin, and Liszt, but she did not essay any work of large magnitude.

THE series of Dramatic Recitals by Mr. Charles Fry, postponed from the autumn, will take place, at St. Martin's Hall, during the present month. Selections from "Macbeth," with new incidental music, including a setting, for the first time, of Shakespeare's words of the Witches, by Clement Locknane, will be given, on the 5th inst.; from "Romeo and Juliet," with new music by Berthold Tours, on the 12th; and from "The Merchant of Venice," with Sir Arthur Sullivan's music, on the 19th. Mr. Fry will again have the co-operation of Miss Olive Kennett in this series.

THE following were the successful candidates at the recent examinations in Music at the University of London. B.Mus.: First Division—Percy Rodney Rideout; Second Division, Florence G. E. Higgins and Frederick G. Russell. Intermediate: First Division, Jonathan Charlesworth and Bruce Kingsley Gillon; Second Division, Augusta M. R. Dobson. Intermediate D.Mus.: First Division, Thomas Ely; Second Division, William H. V. Pearce. Examiners: Professor J. F. Bridge, Dr. C. Hubert Parry, Professor J. H. Poynting, and Professor J. J. Thomson.

A NEW cantata, entitled "The Song of the Nativity," written by Miss Gauntlett, and composed by Mr. W. S. Vinning, was produced, on the 11th ult., at St. Peter's, Bayswater. The first part of the work is suitable for the Advent season, and the whole for that of Christmas. The music is extremely melodious, and well within the capabilities of ordinary church choirs. It was effectively sung on this occasion by the St. Peter's Choir, the composer presiding at the organ with skill and artistic judgment.

MR. WILLIAM MAKEPEACE, Lay Clerk of Rochester Cathedral, is the recipient of a handsome oak cabinet and a purse of gold from his friends and fellow-choristers, in commemoration of his fifty years' service in this Cathedral. Mr. Makepeace, when schoolmaster of the Choir Schools, numbered among his pupils Professor Bridge, and others taught by him were Dr. Bridge (of Chester), Dr. Armes (of Durham), the late Joseph Maas, and Dr. Crow (of Ripon).

THE "Creation" was given at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, on the 9th ult. The soloists were Miss Edith Luke, Mr. Edwin Bryant, and Mr. W. P. Richards, the choruses being rendered by the church choir, augmented for the occasion. The organ accompaniments were played by Mr. F. N. Abernethy, and the work was conducted by Mr. J. R. Griffiths.

MR. R. A. NORTHCOTT, the Organist and Choirmaster of the Swiss Church, gave an excellent Organ Recital on New Year's Day, when his programme was made up of pieces by Spark, Lemaire, and Barnby, and a Festival March especially composed by himself for the Christmas Festival. The latter, which was well played, contains three pretty motives.

A SUCCESSFUL performance of "The Messiah" was given, on the 19th ult., in the Public Hall, West Norwood, by the Norwood and District Choral Society, under the able Conductorship of Mr. Lawrence Fryer. The soloists were Madame Barton, Madame Barter, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail, who did full justice to their respective parts.

THE first prize in the pianoforte division of the International Musical Competition, recently held at Brussels, has been awarded to Mr. R. Orlando Morgan for a Pianoforte Sonata in D minor. Mr. Morgan, who was formerly a student at the Guildhall School of Music, also gained a diploma for a chorus for mixed voices with organ accompaniment.

A MOST interesting and artistic series of Organ Recitals has been given on Sunday afternoons during the past month at St. Anne's, Soho, by Mr. E. H. Thorne, whose masterly performances of Bach's organ music have attracted attention on many former occasions. Two of the programmes were entirely devoted to the works of this master.

At the Musical Association, on the 7th ult., Mr. Alfred Rhodes read a paper entitled "The Curiosities of the Keyboard and Staff." Mr. W. H. Cummings (who occupied the chair), Mr. Southgate, and Mr. Arthur Trickett took part in the subsequent discussion.

THE Eugène Oudin Memorial Concert will take place, under the direction of Mr. N. Vert, at St. James's Hall, on the 23th inst. The proceeds of the Concert are to be invested and held in trust for the benefit of the three young children of the late Mr. Oudin.

At the Saturday Evening Concert held at the People's Palace, on the 26th ult., the entire programme of music was supplied by the professional students of Trinity College, London, under the direction of Professor Bradbury Turner.

MR. DANIEL MAYER has made arrangements with Mr. Arthur Nikisch to conduct four Orchestral Concerts, at the Queen's Hall, in June and July next. The reputation of Mr. Nikisch as a Conductor was chiefly gained during his direction of the Symphony Orchestra at Boston.

THE organ at the Chapel Royal, Hampton Court Palace, which was originally built by Schreider, the builder of the Westminster Abbey organ, has recently been renovated by Messrs. Hill.

COUNTY COUNCILLOR S. ROBINSON, of Nottingham, has offered a money prize of £5 to be competed for in July by the students of the Guildhall School of Music.

MR. E. H. LEMARE is giving a series of Organ Recitals, with vocal music, on Saturday afternoons, at 5 p.m., at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Square.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to have to announce the following deaths:—

RUDOLF FÖRSTER, composer of dances and other light and popular pieces, at Schöneberg, near Berlin, on December 23, aged thirty-four.

RUDOLF FRANK, professor of the bassoon at the National Conservatoire of Music, and a member of the opera orchestra at Buda Pesth, where he died on the 7th ult., aged forty-six.

KARL FRITSCH (alias Herzmansky), a member of the Vienna Court Orchestra, and Conductor of the Vöslauer Kur-Orchestra, on December 29, at Vienna, aged forty-three.

GUSTAVE LELONG, an excellent violinist, a pupil of the Paris Conservatoire, and for some years Conductor of the Association Artistique of Angers, died at Bordeaux, on December 24.

EDUARD THIELE, formerly Court Kapellmeister at Dessau, where he died, on the 10th ult., aged eighty-two.

GUSTAV WAGNER, formerly director of the Roumanian Conservatoire at Jassy, died recently at Lauban.

HANNS VON ZOIS, whose full name was Freiherr Zois von Edelstein, a composer of songs and operettas, died, on December 4, at Vienna, aged thirty-three.

JOHN H. AMERS, one of the best known bandmasters in the North of England, formerly of the Yeomanry Cavalry. He died on the 10th ult., at Newcastle-on-Tyne, aged fifty-three.

RICHARD WELTERLING, Court Musikdirektor at Detmold, where he died on December 23.

CARL STILLER, for many years organist of St. Peter's Church, Leipzig, where he died on December 27, aged fifty-seven.

CARL TELLE, formerly, for thirty years, "Ballet master" at the Vienna Court Opera. He composed over twenty ballets, some of which were very successful. He died at Klosterneuburg, on the 5th ult., aged sixty-eight.

WILHELM WIENER, the well known violinist, died on the 6th ult., at 21, Sutherland Terrace, Bayswater, aged fifty-six. He was born in Prague, where he learnt the violin from Mildner and harmony from Tomaschek, at the Conservatoire. At the age of sixteen he left for Brussels, and afterwards became a pupil of Molique. He came to London and joined Jullien's orchestra, in which he played second violin. He was leader of the principal Concerts in Bath, and later on, in recent years, he always occupied a similar post at the many Orchestral Concerts given by Señor Sarasate. He was also frequently heard at Messrs.

Chappell's Popular Concerts. In 1870 he started a series of Chamber Concerts of modern music, in conjunction with Messrs. Willem Coenen, Zerbini, and Daubert, at which many of Brahms's finest works were performed for the first time in England; amongst them were the String Sextet (Op. 18), on April 22, 1870; the great Piano-forte Quintet (Op. 34), on April 21, 1871; and the Trio in B minor (Op. 8). Besides these, numerous other works by Svendsen, Rubinstein, Rheinberger, Bargiel, Gernsheim—all of them hardly known in this country at that time, were produced of the four artists who thus did yeomen's service in the cause of modern art in those days, Mr. Coenen alone remains. He was for several years second violin in the late John Ella's Musical Union, and he also shared with Mr. L. Straus the first desk at the Philharmonic Concerts. He published several interesting and useful violin pieces, some of them being used at our schools of music for examination purposes, and he also left a number of works in MS. Mr. Wiener possessed a most valuable Strad, one of the finest specimens of Stradivarius's old age, it being dated 1732 de Anni 82. In 1877 he was married to Miss Kathleen Ryan, and he had two children.

BENJAMIN GODARD, the gifted French composer, died at Cannes, on the 10th ult., aged forty-five, after a long illness. He studied harmony at the Conservatoire, under Reber, and the violin under Henri Vieuxtemps. He accompanied the latter on two tours through Germany, which accounts, no doubt, to a certain extent, for his sympathies with German music, and more especially with Schumann, whose influence some of his earliest works betrayed. In 1865 he published a Violin Sonata, which was followed by a number of other pieces of chamber music, such as a Trio, a String Quartet, &c. In 1878 Godard, bracketed with Théodore Dubois, carried off the prize at the competition instituted by the municipality of Paris. The work which gained the distinction was "Le Tasse" (Tasso), a dramatic Symphony with soli and choruses, in some respects his best work. Amongst his other compositions are a Symphonie Orientale, a Symphonie Gothique, a Symphonie Légendaire, the well-known Concerto Romantique for violin, the operas "Pedro de Zalaméa," "Jocelyn," "Dante," "Les Guelphes," "Ruy Blas," and, finally, "La Vivandière," upon which he was engaged at the time of his death, and which is announced for production at the Paris Opéra Comique. In England, Godard was principally known by his Violin Concerto and some charming pianoforte pieces.

EDWARD SOLOMON, the well-known composer of comic opera, died on the 22nd ult., of typhoid fever. Mr. Solomon, who was almost entirely self-taught, made his first success with "Billie Taylor," which was produced in 1880. This was followed by "Claude Duval," 1881; "Lord Bateman," 1882; "The Vicar of Bray," 1882, and revived at the Savoy Theatre two years ago; "Paul and Virginia," 1883; and "Pocahontas," 1885. One of his most amusing works was the music written for Mr. Burnand's version of "Pickwick." Mr. Solomon has left several finished works in MS., as well as another comic opera, which was barely begun, and which Mr. Hamilton Clarke has undertaken to complete. He was only about forty years old.

THOMAS ANDREWS, the proprietor or the well-known pianoforte and music warehouse in Guildford, died at his residence, Westgate House, High Street, on the 15th ult., aged fifty-seven. The deceased, who was an excellent musician, at the age of twenty-four became organist of St. Mary's Church—a post which he retained till his last illness. He was also for many years conductor of several choral and orchestral societies in his district, and one of the local examiners for the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music.

JOHN GEORGE CALLCOTT, who died at his residence at Teddington, on the 7th ult., was born in 1821. He was successively organist of Eaton Episcopal Chapel, Eaton Square; St. Stephen's, Westminster (twenty-seven years); and the Parish Church, Teddington, Old and New (fourteen years)—which latter post he held at the time of his death. He was accompanist to Henry Leslie's Choir from 1854 to 1882, for which choir he wrote several excellent part-songs. During his early career he wrote some very successful dance music, produced at Jullien's Concerts, and some well-written pianoforte pieces and arrangements. Later he produced several cantatas, such as "The Golden Harvest," "Hallowe'en," &c., besides church music, a large quantity of which still remains in MS. He was an excellent pianist and splendid accompanist, and in the latter capacity went on a lengthened tour with Christine Nilsson. He had the honour of giving lessons to Alboni, the great contralto, during her stay in this country, at the time of the Franco-German War. As a man, he was respected by all who knew him, and was a kind friend and most genial companion. He was interred at Kensal Green Cemetery, on the 11th ult.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BACH'S "BAUERN" (OR "PEASANTS'") CANTATA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I was extremely gratified to see in your notice of the interesting Bach Concert recently given by Mr. Dolmetsch how highly you spoke of the charming music of the above cantata. The opinion thus expressed is only an amplification of what was said of it in a review in THE MUSICAL TIMES ten years ago. Referring to the opening aria the writer then remarked, amongst other things, that "the soprano solo, 'There is nought on earth so fair,' is so striking that we cannot but wonder that we never hear it in the concert-room." From the enclosed extracts it will be seen that the "Peasants" (or "Bauern") cantata, together with its companion, "Coffee" cantata, was first produced in the English dress provided for it by myself, at the Bow and Bromley Institute, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. G. McNaught, so long ago as the autumn of 1879. The Athenæum of November 1 of that year, in noticing the performance of the two cantatas, said: "Some of the airs in the 'Coffee' cantata are very fine, the last soprano song, 'Ah! to-day,' being remarkable for its extremely modern character. Even more interesting was the 'Peasants' cantata. The number of popular melodies to be found in this work is surprising; among the most striking may be mentioned the introductory chorus, 'God bless our noble lord'; the song, 'There is nought on earth so fair'; the bass airs, 'Fifty dollars all in drink' and 'Now let us be joyful and laugh,' and the final chorus." Something complimentary was also said of my pianoforte arrangement of the works, and the article concluded thus: "The musical public owe thanks to the managers of the Bow and Bromley Institute, as well as to Mr. McNaught, for an opportunity of making the acquaintance of Bach under an entirely new aspect."

Permit me to add that both works were afterwards published, adapted to English words, translated (with one or two exceptions) from the original German text.—Yours faithfully,

SAMUEL REAY.

The Song School, Newark,

[With Mr. Reay's letter came a copy of his edition of the work, which is published by Messrs. Weekes and Co.—Ed. M. T.]

TALL v. SHORT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In the course of a casual conversation with a musical friend the other day, he incidentally remarked that the late Sir Robert Stewart had noticed that the majority of eminent musicians were little men—or, at any rate, men below medium height. I at once proceeded to mentally catalogue all the best musicians I had seen, and to—as far as possible—ascertain what were the heights of those great musicians who have departed. The result has been, so far, to confirm in a remarkable degree Sir Robert Stewart's opinion, though in many cases I have been unable to find any data bearing on the subject at all. I gather, however, that Bach, Mozart, Haydn, Gluck, Beethoven, and possibly Handel were all below the medium height; whilst Spohr, Mendelssohn, Rossini, and Meyerbeer did not exceed it.

Information is, however, very difficult to obtain, having any authoritative value or certainty. If any of your readers are in possession of statistics bearing out these statements, or the reverse, I for one, of those musicians who are neither tall nor short, should value immensely such interesting information as you, Mr. Editor, might, with your courtesy, allow to appear.—Yours truly,

J. WARRINER.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

. Notices of concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur. Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

CONTRA.—The words of the Carol "God rest you merry, gentlemen," are non-copyright. In all the collections of Carols which we know some copyright Carols are included.

G. F. JONES.—If you will refer to your publishers they will tell you that the act of publication gives you copyright.

J. J. F. (Warrington), INQUIRER, and others.—Mr. Macdonald Smith may be addressed at Messrs. Steinway and Sons.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABERDARE.—The Choral Union held its twenty-second annual Oratorio Festival, on Christmas and Boxing Day, in the Temperance Hall. Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was admirably performed on the first day, and a miscellaneous Concert was given on the day following. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Mary Davies, Miss Ceinwen Jones, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. David Hughes—all of whom, with the exception of Miss Jones, also sang at the second performance, when instrumental solos were given by Miss Jones (harpist), Mr. W. L. Barrett, and Mr. A. Smith. An excellent orchestra was led by Mr. T. Carrington, Mr. R. Howells acted as accompanist, and Mr. W. J. Evans conducted in an able manner.

BANGOR.—An interesting Carol Service took place at the Cathedral on December 27, and on New Year's Eve Dr. Bridge's "The Cradle of Christ" was given, under Mr. Westlake Morgan's bâton, Mr. Hugh G. Brereton being at the organ. Mr. D. R. Ellis conducted an orchestral service at Horeb Chapel on December 31.

BRIDGWATER.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. A. Basker, gave an effective performance of "The Messiah," on the 3rd ult., in the Hall. The soloists were Miss E. Scorey, Miss Rees, Mr. S. Harper, and Mr. Roxburgh. The accompaniments were played by a small orchestra, led by Mr. T. Carrington.

CHELTENHAM.—Mr. George H. Fox gave the monthly popular Organ Recital, on the 9th ult., in Highbury Congregational Church. Mr. Fox played a well-varied programme, and was assisted by Mr. J. H. Pollard as vocalist.

CHERTSEY.—On the 14th ult. a special Service was held at the Parish Church, when the Christmas music from "The Messiah" was sung by the church choir, assisted by the members of Mr. Monk's Musical Union; and the soloists were Mrs. Monk, Miss Parr, Miss Wetton, Mr. A. Starkey, and Mr. D. Humphreys. Mr. Monk (Organist of the Church), who presided at the organ, was effectively assisted by a small orchestra.

DURBAN (SOUTH AFRICA).—The opening of the fine new organ erected in the town by Messrs. Brindley and Foster was celebrated by an excellent performance of "The Messiah," on December 20, by the Choral and Orchestral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. F. Crane. The soloists were Miss M. Stefani, Mrs. Lucas, Miss Hunter,

Mr. G. C. Macfarlane, the Rev. A. K. D. Edwards, and Mr. Otto Siedle. The choir numbered about 200 vocalists, and a small orchestra presided Mr. A. H. Day, who presided with skill at the new instrument.

EMSWORTH.—The Choral Society gave its eighteenth annual Concert on the 7th ult., in the Town Hall. The principal work performed was Hamish MacCunn's cantata "Bonny Kilmeny," the solos being sung by Miss M. Blessley, Mr. C. Hunnybun, and Mr. S. Kelly. The choruses were effectively sung, and the orchestra ably led by Mr. C. E. St. Quintin Bond. Mr. W. Packham conducted.

HAWICK.—The fifteenth performance of "The Messiah," under the conductorship of Mr. W. F. Wilson, was given, on December 27, in Wilton Church, by a chorus and orchestra of 150 performers. The principal artists were Madame Smith, Mrs. J. Yellowlees, Mr. T. H. Gledhill, and Mr. J. Tullock. Mr. Daly led the orchestra and Mr. C. Bradley presided at the organ.

HEATON NORRIS.—The Christ Church Choral Society, conducted by Mr. A. C. Seddon, gave a successful Concert, on the 13th ult., in the Schoolroom. The programme contained Gade's cantata "The Erl-King's Daughter," the solos in which were sung by Miss Amie St. John, Miss Barker, and Mr. R. Hoyle; and a miscellaneous selection in which the Conductor played one of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies, and songs were contributed by Miss E. Shepherd and Mr. Bradshaw. Mr. F. Woodward was the accompanist.

LANCASTER.—On Wednesday, the 16th ult., the Choral Society gave a very successful Concert in the Palatine Hall. The programme consisted of Cowen's old English Idyll, "St. John's Eve," and a miscellaneous selection. The principal vocalists were Madame Bertha Moore, Miss Jennie Langford, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. A. Percival. The band and chorus numbered 150 performers. Mr. W. J. Whitehead was leader, Mr. J. Slater presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. W. Aldous conducted.

LEYTONSTONE.—The Choral Society began its thirteenth season, at the Elliott Rooms, on the 14th ult. The programme consisted of a selection of part-songs and madrigals, by Morley, Beale, Macfarlane, and other eminent composers, and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," the solo part of which was sung by Miss Alice Motterway. The Rodriguez Instrumental Trio, consisting of Miss M. V. Rodriguez (violin), Miss A. Einhauser (viola), and Miss C. V. Rodriguez (pianoforte), played selections from Lachner and Wieniawski, and Mr. Sadleur Brown contributed songs by Piatti and Sullivan. Miss M. Beckwith was the accompanist, and Mr. J. W. Ulyett the conductor. —The new organ in St. John's Church has been utilised for a series of Organ Recitals during the last month by the following gentlemen: Mr. G. B. Gilbert, Mr. Henry Riding, Mr. H. F. Ellingford, and Mr. Owen Mead.

MELBOURNE (AUSTRALIA).—Mr. Ernest Wood's Organ Recitals in the Cathedral, at the close of last year, proved attractive to a large number of music-lovers, who apparently much enjoyed the excellent interpretations given of admirable programmes.

MONTROSE.—The Choral Union gave a performance of "The Messiah," on December 26, in the Parish Church. The soprano and contralto solos were sung by two local ladies, the tenor and bass being respectively Mr. J. Shakespeare Robinson and Mr. G. Glencorse. Mr. Hartley was at the organ and Mr. Walter Mitchell conducted.

NORTHAMPTON.—The Choral Society gave an effective performance of "The Messiah," in the Corn Exchange, on December 28, when the soloists were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Mary Tunnicliffe, Mr. John Bartlett, and Mr. Robert Grice. The band was ably led by Mr. A. W. Warren, and Mr. Brook Sampson conducted.

PLYMOUTH.—Mr. J. Pardew's annual Chamber Concert took place, on the 12th ult., in the Assembly Rooms. An excellent programme, which included Dvorák's Sextet in A (Op. 48) and Mozart's Clarinet Quintet, was admirably rendered by the Concert-giver, Mr. Wingate, Mr. F.

Gardner, Mr. R. Ball, Miss E. Smith, Mr. F. Winterbottom, and Mr. Dalwood, the last-named being the clarinetist. Miss E. Smith's violoncello solos were much enjoyed, as were also the vocal contributions of Miss Maud Brenton and Mr. M. Martin.

PORT ELIZABETH.—The Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Waltham Baker, gave an excellent performance of Haydn's "Creation," on December 1, before a large audience, in the Town Hall. The solos were sung by Mrs. G. Baker, Mr. Steven, Mr. F. Cook, and Mr. Georgehegan, and the instrumental portion of the work was effectively interpreted by the orchestra, led by Mr. P. Quartermann.

ST. ALBAN'S.—An excellent performance of Haydn's "Creation," by the Oratorio Society, took place on the 17th ult., in the Town Hall, under the able direction of Mr. W. H. Speer. The soloists were Madame Jones, Mr. Fell, and Mr. Kempton, and the instrumental portion of the work was effectively played by an efficient orchestra, led by Mr. W. F. Winckworth.

ST. AUSTELL.—Haydn's "Creation" was sung at a Festival Service held in the Parish Church, on the 17th ult. The soloists were Mrs. Mason, Mr. J. Dean Trotter, and Mr. S. J. Bishop. Mr. F. J. Mountford was the organist, and Mr. J. Griffin conducted.

SEAL (KENT).—An agreeable Concert was given during last month by the Ladies' Choral Society, conducted by Mr. A. Youens. Part-songs by Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, and other composers were effectively sung, and were pleasantly varied by vocal solos by Miss G. Martin, Mr. F. St. John, and Mr. A. Osman; and by clarinet and flute pieces respectively played by Mr. G. Cripps and Mr. T. Batten. A small orchestra lent effective aid, and Mrs. Palmer and Mr. Youens played the pianoforte accompaniments.

TOTNES.—Miss Annie S. Holman, a local violinist, gave a successful Concert on the 8th ult. She was assisted by Miss Edith Rodda, Mr. Humphrey Jones, and Mr. Fred. Dison, vocalists; and Messrs. R. Ball, Prosper Burnett, and G. L. Loam, instrumentalists. The programme included the Minuetto and Allegro from Rheinberger's Quartet in E flat and Jadassohn's Trio in C minor, and Miss Holman, among other violin solos, gave an excellent interpretation of Vieuxtemps's Fantasia Appassionata.

WREXHAM.—On the 6th ult. the Christmas portion of "The Messiah" and the "Hallelujah" Chorus were sung at St. Mark's Church, under the conductorship of Mr. C. Morton Bailey, with Mr. Walter Williams at the organ. Mrs. Algernon Johnson sang "O Thou that tellest," and other solos were rendered by the boys of the choir, Mr. Williams, and Mr. J. H. Aldred. A new setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, by Mr. Bailey, was also performed.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Percy W. Small, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Barnabas, Bell Street, Edgware Road.—Mr. Box, Organist to the Corporation of the City of Worcester.—Mr. George Aitken, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Hampstead.—Mr. E. Wilton Bradley, Organist and Choirmaster to Christ Church, Sparkbrook, Birmingham.—Mr. Wm. Rayment Kirby, Organist and Choirmaster to St. George the Martyr, Southwark.—Mr. A. T. Lee Ashton, Organist and Choirmaster to Christ Church, Morningside, Edinburgh.—Mr. James A. Crapper, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Kirkcudbright.

CHOIR APPOINTMENT.—Mr. T. Barlow Maude, Choirmaster to St. Clement's New Church, Chorlton-cum-Hardy.

MR.

DOUGLAS POWELL (BASS-BARITONE).

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.
BERLIOZ's "FAUST," December 15, 1894.

"Mr. Douglas Powell sang the 'Rat Song' with real beauty of voice and of style. He made all the greater effect by refraining from forcing his voice as so many new-comers do in the Albert Hall."—The Times.

"An exceptionally successful début at this Hall was made by Mr. Douglas Powell, a young baritone, the possessor of a fine voice and manly style."—Morning Post.

"Praise is due to Mr. Douglas Powell, a new baritone, who sang the 'Song of the Rat' with a measure of force that testifies to his possession of exceptional abilities."—Standard.

SULLIVAN's "GOLDEN LEGEND," January 17, 1895.

"Mr. Douglas Powell's beautiful voice was most advantageously exhibited in the music of Lucifer, which he sang with great vigour and complete success."—The Times.

"Mr. Powell may, unhesitatingly, be placed in the foremost ranks of our most promising young concert singers. He has a fine baritone voice of musical and sympathetic quality, and a manly, broad style."—Standard.

"The important part of Lucifer was capably sustained by Mr. Douglas Powell, a young baritone of great promise and excellent abilities."—Morning Post.

"A genuine success was gained by Mr. Douglas Powell, who replaced Mr. Watkin Mills, absent in the United States, and who sang the part of Lucifer with all due expression and spirit."—Daily News.

Mr. Powell sang the part of Lucifer with a great deal of spirit and humour, showing a command of declamatory power that was hardly to be expected in such full measure from so young an artist."—Star.

"The part so closely associated with Mr. Santley was sung with intelligence and fine expression by Mr. Powell, a new-comer, but already fully accepted as one of the most promising of our younger baritones."—St. James's Gazette.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"MESSIAH," Christmas Day, 1894.

"Signor Foli was to have sung, but Mr. Douglas Powell, who made a very favourable impression, took his place."—The Times.

"Mr. Douglas Powell undertook with very satisfactory results the bass solos, which were originally announced to be sung by Signor Foli."—The Queen.

Mr. Powell includes among his future engagements: Royal Choral Society, "King Saul"; Queen's Hall Choral Society, "Elijah"; Western Counties Musical Festival, "Elijah"; The London Ballad Concerts, Mr. Dolmetsch's Concerts of old French and German Music, &c.

J. CURWEN AND SONS'PRIZES FOR MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Messrs. J. Curwen and Sons offer the following Prizes for Musical Compositions:—

FIFTY POUNDS for the best Sacred Cantata for mixed voices, suited to ordinary Choral Societies, somewhat descriptive and dramatic in style, without great difficulties. Not more than four Soloists. To occupy about an hour in performance. Chief work to be given to Chorus.

TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS for the best Sacred Cantata for Sunday Schools, to consist of easy chorus, solo, duet, hymns with varied treatment, &c., interspersed with short Scripture Readings or passages to carry on the narrative; the music broad and simple in style, but telling. Chief work to be given to Chorus.

FIFTEEN POUNDS for the best Part-Song or Chorus-Glee, for mixed voices, unaccompanied, sacred or secular, in free and varied form, possessing marked character and expression.

The Regulations may be had on application to J. CURWEN and Sons, 8 and 9, Warwick Lane, E.C.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary Parish Churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, contains the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

PAPER BOOKS, TWO SHILLINGS. TONIC SOL-FA, NINEPENCE.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Thirty-three years have elapsed since the publication of the first English edition, and faithful to its original as that edition may have been in the main, it has been felt that closer adherence to the accepted standard text is attainable, and, as far as is at all practicable, should be attained. With this view the present edition is issued. The chorales, choruses, and solos have been newly and independently translated from the original German words, and the adaptation of the narrative of the Evangelist, a task rendered perhaps somewhat less difficult and hazardous by the aid of the Revised Version of the New Testament, has been carefully reconsidered and re-arranged so as to preserve unaltered, as far as may be, the musical text of the original.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"This composition is the work of a competent musician, and from beginning to end is full of reverent, tuneful, and appropriate music."
—Church Times.

"The work is well laid out, very melodious, and by no means difficult."—Musical News.

"The choral writing shows the practised hand of the musician, and altogether the work is well written, and one that should be warmly welcomed by all interested in the musical services of the Church."—Birmingham Daily Post.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU

AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs

BY THE

REV. E. V. HALL, M.A.

Late Precentor of Worcester Cathedral.

Price Eightpence.

Words, with music to the Hymns, price Twopence.

This is an attempt to provide music for Lent and for Good Friday of the simplest kind, for use in country churches. The music is interspersed with well-known hymns, in which the congregation may be invited to join. The Cantata may be used at a special service on Good Friday afternoon or evening, or on any day in Lent, and requires only a solo voice and a small choir.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

* UNA

4TH AND 5TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 4, 1893."Una" is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

† THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE
BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

* JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

5TH AND 6TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

† ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 7s.; vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d.; + 5s. per 100.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"The libretto is well chosen, and forms a good base whereon to compose a first-rate work. With regard to the music we feel we can hardly do it justice. . . . Where all is so good it is difficult to mention any special numbers."—United Service Gazette.

LAZARUS OF BETHANY.

Price 2s.; paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

"Mr. Shinn has the happy knack of writing popular music, which is at the same time thoroughly good, and free from serious difficulties. This his latest work will find acceptance amongst choral societies and church choirs. The choruses are bold and effective. The solos are melodious, and suited to the words. The quartet, 'Blessed are the dead,' is really charming."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"Mr. Shinn is entitled to warm praise for his Oratorio, since it is obviously written to provide choirs of moderate capabilities with a work not too long, not too difficult, but with melodious and musician-like, and, above all, faithful in its representation of the dramatic incidents of its sacred narrative. Upon all these grounds Mr. Shinn can claim a success."—The Keyboard.

"The work contains some remarkably well-written solos and choruses. There are two exquisite bass solos, and a quartet, 'Blessed are the dead,' is a lovely piece of part-writing. The concluding fugue, 'Hallelujah Amen,' is a fitting climax to the work."—Sussex Daily News.

PREFACE.

THE collective title given to these songs does not quite express the idea which the Composer had in view in writing them. But it was impossible to find an exact equivalent in English to the French Chansons Intimes or to the German Intime Liedchen.

In these short songs the Composer has tried to give expression to some of our deeper feelings or questionings—such songs as one might sing to oneself, when in the mood, or to some intimate friends.

By CHARLES SANTLEY.

PART I. (NOW READY), PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS NET.

THE BEHNKE VOICE-TRAINING METHOD.

Price, in paper covers, Two Shillings; in cloth, Three Shillings.

VOICE-TRAINING PRIMER

By MRS. EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

An easy Catechism of Vocal Physiology and Musical Theory, for the use of Vocal Students generally. This work is also intended as a Text-book for preparing Candidates for Vocal Examinations, particularly those of the Associated Board of the R.C.M. and R.A.M., the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and Trinity College, London. It contains in one volume all the information required for answering the viva voce questions of Examiners.

Sixtieth Thousand. Price, in paper covers, One Shilling and Sixpence; in cloth, Three Shillings.

VOICE-TRAINING EXERCISES

In Six separate Books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

By EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

"Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility."—Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley."Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen."—Sir R. P. Stewart."Scientific, systematic, and ingenious."—Sir John Stainer.

Third and Improved Edition. Price, in paper covers, One Shilling and Sixpence; in cloth, Three Shillings.

VOICE-TRAINING STUDIES

In Six separate Books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

By EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

"This work contains 24 Progressive Studies in different styles, and is intended as a companion or supplementary volume to 'Voice-Training Exercises.' Those of a more cantabile character are to be used as Solfege, the others are to be sung as Vocalises. In this Second Edition the accompaniments have been simplified. Highly favourable opinions of these Studies have been expressed by Sir John Stainer, Sir Robert Stewart, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and other eminent authorities."

"There can be little doubt that these 'Studies,' which are published in separate keys for all voices, will share the popularity of the 'Exercises.'"—Sunday Times.

"We have no doubt that the second volume will equal the first in popularity."—Morning Post.

"I am glad to find you are still going ahead in your valuable sphere of work. The 'Voice-Training Studies' are a solid and sound contribution to the repertory of teachers and students."—Sir John Stainer.

"Your new book of 'Voice-Training Studies' is admirable, and will prove of very great value to students and teachers. I like it much."—C. Vincent, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

MARCH 1, 1895.

HANDEL AND MUFFAT.

IN last month's MUSICAL TIMES I mentioned the publication, by the German Handel Society, of Gottlieb Muffat's "Componimenti Musicali," this being one of the Supplements in which the Society's editor, Dr. Chrysander, sets forth the sources from which Handel drew many of the ideas embodied in his works. I now propose to lay before the reader data sufficient for a clear perception of the nature and extent of Handel's obligations to his Viennese contemporary, premising that Dr. Chrysander has made the task easy by supplying the "chapter and verse" in which necessary examples may be found.

As a beginning, the following passage from the learned and painstaking editor's preface may usefully be quoted: "This musical work formed a mine of suggestions for Handel, and is especially noteworthy from the fact that it furnishes examples of the various ways in which he employed the ideas of his predecessors, as traceable in his works. The similarity between Muffat's Hornpipe (p. 98) and Handel's Hornpipe (Twelve Grand Concertos) is so distant that we might be sceptical about imitation were it not that in three other passages of these Twelve Grand Concertos the same Hornpipe is employed by Handel. And while the Minuet on p. 60 is scarcely recognisable in Handel's Minuet at the end of the fifth Concerto, as well as at the end of the Overture to the "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day," the motives of the Fantaisie on p. 40, as well as that on p. 76, and the Adagio on p. 123, might be regarded only as suggesting Handel's own music. But, on the other hand, the main ideas of other pieces are adopted by Handel almost without alteration, although they sometimes, through a totally new treatment, attain to the grandest development." After giving cases in proof, Dr. Chrysander continues: "Again, other pieces have been so transformed as to elude recognition, and Muffat is found to be their author only after a laborious hunt."

We have thus three distinct categories: first, merely suggestions taken from Muffat by Handel; second, leading ideas, adopted with very little alteration, if any; third, models freely treated to the end of developments embodying perfectly new forms. Later on, we shall meet with examples of each.

It will be convenient now to consider the use made of Muffat by Handel in the "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day," taking the cases in the order of mention by Dr. Chrysander.

On pp. 8 and 9 of Muffat is a Courante beginning thus:—

No. 1.

If the foregoing be compared with the opening bars in the first movement of the Overture to the Ode—

No. 2.

there can hardly be difficulty in recognising Handel's indebtedness. But this is not the only resemblance. Elsewhere in Muffat's Courante the subjoined passage occurs—and in Handel—

The opening movement of the fifth Grand Concerto shows like use of material borrowed from the Courante.

Pages 12 and 13 of Muffat contain an Air from which I extract the part essential to the present consideration—

No. 5. dolce.

Handel took a decided fancy to the thematic ideas above shown, and made them the basis of his air, "The soft complaining flute" ("St. Cecilia's Day"), wherein may be seen a fine example of Dr. Chrysander's third category—that in which the borrowed materials are treated as germs for large and striking development. The following is taken from the orchestral prelude to the air—

No. 6. (a) (8, 9)

Comparison shows that, in this case, Handel picked a bar here and a bar there and arranged them in a different order from that of Muffat. The figures above the bars in the last quotation indicate where they are to be found in the harpsichord piece. What Handel made of the few passages here borrowed by elaboration, by additions, and by changing the mode from major to minor, every amateur knows.

On p. 21 of the "Componimenti" is a "Final," with the following as its leading theme—

No. 7.

Handelian readers will at once recognise this as the chief orchestral subject in the magnificent chorus "From Harmony." The transference is almost exact—

No. 8.

There is a second orchestral subject, which attends the words "The diapason closing full in man," but this, as far as our present knowledge goes, is Handel's own. To what noble use the Saxon master put his borrowed theme! so glorifying it by association with one of his most impressive numbers as almost to atone for an act which, whatever the code of morals prevailing a century and a half ago, we now regard as larceny.

For another case, I turn to a "Fantaisie" on p. 48 of Muffat—a little piece of only eighteen bars, which thus begins—

No. 9. Grave.

I take this instance because it is one of those mentioned by Dr. Chrysander as having furnished Handel with no more than a suggestion. In the organ air of the Ode, "But oh! what art can teach," we find the same idea of a more or less sustained note in each bar, accompanied by chords on the second and third beats—

It is easily conceivable, the idea being a common one, that in this case Handel owes Muffat nothing.

Indebtedness is, however, very apparent in connection with the "St. Cecilia" March. Muffat has an Allemande (p. 50) wherein the subjoined phrase occurs—

No. 11.

Handel could not resist the attraction of this, and we find in the March—

No. 12.

Almost as plain a case of borrowing appears in the Minuet closing the Overture to Handel's Ode. Muffat has a Minuet in D major, beginning as under—

No. 13.

Compare the foregoing with the corresponding section in Handel, and the inference that the first inspired the second can hardly be resisted—

No. 14.

The next example conspicuously shows the perfect frankness with which Handel could appropriate a theme and the magnificent use to which he could put it; lifting a humble, earth-born thought into the very heaven of heavens. In Muffat (p. 78) is a "Fuga a quattro," from which I take the subject and first answer—

No. 15. Spiritoso.

The least-informed reader exclaims, "Why that is the principal theme in the final chorus, 'The dead shall live,' of 'St. Cecilia's Day'! So, indeed, it is. Handel lifted it, scarcely changing a note, into his majestic peroration, where we find the opening bars as below—

No. 16. The dead shall live,

Muffat's fugue is thirty-six bars long; Handel goes on through 152 bars. How he goes it is hardly necessary to say, and it would be quite superfluous to claim as among his grandest ideas the truly Handelian outburst on the words, "The trumpet shall be heard on high." But the whole chorus is a masterpiece, such as, I make bold to believe, the Viennese clavichnist, in his most exalted moments, could never have conceived.

Passing from the "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day," and seeking evidence elsewhere of the Saxon composer's rule to pasture beside all waters, wherever the grass was succulent and the streams sweet, I find in Muffat ("Rigaudon," p. 14) material taken by Handel for the March in "Joshua." It will instantly be recognised—

No. 17.

The famous March in "Judas Maccabæus" is not less indebted to Muffat, as the following extract from an "Air" (p. 139) clearly shows—

No. 18. Vivace.

As a closing example, I take from a "Fantaisie" (Muffat, p. 122) as below—

No. 19. Vivace.

Here is the germ of the Allegro in the Overture to "Samson," where Handel develops it in the most masterly and effective way.

On the general question of Handel's appropriations, and especially as to the ethical side of it, we are very much in the dark. He who takes the property of another is a thief, but there are thieves and thieves, those whose offence "is rank and smells to Heaven," others whose crime is venial. In Handel's case it is necessary, for a right decision, to know what was the usage of his time in the matter of musical borrowing; especially whether, under any circumstances, that procedure was regarded as void of offence; and if so, under what circumstances. The painful experience of Bononcini proves that society would not tolerate a man who, having laid hands upon another composer's work, sought to pass it as his own. Bononcini did this and could not again hold up his head in England. The fact shows the existence of a powerful public opinion and strong feeling against attempts to mislead. Why, then, if Handel robbed after the manner of Bononcini, did he not suffer in like fashion? It may be said that the German was too great a man; but the Italian was a great man also, and, what is more to the purpose, had powerful partisans in this country. Yet nothing could save him, and nothing would have saved Handel, especially with "Society" in opposition, had he offended like his rival. It is reasonable to assume, therefore, that something differentiated the cases of the two men. What was it? On the one hand, it may be replied, "Bononcini was found out and Handel was not." Let us look for a moment at that statement. The musical world of Europe in the early decades of the eighteenth century was a very small one, and the connoisseurs, amateurs and professionals, who composed it were a select body. Its members, unlike those of later times, were not overwhelmed with claims upon attention. Comparatively little was done in music and that little we may fairly take as known at least to the more active and curious spirits connected with every centre of European art. In asking the reader to grant so much, I make no unreasonable demand. How, then, could Handel, the most active and conspicuous musician of his day, as compared with whom Bach lived in obscurity—how could he, with his bold appropriations from the works of other men, escape discovery? My own belief is that his practice was very well known, and that he himself made no secret of it whatever. There are no quotation marks in music or Handel might have used them; but the probability is that the limited cognoscenti of the day did not need their help, knowing as much as Handel about Stradella, Ebers, Muffat, and the rest. It is only by considerations like these—considerations which suggest Handel's innocence of any purpose to defraud and imply the existence of a tolerant public opinion in such a case—that we can account for his immunity as contrasted with the prompt and heavy punishment of Bononcini. On the point of toleration, it may be assumed that the musical world by no means ignored the splendid use made by Handel of borrowed ideas, and that the exigencies of his arduous struggle to sustain himself against an unscrupulous and powerful opposition were not overlooked. Be this as it may, there was in England, for more than a generation, the curious spectacle of a great composer, working in the full blaze of fame and under the observation of many eyes, some of them not too friendly, he all the time borrowing right and left, without the reprehension of the public and, for anything we know to the contrary, without a word of complaint from the living masters whom he laid under contribution. If this phenomenon can be explained in any other way than that above indicated I shall be interested to learn the process.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

OLD ENGLISH FINGERING.

WHEN turning, the other day, over the old books of MS. lute music that have long rested from active service in the University Library of Cambridge, the writer came across an interesting bit of harpsichord tablature, which may possibly prove to be of service in determining the fingering for the scale, as practised by the English in old times upon keyboard instruments.

To all conversant in the slightest degree with old music, it is known how intricate, how full of rapid scale passages and of ornament was the old virginal music of the past—of (say) the later sixteenth and the early seventeenth centuries. It is known, also, that at that time the art of keyboard music had reached a high state of development in England, that many eminent masters were engaged in composition for it, and that their compositions were so artful and elaborate in character that Dr. Burney, at the end of the last century, declared that it would hardly be possible to find a master in Europe then who would undertake, after a month's practice, to perform some of these old pieces.

Now, perhaps because we never can believe that our forefathers ever did anything—not better than, but equal to ourselves, these old virginal MSS. continue to excite our surprise. We stumble over their notes as we try them, proficient as we are in pianoforte music; we wonder how the old masters played them, how they instructed those royal and noble maidens who were their pupils in the art of playing such catchy intricacies upon the virginal. To be sure, they approached their point of proficiency by a totally different method from ours. Yet whatever stray light we are able to snatch from early printed work or MS. as to the nature of those methods, only magnifies our wonder. How could they compass difficulties by methods seemingly most difficult in themselves?

It is only lately that the old modes of performance have been at all looked into. The masters who practised them, indeed, held them secret, the secret being divulged in return for payment of instruction, as was the way with most other arts and trades. An instruction book for the harpsichord was not printed until a full century after all the Elizabethan masters of the virginal had been dead, and their "school" of composition had become practically extinct. Only an odd, scamped Arabic figure here and there over the notes (and even these, we fear, sometimes may have been added by a later scribe!) suggest to us how the hand was disposed of old for the execution of the piece.

Of course, the old German method has been known with more certainty. For doughty old Ammerbach, who published instructions for all keyboard instruments (organ, virginal, clavicord, gravicembalo, &c.) in 1571, expressly laid down rules for the scale. These practically excluded the use of the thumb and little finger, no doubt because of their shortness; for it had not seemingly been discovered that the shortness of the thumb, which permits of its passage under the long digits, is the grand factor of smooth and fast scale performance. Ammerbach's scale is very well known, but for convenience is repeated here. It runs thus—using, as he does, the figure 1 for the index finger of both hands, and the cipher for the thumb: Right hand—1, 2, 1, 2, &c., to the top, where it finishes 1, 2, 3; and returns, 3, 2, 1, 2, 1, to the bottom. The left hand runs, 3, 2, 1, 0, 3, 2, 1, 0, &c., to the top, where it finishes 3, 2, 1; and returns, 1, 2, 1, 2, 1, to the bottom. This curious way of climbing the scale on the keyboard by two fingers only must, I imagine, have emanated from the older lute playing, to which it is better suited. Man is vastly imitative; he learns a new form of instrument by applying to it the methods of an older one. As he had fingered his ancient open strings, so he would finger at first his new wooden or ivory keys. It required not only genius to discover the use of the short thumb (useless on open strings) upon the keyboard, but a revolutionary spirit to throw open the door of development that hinged upon its very shortness. Without that revolution our modern pianism certainly had not been.

The German method was therefore roughly known. But in some minds there has crept a curiosity as to whether the English composers fingered and performed their pieces in the same way. They undoubtedly (we may surely venture to say in consideration of the MS. tomes of virginal music we fortunately still possess) developed the art more freely than did men of other nations. Did they pursue this (seemingly) handicapped mode of execution? Did they discard their best finger-friend and renounce their thumb?

The subject, which becomes of interest as soon as the fine old virginal music is scanned, has never, so far, been thoroughly examined. A recent writer drew attention to it in a valuable article on "Fingering," which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES not long ago. In this he showed that the English had originally used the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 to express the digits, and not +, 1, 2, 3, 4, as is generally supposed, which is but a late fashion borrowed from the Germans; and in citing the evidence of the "Choice Collection of Ayres for the Harpsichord or Spinett," published in 1700, for the fingering of the scale, he called attention to the extraordinary fact that here the fingers of the left hand are numbered the reverse way to our own—that is to say, the little finger is called 1 and the thumb 5; both hands, therefore, in this method of fingering, counting from left to right, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

However, in that edition of Purcell's "Choice Lessons for the Harpsichord or Spinett," which was engraved on copper for Mrs. Purcell in 1699 (and of which a copy exists in the Durham Cathedral Library), there is not only a fingered scale to be seen, but the numbering of the left hand fingers is precisely the same as the later instance above-quoted. This fact was known to the writer of the article "Fingering" in Grove's Dictionary, who quotes Purcell's method of fingering the scale. But the question of the numbering used for the fingers is only touched upon at the close of the article, when describing the German change from their old style, +, 1, 2, 3, 4, to the Italian mode, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, about the time of Bach, when he says (presupposing the English mode as +, 1, 2, 3, 4): "The same (Italian) method came into partial use in England for a short time." "Purcell also adopted it in his 'Choice Collection' quoted above, but with the bewildering modification that whereas in the right hand the thumb was numbered 1, in the left hand the little finger was called the first and the thumb the fifth."

Thus the matter of English fingering has stood in a state of surmise and surprise, and may perhaps so stand for some time longer. Meanwhile, let us examine such evidence as to the English rule of the scale and the style of numbering as is furnished by some interesting bits of old MSS. in Cambridge. These push the matter farther back in date, and, indeed, suggest an entirely new view of old English left hand fingering.

The first record of English scale practice in print stands, I believe, in Purcell's book. The fingering runs, quoting the numbers there used—Right hand: 1, 2, 3, 4, 3, 4, 3, 4, &c., to the top, when it finishes 3, 4, 5; returning, 5, 4, 3, 2, 3, 2, &c., finishing 3, 2, 1. Left hand: 1, 2, 3, 4, 3, 4, 3, 4, &c., to the top, 3, 4, 5; returning, 5, 4, 3, 2, 3, 2, 3, 2, &c., to finish 3, 2, 1.

Now, as will be seen, this is not quite Ammerbach's fingering, for the main digits of the right hand in play are, in the German method, the first and second long fingers ascending; in the English, the second and third, and there is a similar difference in the descent. But both climb and descend the scale practically by means of two fingers only, and while the German permits a strange leaning to the use of the thumb in the left hand, the later

English version restricts that use severely to the turning-point of the scale, while permitting it equally, at that turning-point, to both right and left hands. We may remind the reader that this strange hop-scotch method of playing scales would not have, upon the old instruments, the objection that would accrue to it on the modern pianoforte; for as these instruments, by their structure, were incapable of sustaining sound, beyond the second that the wire was struck or plucked, there was no need for the performer to sustain his touch; the fingers might start from the keys and dance over them like bees about already honey-robbed flowers, without any injury to the sound. The question is: was Purcell's scale the accredited English scale?

We now come to the evidence of our manuscript. This Cambridge University MS. is numbered Dd. iv., 22. It consists of a book of lute tunes, mostly in dance measures—almains, courants, and the like, which are signed by such names as Robert Johnson, John Dowland, Richard Allison, Daniel Bachelor—all of them eminent lute performers and composers of the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries. The library catalogue describes the MS., which is bound up with a very similar one, as "A small folio, about 1620." This may be possibly slightly pre-dated.* But, from the character of the book and of the music, it cannot be much later; and the only question is, whether the page here quoted has been written in subsequently or not. This may be so, yet no latitude would bring it outside the seventeenth century, I think, or reduce its value as evidence of old scale practice.

It is the last page of music in the book, is written in the old virginal or spinet notation on two staves of six lines each, with F, C, and G clefs written above one another. After a rehearsal of the old names of the notes of the scale—the "Gamut," as it was called—follows this "Preludium":

It will be seen that the fingering here—3, 4, 3, 4 in ascent, and 3, 2, 3, 2 in descent—is Purcell's, or the English scale, and not Ammerbach's, or the German scale; though, as it is probably of earlier date than Purcell's, the thumb is not admitted for the start. Unfortunately, the corresponding passage for the left hand is not fingered at all; and I have noticed this neglect of the left hand in a slightly fingered MS. specimen of notation that exists in the British Museum.

But what fingering there is for the left hand touches a most interesting point, and may prove that neither the order of left hand fingering given in the 1700 "Choice Collection," nor in the Purcell that preceded it, was an anomaly or eccentricity of the moment, but simply the genuine old English method that had not yet died out. For it is clear that when this MS. example was written, the numbering of the left hand fingers began with the little finger as 1, and that the thumb was 5, as the chords of the left hand show.

This new point, I think, may be substantiated from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, which lies, as everyone knows, in the Museum at Cambridge. This splendid collection of virginal music is now pronounced to have been probably copied out in the third decade of the seventeenth century. It can scarcely be earlier, from several indications to be found in its pages. But whatever the date of its copying, there is no ambiguity about the date of the compositions themselves. The lives of many of the earlier masters who wrote them shine clear in the light of fame, and the careful copyist has often inscribed the date at which the particular piece was written, as William Byrd, 1590; Philips, 1580; Tallis, 1562, &c.

Now I have found just a few marks of fingering in this MS., which were most clearly done by the original copyist's fine pen. Indeed, in one place the finger-figure comes between the note and its adjacent sharp, and, therefore, could not have been added later. It is interesting to notice that the majority of these few examples occur in Dr. Bull's compositions, because in one fine British Museum MS., wholly devoted to his keyboard music, there are also just a few examples of fingering too. We must suppose, therefore, that this fingering is the celebrated master's own; for if it had been due to the copyist he would have added more, or more indiscriminately.

To go now into particulars of this fingering: The examples given are the only ones—except two small marks—that have been gleaned in a glance through the thousands of bars which that close-packed MS. of 418 pages shows. Some puzzling discrepancies or faults appear, but a close copy has been made, so that the reader may judge of the rendering for himself:—

* I am sure this is the case with another MS., which contains a composition (amongst many others) of Charles Coleman's, and yet has been called "latter end of sixteenth, or early part of seventeenth century."

The image contains musical notation for twelve numbered examples. Each example is written on a single staff. Examples 2 through 11 are in treble clef, while Example 12 is in bass clef. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, and fingerings (numbers 1-5). Some examples include the instruction '&c.' at the end. Example 3a is a separate short piece in treble clef. The examples demonstrate different techniques of fingerings and scale passages.

No. 1 is from a "Galiarda" of Dr. Bull's, on p. 35. It proves that there is, as Solomon said, "nothing new under the sun"; and that when the great pianist, Hans von Bülow, pronounced the importance of a figure that is repeated in composition being taken invariably by the same fingers, he had probably no idea that an old Englishman had discovered it before him and had practised it at the close of the sixteenth century. By the light of our English scale knowledge we conjecture this passage to start with the fingers 3, 4, 3, 4, and the notes marked with an asterisk to be likewise achieved by a similar hop over. This was too simple a rule for Dr. Bull to inscribe.

No. 2 is from a piece strangely inscribed "Praludium. El. Kidermister." It shows that the advantage of change of finger on repeated notes was fully understood and practised of old, and that the thumb and little finger were used for extended passages. Indeed, the reserve about the thumb is here broken down; it is frankly numbered.

In No. 3, taken, like all the remaining examples but one, from the "Pavana" of Dr. Bull, on pp. 63 and 64 (No. 34), it is not so; for though it is quite clear that the thumb must be used for the lowest notes of the two chords in arpeggio, it is not marked. In 3a the arpeggio is executed with a skipping, closed hand.

No. 4 looks staggering at several points, but doubtless the finger 4 should be followed by the 3, as usual; the upper bound E, if seized by finger 3, would present a bit of descending scale; but the master, to save the thumb falling on the lowest note, gives 4 instead of the usual 3, as the skip over. The following 2 is only explicable on the supposition that the upper note is again attacked by finger 3.

No. 5 has its reasons self-evident. It shows not only the composer's adhesion to the repeating figure theory, but the way in which the virginal performer's hand was wont to skip about the keys. The next example, as well as the short ones following, are most interesting as showing fingering for the left hand; and they are in general only intelligible on the supposition that 1 stands for the little finger and 5 for the thumb. In No. 7 the B flat is taken by our (in latter-day parlance) first finger, here numbered 4. Example 8 is a quiet, scholarly bit of imitation, carried out in fingering too. In No. 9 the thumb clearly passes under the first finger on B flat to reach A.

No. 10 is extracted from one of Bull's fine structural passages of bass accompaniment. Its close imitation causes one to think that the copyist wrote 5 for 3 in the third bar. No. 11 appears, whether from error or not, quite inexplicable.

In No. 12, too, taken from Giles Farnabie's "The K. Hunt," p. 98, the quantity of fives in the left hand, though clearly meant each time for the thumb, is slightly bewildering. Doubtless, however, there is light under them could we get the clue. For, from the evidence only of these suggestive fragments of old handwriting in Cambridge, we surmise that Purcell's "bewildering modification" was not his own idea or a modification at all, but apparently an old English classical method; and that the scale practice of our forefathers, though allied to the German, was national and idiosyncratic too.

FROM MY STUDY.

THE career of "Jenny Lind" is so well known, and was so fully discussed, not long since, in connection with her biography, that a sketch of it in this place would hardly interest the reader. I shall do better, perhaps, to seek fresh material—fresh, certainly, to the present generation—in the pages of that merry, yet veracious chronicler, Mr. Punch. I take down, therefore, his volume for 1847, and find, under date May 15, a notice of the Swedish nightingale's début. Talk of enthusiasm when a professionally mordant pen writes as follows concerning a new singer: "To say too much is impossible; to say half-enough is more impossible still; and to flatter is the most impossible of all, for we might as well send for a pot of paint in order to paint the lily, or cover a cannot tell again an extinct and now dusty old story; enough that Mr. Bunn asserted a claim upon Jenny Lind's services and threatened legal proceedings for breach of contract. Poor Bunn was the favourite butt of Mr. Punch, for some reason or other, and the arch-jester at once set his poetic young man to work in relation to the other poet's claim. The result was a parody on "The Battle of Hohenlinden," beginning—

On Lind, when Drury's sun was low
And bootless was the wild beast show,
The lessee counted for a flow
Of rhino to the treasury.

The bard tells how Jenny refused "to sing at the menagerie" (there had been a wild beast exhibition at the "Lane"); also how—

Bunn in a flaming frenzy flew,
And speedily the goose-quill drew
With which he was accustomed to Write such a deal of poetry.

Jenny, willing to meet him halfway, offered £2,000 for a return of the contract; but he would have his bond—obstinacy which provoked Mr. Punch's young man to exclaim—

And now his action let him bring,
And try how much the law will wring
From her, to do the handsome thing,
Who had proposed so readily.

He now drops into history—

The Swedish Nightingale to cage
He fail'd; she sought a fitting stage,
And left him to digest his rage,
And seek his legal remedy.

Then shook the House, with plaudits risen
When Jenny's opening note was given,
The sweetest songstress under heaven
Forth bursting into melody.

But fainter the applause shall grow,
At waning Drury's wild beast show,
And feebler still shall be the flow
Of rhino to the treasury.

The opera triumphs! Lumley brave,
Thy bacon thou shalt more than save;
Wave, London, all thy kerchiefs wave,
And cheer with all thy chivalry.

Mr. Punch further represents
Mr. Bunn as inditing reproachful verses to the faithless Jenny:

Why wilt thou not in Drury Lane
Let thy first notes be heard?
Impatient England waits thy strain,
My nightingale, my bird.
Are all the contracts thou hast made
False—hollow as the wind?
'Tis madness to be thus betrayed,
My faithless Jenny Lind.

The hollow drum may wear a mask
Of parchment pale and thin,
But is there not, I fain would ask,
A deep-toned voice within?
So thou mayst smother for awhile
The anguish of thy mind,
But there'll be groans beneath thy smile,
My faithless Jenny Lind.

Thy talents I would fain requite,
Though Lumley gives thee more;
They say thy salary is, per night,
One six six thirteen four thy strain,
But, discord to thy mind,
Whispers will come, from Drury Lane,
Of faithless Jenny Lind.

sovereign with a layer of Dutch metal, as endeavour to paint Jenny Lind's splendid achievements in their appropriate colours. . . . To those who cannot go repeatedly to Her Majesty's Theatre, we fear we ought to say, 'Go not at all'; for, once brought under the influence of the Swedish magnet, resistance will be impossible.

A little Jenny is a dangerous thing;
Hear oft, or taste not the Linderian spring."

With the appearance which Mr. Punch hailed so exuberantly was connected, in an unhappy sort of way, the late Mr. Alfred Bunn, at that time manager of Drury Lane Theatre. I

Jenny Lind went on tour, with Balfe as accompanist, at the close of her first season, whereupon Mr. Punch again expressed his feelings in song :

Adieu! Adieu! my Jenny Lind,
Farewell those eyes of blue!
Poor Judy sighs, Punch weeps him blind,
And howls dog Toby too.
Yon Star, that sings right up to C,
We follow in her flight;
Farewell awhile to Balfe and thee—
My Jenny Lind, good night.

* * * *

And now I'm in the pit alone,
With Lind no more to see—
But why should I for Jenny groan,
Who p'rhaps don't care for me?
Perchance, my verses may be vain;
For, cheered by stranger hands,
Jenny may ne'er come back again,
But stay in foreign lands.

With thee, my Lind, I'd gladly go
Athwart the foaming brine,
Nor care how hard the wind may blow,
To hear those airs of thine.
Farewell those locks, whose gentle waves
Adorn that brow so bright;
Farewell those crochets and those staves,
My Jenny Lind, good night.

After so much enthusiasm, Mr. Punch thought it due to his impartiality to print something on the other side, and instructed his "Fast Man"—a typical snob of the period—to write accordingly. Accordingly the "Fast Man" wrote:—

"We have had enough of Jenny Lind. She don't suit us; that's a fact. Her singing may be good, but it's severe. It may please your high-art men. They may like to hear Susannah's part in 'Figaro' sung according to the score; we don't. We would rather not hear 'Figaro' at all; but if we must listen to such dreary stuff, let us have it made as lively as we can. It wants embellishment to make it go down. We like the meretricious ornaments."

Further, as to the diva's acting, the "Fast Man" wrote:—

"We may like a quiet style of sister, but we admire an actress who comes out, and is jolly. Jenny Lind does the gentle, and the interesting, and the angelic. So do young people in a consumption. We call that sort of thing spoony. Then Jenny Lind is said to be such a good girl. What has that to do with the merits of a singer or an actress? . . . Jenny Lind may be a good girl, but good girls, like good boys, are often slow."

In the spring of 1849, Jenny Lind then numbering the Bishop of Norwich among her friends, it was doubtful whether she would appear on the operatic stage. She did, however, and the public were frantic with desire to witness her performances. Mr. Punch's parodist, imitating Byron's description of the Waterloo Ball, thus sang the battle at the doors:

Within a little niche of that throng'd hall
Sate Lumley's money-taker; he did hear
That union of sounds, the shriek, the squall,
Which fell with noise familiar on his ear;
And then he smiled when a clenched hand drew near
With a half-guinea, which he knew full well
Required a check the barriers to clear:—
A privilege which he alone could sell,
And many, to be foremost, struggling, gasping fell.

Ah! then and there was hurrying to and fro,
And gathering shawls, or fragments of a dress;
And skirts all torn, which, but an hour ago,
Might well be called the pink of tidiness.
And there were sudden parings, in the press,
Of ladies from their beaux, and opera ties
Were rudely torn asunder—more or less;
No longer fit to meet fastidious eyes,
Which on so grand a night are sure to criticise.

Mr. Punch was much concerned about his favourite's growing aversion from the stage, and he gave her, from time to time, a bit of his mind thereant. Moreover, he is vehemently suspected of having procured a German gentleman of very shadowy aspect, named Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, to summon her before Mr. Hardwick, the respected magistrate, for assaulting and ill-treating Zaubrerflöte, one of his children, by taking pieces out of the body of the said child and exhibiting them in public. Jenny was attended at the police court by the Swedish Ambassador, half-a-dozen Bishops, and many pattern people from Exeter Hall. Herr Mozart, having stated his complaint, called, as witnesses, Mr. Morning Post, who swore that many of the fragments "fell lifelessly and inoperatively on the ear"; Mr. Morning Herald, who deposed that "the music was much enfeebled"; and Mr. Morning Chronicle, who declared defendant's "talisman had lost its influence." Called upon for her defence, Jenny was about to speak when the B-h-p of N-r-ich advised her to sing. Jenny sang, and "the worthy magistrate sank back in his chair—the police officers embraced one another—the whole Court were entranced and dissolved—and, taking advantage of the moment, the aforesaid B-h-p led Jenny to his carriage and drove from the office in triumph."

I have plucked these lively utterances out of the dead past with the greater readiness because they show, eloquently enough in their way, what absorbing interest centred in the Swedish singer during her brief operatic career amongst us. The portrait which accompanies these remarks represents Jenny Lind as Amina, and is a reproduction of a contemporary print.

There are many still living who can recall the massive form and ponderous voice of Luigi Lablache, a London favourite less than half-a-century ago. But to the majority of readers he is merely a name, connected with a few traditions of the extinct opera-house in the Haymarket. This great artist was born at Naples, December 6, 1794, educated at a Conservatory there, and received lessons in singing from Valesi. It is said that he was a negligent student, caring little for music, and by no means a wholesome influence among his fellows. Aptitude, however, asserted itself on an occasion at which he undertook to fill the post of a sick contra-bassist. Lablache had never touched a double-bass, but in three days he sufficiently mastered the instrument to acquit himself with credit. As soon as his possession of a magnificent bass voice declared itself, the young man, like many young men in the present day, became impatient of study. Five times he stole away from the Conservatory to fulfil engagements in the smaller theatres, and thus was the cause of a royal decree forbidding managers to employ singers who were still pupils. When released, in 1812, Lablache appeared at the St. Carlo, and entered upon a career which proved one long success. He came to London in 1835, and found no difficulty in winning English suffrages. Later, he became a special favourite of Queen Victoria, to whom, it is said, he gave lessons in singing, besides frequently taking a part in the private musical doings of the Court. Early in the "fifties"

Obliging correspondents have sent additional examples of the musical epitaph. From Friern Barnet, Mr. Robert Sterband forwards a curious inscription still extant in Minster Church, Boscastle, Cornwall. The persons referred to are William Cotton (obit 1656) and his wife:

Forty-nine yeares they liued man and wife,
And, what's more rare, thus many without strife.
Shee first departing, hee a few weeks tryed
To liue without her, could not, and so dyed.
Both in theire wedlockes great sabbatick rest
To be, where theeres no wedlock, ever blest,
And having here a jubily begun
Theyr taken hence that it may nere be don.

3 diatrite. 8 diapason. 5 diapente.

In perfect concord may they still agree
Whose very numbers teach them harmonie.

$\frac{3}{5}$
 $\frac{5}{8}$

Mr. Sterband adds: "The latter portion, which relates to a family of three sons and five daughters, is the most interesting from a musical point of view—especially as regards the use of the term 'diatrite.' No mention of this is to be found in Grove's Dictionary." Nor does "diatrite" occur in the dictionaries of Rousseau and Busby. It is absent also from Stainer and Barrett's "Dictionary of Musical Terms"; from Moore's voluminous "Cyclopædia of Music," and from the still more copious Cyclopædia, published in 1888, by Scribner. The word, however, is no less legitimate than "diapente." Cordial acknowledgments are due to Mr. Sterband for so singular an example.

My friend, Mr. Stephen S. Stratton, has kindly sent me two other specimens, received by him from a correspondent in the North of England. The first is to be found in the beautiful "Galilee" of Durham Cathedral:

John Brimleis body here doth ly,
Who praysed God with hand and voice
By musickes heavenlie harmonie
Dull myndes he maid in God rejoice
His soul into the heavnes is lyft
To prayse Him still that gave the gyft.
Obit Ao. Dni. 1576, Octo. 13.

the famous bass began to think of retirement and rest, to which end he bought a property at Maisons-Lafitte. But Lablache was not destined to enjoy it long. In 1856 his health became unsatisfactory and sad forebodings filled his mind, so that, when the Russian Emperor sent him a gold medal, with the Order of St. Andrew, the desponding artist exclaimed, "That will serve to decorate my coffin." The waters of Kissengen and his native air were tried, but to no purpose; and on January 23, 1858, after receiving the last sacraments from an old colleague who had left the stage for the Church, Lablache passed away. He died in Naples, but was buried at Maisons-Lafitte.

The second epitaph is found on a stone inserted in the South wall of St. Mary the Less, South Bailey (Durham?):

Here Lieth ye Body of Mr.
William Greggs Late Organist
Of ye Cathedral Church at Durham who died ye 15th day of October 1710 in ye 48 year of his Age was Son of Jo.

Greggs, gent, of York, a Sufferer for K. C. I.

Mr. Stratton writes that he has never met with the names of those musicians in any book. I have also searched for them in vain. Perhaps some resident in Durham may be able to throw light upon this darkness.

A correspondent writes: "I have been waiting, hoping you could tell me something of the musical (vocal) abilities and career of Sophie Cruvelli." My friend will not have to wait much longer. That artist has some interest for me as entering into my early musical recollections. I saw her play Fidelio just before she suddenly and unceremoniously ran away from Her Majesty's Theatre. X.

THE prima donna in fiction is no novelty. She plays an honourable part in two of the very best musical novels in existence—George Sand's "Consuelo" and Mrs. Cornish's "Alceste." She now re-appears in "The Minor Chord," by J. Mitchell Chapple (Chatto and Windus), in the person of Madame Helvina, née Minza Maxwell, who is altogether a momentous and sensational individual. She was cradled in music, and awoke every morning to the sound of the "Maiden's Prayer" or Schumann's "Jolly Farmer"; for "father never left home in the morning without mother playing them." The mother, "bless her heart! was so magnetic"; and the young Minza appeared in public as a violinist and vocalist at a Recital organized by the magnetic parent when Minza was only ten. Her great effort was an aria from "Il Trovatore," with regard to which we read the following luminous passage: "The first note I shaded with a full robust chest tone, soft and sustained, which I have always loved since, and which is considered one of my greatest powers as a singer." Soon after, she began her "starring tour" in a church. "The first number was 'Pull for the shore,' from the Gospel Hymns. I sang the verses and the chorus joined, and when the curtains were pulled aside a real boat was wheeled across the stage on bedstead castors, with ropes. This was a modern realism that pleased. It was dramatic and a surprise." Ultimately, Minza grew beautiful, married a husband who went mad from overwork, and finally blossomed out into a full-blown prima donna. We have not space to chronicle one tithe of the delicious musical absurdities in which this novel abounds. One passage describes how, at a crisis of her career, she detected a minor chord in a chorus of railway whistles. She captivates the heart of an English Viscount, Lord Hamper; sings with brilliant success at Bayreuth; purchases a street piano-organ as a relief to Wagner's music; and finally resolves to decide the question of marrying again by the conclusion of a new song. "'If its last chord trembles with the plaintive minor, my life must continue as it is; if it resounds with the hope and buoyancy of the major, I will do as you ask me, and marry you.' 'Glory be to the chord!' he exclaimed enthusiastically, embracing me passionately. 'But, remember, I said, drawing myself away, 'I am superstitious, and I am in earnest. If that last chord is a minor, my life must continue as it is—I will never marry.' 'But it won't be, Helvy. It's a major blooming with orange blossoms, you bet!' he said confidently." We must let our readers discover the sequel for themselves, promising them a rich feast of exquisite ineptitudes in the perusal of this astonishing romance.

WHAT a pity it is, now the church organ is in many ways so greatly improved and playing on it so much facilitated by pneumatic and electrical appliances, that so little is done by the designer for the external appearance of the instrument. A plain deal case supporting a range of pipes, held in their places by a rude iron band or frame, is often considered sufficient for an important organ. This consideration was impressed on the hearers of a Lecture given by Mr. Hill, the well-known organ builder, at the "Workers' Guild," Clifford's Inn, on the 1st ult., when the beauty of the old cases was dwelt upon, not only by the lecturer himself, but by subsequent speakers—notably several prominent members of the architectural profession. The removal of organs from screens and western galleries was regretted, and the destruction of many well known and handsome cases generally deplored. The organs of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries appear not only to have been carefully preserved as valuable musical instruments, but cherished as lovely things. Architecturally designed to suit their positions, and suitably decorated, they were an added beauty to every ecclesiastical edifice. The organ, now, is pushed away, for choir purposes, into some corner of the chancel (rarely built for it), and too often is neither considered acoustically nor architecturally; while as to decoration, some paint—generally a crude and unsympathetic blue powdered with gold stars or fleurs de lys—is frequently thought to be all-sufficient. Where now are the beautifully painted winged doors that adorned while they protected the old mediæval organs? Surely the demon of cheapness has not swept them away for ever into the bourne of the unnecessary. Useful and beautiful, they should be revived, if only for the credit of Music's sister arts.

A PROSPECTUS has reached us from the committee recently formed in Dublin and representing the National Literary Society, the Gaelic League, and the musical profession in Ireland, with a view to organising a National Musical Festival to be held at an early date in Dublin, under the Irish name of "Feis." The aims of the movement are fourfold, and are defined as follows: "1. To give the public an opportunity of hearing Irish music rendered in the best possible manner—every effort being made to interpret the old tunes or melodies in strict accordance with the traditional manner of performance. 2. To encourage the publication of Irish airs, now preserved in manuscript collections, and to secure the notation of such musical fragments as may still be heard in various parts of the country, but which have hitherto baffled the efforts made to record them by collectors. 3. In accordance with the expressed wish of the members of the Gaelic League, to render many of the items in the Irish language. 4. To offer such inducements as would give a stimulus to the rise of a New Irish School of Composers, who, by their works, may prove that it is possible for Irish musicians to be as truly National in their art as Dvorák or Grieg have been." It is proposed to call a public meeting shortly, at which the arrangements for the holding of the "Feis" shall be discussed. Meantime, Professor Stanford, who has rendered such invaluable service in popularising the ancient melodies of his country, has promised his hearty co-operation, and in view of the many distinguished Irish men and women who adorn the ranks of the musical profession, there is, at least, strong presumptive evidence that the movement will be vigorously taken up and carried to a prosperous issue.

THE sudden insanity of a New York musician, who assaulted a ticket collector on the elevated railway, was attributed by the Press to his "musical studies." This has set the New York Times speculating on what those studies may have been. "Is he a fiddler?" asks the ingenious writer. "Then, mayhap, he lost his reason trying to find a soul in a seven dollar violin, purchased in a pawnshop. Or he may have sat up too late studying Herr Krehbiel's translation of Courvoisier's 'Technics.' Or, perchance, he ran across a concerto for violin and bagpipes, by Max Vogrich. Or it may be that he went mad from playing the Kreutzer Sonata with Karl Klindworth. But perhaps he is a pianist. In that case madness may have followed an attempt to play all Beethoven's sonatas at a single sitting. Or he may have gone crazy on a combination of Chopin and Würzburger Hofbrau. Or he may have had to accompany Scaldi. Or perhaps he had written a concerto. There is nothing so fatal as writing a concerto." Several of these explanations, mutatis mutandis, might hold good on this side of the water; but many others will readily suggest themselves to persons desirous of establishing a connection between insanity and musical studies. For example, one would never be surprised to hear of a musician having lost his reason in the attempt to understand the mixed metaphors of the Latterday Pooh Pooh, or to reconcile the conflicting statements of the Pellmellikoff Gazetzkys.

BEAUTY may fade, seasons may fly, but statistics, the modern poet tells us, will never die. Their only drawback is their general futility. What earthly purpose can be served by informing people that a postman who has gone his rounds daily for forty years has in effect journeyed round the world seventeen and a half times, or that the number of flies killed in a London restaurant during one hot summer would, if the carcasses were laid out in a straight line, reach from the Land's End to John o' Groats? One of these statistical time-wasters, and a Wagnerian to boot, has gravely published the number of bars contained in each act of each one of Wagner's operas—a howling wilderness of figures. Now had he wished to employ his time to some purpose he would have compiled a list which would have been curious and instructive. Let some one with the requisite time and patience at command take a thousand bars of common time, say, from representative works by Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, and any one else you like; let him figure out how many distinct changes of key there are in each, and how many changes of harmony; also how much of each (calculating by crotchets) is tonic harmony, dominant harmony, and so forth; how many common chords, dominant sevenths, diminished sevenths, and so on. The result would give a rather striking comparison between old and new musical methods. We offer this valuable suggestion free gratis to statisticians in want of an object upon which to expend their unhappy powers.

OUR esteemed collaborator, Mr. J. S. Shedlock, has been hard at work for some time on a "History of the Pianoforte Sonata," which will shortly be published by Messrs. Methven and Co. In it will, of course, be traced the evolution of this most important instrumental form; the development of the Pianoforte Sonata of the present day from the Clavier Sonate of the seventeenth century being kept well in view. The first portion will deal chiefly with Kuhnau, Emmanuel Bach, and Scarlatti; but the works of Corelli and, perhaps, still earlier composers, who most certainly prepared the way for these men, will not be forgotten. The next epoch is, of course, that of Haydn and Mozart; but we are glad to know that Mr. Shedlock proposes to deal with many other writers of Sonatas during the eighteenth century whose names are but little known except to serious students. These composers made many interesting experiments with regard to the contents and grouping of movements—experiments of which, it is most probable, Beethoven largely availed himself. The Sonata since Beethoven—such as we have it, say, in Schumann, Brahms, and Chopin—and possibly the Sonata "of the Future" will form the last, and, as some perhaps may think, most interesting section. Such a volume has long been wanted; hitherto the only comprehensive essay of the kind available has been that by Dr. Parry in Grove's Dictionary.

A LIVELY series of articles on "Traditions" has been appearing in the columns of Le Ménestrel from the pen of M. Montaux. There are false traditions as well as true, and it is chiefly with the former that the writer is concerned. In regard of costumes on the operatic stages he tells several curious anecdotes. Thus he states that when Gounod's "Mireille" was produced, Madame Carvalho insisted on appearing in the costume of a Swiss peasant—as may be proved from the coloured prints still in existence—and that a considerable time elapsed before any prima donna ventured to disregard this "tradition" and dress the part in the picturesque garb of the daughters of Arles. At the same time, M. Montaux pleads vigorously for a certain latitude in regard to costume, and protests against the tradition which condemns Mephistopheles to his red carnival dress and Valentine to his equally inevitable get-up. M. Maurel, it will be remembered, defied this tradition a few seasons back when he gave us a grey Mephistopheles, while Madame Nuovina violated another tradition by appearing as a black-haired Marguerite. There is certainly this to be said in favour of the latitude advocated by M. Montaux—that it tends to lend an element of freshness and surprise to works which are in danger of becoming hackneyed from being invariably mounted with the same scenery and dresses.

PLEASANT it is, amidst much discouragement, to meet with a real and indisputable piece of evidence of improvement in public musical taste. Is not the genuine success of "Hänsel und Gretel" such evidence? The writer remembers a conversation which took place between Sir Julius Benedict and Carl Rosa just fifteen years ago. They were both shrugging their shoulders over the success of the "Cloches de Corneville," which had been enjoying a run of some four hundred nights. Said Benedict, "Do you mean to tell me that if this wretched thing can run all that time, that if you were to mount some really powerful good opera—say Wagner's 'Walküre'—you couldn't run that for at least thirty nights?" Said Rosa, with a full knowledge of the British public's taste: "No, certainly not!" Fifteen years have passed, and an opera of the most advanced type, written by an entirely unknown composer, is produced with no flourish of trumpets, but excellently sung and acted. Not merely the musicians, but the general public crowd to hear it, and, in spite of all adverse circumstances, it bids fair to run as long as the most inane of the so-called comic operas. This fact is one of the most encouraging recently placed before students of musical progress.

In the second volume of Schubert's Songs (in the new edition by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, No. 90), "Idens Nachtgesang," words by Kosegarten, has, according to the editor, Herr Mandychewsky, been published from an autograph in the possession of Herr Craz, of Vienna. It may be interesting to know that in the British Museum (MS. 29,999) there is a copy of this song, which has all the appearance, especially as regards the composer's signature, of an autograph. The notes are the same as in the version now published. At the beginning of the three bars, 9—11, the latter has an fp, not marked in the British Museum copy. The latter, again, has only the first stanza of Kosegarten's poem written under the music, the published copy has in all six stanzas.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

A CERTAIN composer, having read the verses headed "The talk of Torquay" (see MUSICAL TIMES for February), felt that so touching an expression of public disappointment and annoyance "yearned for music." He immediately supplied the want, and now the feelings of Torquayers, the South Devonians, and their sympathisers can have vent in song:—

"THE TALK OF TORQUAY."

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It consists of five systems of staves. The key signature is one flat (B-flat) and the time signature is 4/4. The lyrics are written below the vocal line.

Said the peo - ple of Tor - quay, "Oh, my town, With his pi - an - is - tic feats, And the

A BROADSTAIRS correspondent, in forwarding the programme of a local Concert, directs attention to the following item: "Interval of ten minutes, during which will be played pianoforte solo, 'Mattei's Grand Valse.'" As to this he says: "It would be interesting to know if this interval is likely to be the most enjoyable part of the entertainment—as described in the short glossary of musical terms in the last number of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It is quite bad enough for audiences to talk during the performance of instrumental music, but for the promoters of concerts to invite them to do so is surely deserving of severe criticism."

SYMPHONY and sympathy are interchangeable terms with our amusing young friend the printer's boy. A correspondent mentions a case in which his griminess made "Schubert's Symphony in C" into "Schubert's Sympathy in C," and another wherein the writer of an article on Lady Augusta Stanley was represented as saying that "each day revealed some new symphony, some new manifestation."

My old correspondent, the Rev. W. E. Stebbing, late Curate of Morpeth, sends me the following Sonnet, addressed

TO VERDI

(After hearing his Requiem Mass).

Dear master! this thy mighty chaunt of death,
 And judgment, and the sad sin-scorched soul,
 Heaving deep thunders as Time's surges roll,— Scaling the gloom with terror's shrill-set breath,— Mutt'ring what passionate prayers the spirit saith,— Shows thee among the mountain peaks of art,
 Topp'd happy but by one, where died Mozart,
 Whose spirit 'mid the snows long lingereth.

Yet, master, ere thou goest another strain
 We beg; set all thy forces in array;
 'Mid war harmonic sing a song of life:
 Life billowing with large pulses like the main,
 And fed with bounty of the night and day,
 And conquering combatants in kingly strife.

A CORRESPONDENT sends the following traveller's tale, and questions thereon founded:

Some remarkable experiences of a dignitary of a Northern Cathedral have reached us, which suggest many interesting questions as to the musical sensitiveness of animals. He relates that, on a visit to the Holy Land, while riding a very spirited horse on the plains of Bethlehem, he was so overcome by the associations of the scene that he involuntarily broke out into the appropriate and well-known hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing," in the major key. The animal he bestrode at once became absolutely ungovernable, and executed such a violent series of prancings that the reverend dignitary was in serious danger of being unhorsed. With a fine appreciation, however, of the situation, it occurred to him at once that the cause of the creature's restiveness was its absolute unacquaintance with music in the major mode. The Reverend Canon frankly admits that he was not musician enough, on the moment, to reset the tune in question in the minor mode to meet his steed's susceptibilities—but, happily, he was able, in his perilous situation, to recollect another hymn tune, in the much desired minor mode, upon his singing which the animal at once became pacified and was quiet as a lamb, to the great comfort of his reverend rider. Apropos: (1.) Are Arab airs as a rule in a minor key? (2.) Are animals generally sensitive to the relations of major and minor? (3.) Has any of your readers tried the effect on himself or his friends of "Hark! the herald angels sing" IN A MINOR KEY? (4.) We should like to know what the hymn in the minor key was which proved at once suitable to the situation and pacifying to the horse.

SOME critics dole out laudatory adjectives in a grudging spirit. Others are as lavish as a spendthrift. A correspondent, writing from Pembroke College, Cambridge, calls my attention to one of the last-named class, whose notice of a Recital lately given in the University town contained the following expressions: "majestic sonata"; "beautiful sostenuto and crescendo effects"; "delicious, tender morceau"; "beautiful smoothness and sweetness"; "limpid clearness"; "incisive appoggiaturas"; "most entrancing"; "ethereal grace and softness"; "beautifully performed"; "splendidly played." Happy critic! The "black ox" of pessimism has not trodden upon your foot, and in your eyes the good is very good. Keep in that state as long as you can, for even its illusions are better than the actualities of sourness and snapping.

AN Edinburgh correspondent, Mr. Charles Smith, writes concerning the suggestion that a series of notices dealing with the lives of eminent English composers for the Church would be acceptable to readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES. He remarks: "If my suggestion were more widely known, I am in hopes other approvers would come forward. There must be no end of interesting information concerning these great men, which we should be all the better for knowing." Mr. Smith is good enough to hope that I will take up the task. For myself I can only say now that the matter has not been overlooked, and that, when some pressing obligations have been discharged, it shall receive due attention.

I HAVE found some notable sentences in a Yorkshire paper containing a criticism of Paderewski's Bradford Recital. "In his playing of Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 111)," says the writer, "it was fascinating the facility with which he changed his rhythm and intuitively phrased so beautifully." Again: "Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques' (Op. 13) gave him the opportunity of showing how intensely, even magnetically, expression can be conveyed into melody notes, and sing witchingly wailful refrains, though surrounded by intricate harmonies." Expression singing witchingly wailful refrains (the alliteration may be commended to Mr. Swinburne) in the midst of intricate harmonies makes a striking and novel picture. The writer continues: "Liszt's 'Etude de Concert' was not only brilliant, but moved his audience to the greatest enthusiasm by his telling clearness of touch of every note in the most rapid of finger passages." Grammatically, the Etude did this, but, of course, Paderewski is meant. The whole may pass as a fine example of word-slinging.

MR. J. C. B. TIRBUTT is delivering a series of musical lectures in connection with University Extension College, Reading, and, judging by one on Beethoven which I have read, very judicious and instructive discourses they are. Within the necessarily limited time allowed, Mr. Tirbutt not only gave a sketch of the master's life, with incidental references to many of his works, but laid before the audience, with the help of some good artists, such examples as movements from the Pianoforte Trio (Op. 1, No. 3) and one of the Sonatas for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 5), the Violin Romance in G, and several songs. There is no limit to the advantages of lectures like those of Mr. Tirbutt.

AN unlucky reviewer once dealt with a modern edition of Johnson's Dictionary as a new work, and rated the great lexicographer pretty soundly for the opinions stated in the preface. That was a large error, but a little one, in some respects, when compared with the achievement of a Queensland critic. Mozart's Mass in C (No. 1) having been chosen for performance in the Roman Catholic Church at Bundeberg, the gentleman referred to indited a preliminary paragraph, and said that the work was "composed for Salisbury Cathedral's great Easter Festival in 1779; after an absence from his native town, it was looked on as a sort of test work, and he was compelled to acquit himself creditably to be placed on the pedestal of genius." Concerning the performance, it was said: "The Kyrie eleison is somewhat restricted as to length, but to render the Mass more complete, a phrase or two is introduced at the end. The next part was the Gloria, which changed in time, and was remarkable for the beautiful manner in which the voices joined on to the symphonic orchestra," which consisted, I am credibly informed, of three violins, violoncello, and American organ. Continuing, the writer says, "Here the movement of the treble and alto voices was very striking, while the Credo was rendered in perfect style, the voices being set off by the interesting tones of the violins. The Benedictus was given in a sweet and simple manner, with capable movement of the parts in a vocal quartet." The correspondent who sends these extracts thinks comment unnecessary. So do I.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE new works produced at our leading provincial festivals seldom meet with immediate favour when presented to London amateurs; but the first performance of Dr. Hubert Parry's Birmingham Oratorio "King Saul" proved an exception, a large audience assembling in the Albert Hall, on the 7th ult., when the latest composition of a musician whom England properly delights to honour was given by our leading metropolitan choral society. It was generally recognised when this remarkable work—remarkable alike as an oratorio and an epic poem—was produced in London that sundry excisions would have to be made, and Dr. Parry has taken the kindly advice tendered to him, though it is a matter for regret that the Prelude, in which the leading themes in the score are introduced to notice, was sacrificed; though, of course, it can be restored on any future occasion. The jubilant soprano solo for Michal was more easily spared, and the curtailments in the majestic Finale to the fourth act were justifiable. That "King Saul," in its revised form, was not too long, even for an Albert Hall audience, was shown by the fact that the audience did not sensibly diminish until close upon the termination of the performance, a rare experience at Kensington Gore. Commencing his career as a composer with perhaps unconscious imitation of modern German masters, Dr. Parry has gradually moulded his style according to what may be termed Anglo-Handelian methods, as regards the use of diatonic sequences, directness of expression, and general breadth and virility in writing. But he can be subtle and dramatic when he pleases, as in the music allotted to the Evil Spirit, the night soliloquy of the fate-stricken monarch, and, above all, in the scene with the Witch of Endor. In the last-named episode the composer has fairly surpassed all his previous efforts in the direction of vivid picturesque orchestration. If "King Saul" did not seem so overpowering in its effect as at Birmingham, allowance must be made for the glamour which always attaches to Festival performances. But although there were certainly slips in the orchestra, the Albert Hall choir worthily sustained its reputation in the massive choral numbers. Mr. Henschel was again unsurpassable as the King, whom Dr. Parry has made the most striking figure in oratorio since Mendelssohn penned "Elijah"; and other members of the original cast were Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Edward Lloyd, who, of course, did well in not very important parts. Miss Florence Oliver was a very efficient representative of the Evil Spirit, taking the somewhat arduous part at short notice in place of Miss Marie Brema, who was unfortunately unable to repeat her original impersonation. Mr. Douglas Powell was efficient as Samuel, and the composer, who conducted in person, had no reason to feel dissatisfied with the reception of his magnificent work.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

THOSE who still persist in attributing the attractiveness of Wagner's music to a caprice of fashion, must have had some difficulty to account for the overflowing audience which, on the 14th ult., crowded all the cheaper portions of the Queen's Hall, while very many stalls were unoccupied. On this occasion Mr. Henschel devoted his Concert to the works of the Bayreuth master, and, in commemoration of his death-day, Beethoven's Third Symphony. The great work of the Bonn master received an excellent interpretation, particularly with regard to the Adagio and the emphatic Finale. Very meritorious interpretations were also given of the Wagnerian excerpts, which consisted of the Prelude to "Lohengrin," the so-called "Good Friday music" from the third act of "Parsifal," and the familiar orchestral arrangement of the Introduction and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde." Greater intensity of expression now and again was demanded by the music, but that the performance abundantly satisfied the requirements of the large majority of its attentive listeners proof was frequently manifest. The vocal pieces were Elsa's Dream from "Lohengrin" and Senta's Ballad from "The Flying Dutchman," both expressively sung by Miss Esther Palliser.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

THE Saturday series was resumed, on the 16th ult., with a programme devoted exclusively to the compositions of Wagner, the anniversary of whose death had occurred three days earlier. In the famous love duet from "Die Walküre" Miss Edith Miller, who has done such good work as the Witch in "Hänsel und Gretel," made a decidedly favourable début at these Concerts as Sieglinde, Mr. Lloyd singing the music of Siegmund with his wonted refinement and skill. The purely orchestral selections comprised the Prelude to "Lohengrin," the "Walkürenritt," and the "Kaiser-marsch," of which the last-named was given with especial success. The programme was completed with an extensive selection from the closing scene of the "Meistersinger." Here Mr. Lloyd was irreproachable as Walther, Miss Miller acquitted herself with credit as Eva, and useful aid was lent in the rôles of Pogner and Sachs by Messrs. Miles and Ludwig. The choruses were sung satisfactorily by the Crystal Palace choir, and the whole Concert directed with his usual ability by Mr. Manns.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SOME of Mr. Arthur Chappell's programmes coming within range at present need little more than formal notice, the first, on Saturday afternoon, January 26, being an example in point. Rubinstein's piquant Quartet in F (Op. 17, No. 3) was repeated by Lady Hallé and her co-artists, and occasioned a desire to make further acquaintance with the deceased Russian musician's concerted chamber works; Mr. Leonard Borwick imparted the requisite delicacy in his interpretation of Mozart's Pianoforte Sonata in D, the last and finest of several works in this key; and Lady Hallé was superb in the popular "Benedictus" and "Saltarello" from Sir Alexander Mackenzie's set of six violin pieces, composed at Florence in 1887. Mrs. Helen Trust was charming in some old songs by Boyce and Linley, and a perfect performance of Schumann's vigorous Sonata in D minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 121), the second of two works of this class, written apparently in haste towards the close of the master's career, completed the programme.

There is little to be said except formal record concerning the Concert of the following Monday. Spohr's tuneful Quartet in A (Op. 93) and Brahms's splendid Pianoforte Quintet in F minor were the concerted pieces, and Mr. Leonard Borwick played Grieg's Ballade in G minor (Op. 24)—virtually an air with variations—in his best manner. A very favourable impression was made by Herr von Dulong, who, though presumably a German, has the pure Italian method of vocalisation, as was evinced in songs by Schumann and Brahms.

Another masterpiece of Brahms, the exquisitely beautiful Clarinet Quintet in B minor (Op. 115), was played on Saturday, the 2nd ult., and again on the following Monday, St. James's Hall being well filled on both occasions. Mr. Mühlfeld once more displayed his perfect command of his instrument in the principal part. On the first occasion he also took part, with Miss Fanny Davies, in Weber's Duo Concertante in E flat for pianoforte and clarinet, Miss Davies rendering as her solos a Scherzo and an Impromptu of Chopin with much, but perfectly unaffected, expression. Madame Emily Squire gave satisfaction in her songs.

On the 4th ult. the programme included Beethoven's early and melodious Trio in B flat for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello (Op. 11) and Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22), magnificently played, alike in technique and feeling, by Mr. Leonard Borwick. Mr. Hugo Becker gave a pleasing cantabile movement for violoncello by César Cui, and Miss Fillunger was altogether admirable in two of Brahms's recently published Volkslieder.

The programme of Saturday, the 9th ult., was of a stereotyped pattern, and there was only a small audience. It will suffice to state that the concerted works were Beethoven's Quartet in A (Op. 18, No. 5) and Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 45); and that Miss Eibenschütz in Beethoven's Variations in C minor, Lady Hallé in a recitative and Adagio, from Spohr's Violin Concerto in G minor (No. 6), Miss Kate Cove in well-chosen songs by Liszt, and Miss Maude V. White gave a large measure of satisfaction.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat, the work which first drew attention to the dawning ability of the Scottish musician about twenty years ago, was performed on the following Monday, and its freshness and vitality were recognised by those who heard it now for the first time. The music bears throughout the impress of youthfulness and joyous life, and it was beautifully rendered by Miss Fanny Davies, Lady Hallé, and Messrs. Gibson and Whitehouse. Miss Davies gave a most intelligent performance of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2), a favourite with her former preceptor, Madame Schumann, and Mendelssohn's Quartet in A minor (Op. 13) completed the instrumental portion of the programme. In songs by Mendelssohn, Dvorák, and Paderewski, Madame Amy Sherwin showed that she has much advanced in respect of vocal refinement.

Two features lent special interest to the Concert of Saturday, the 16th ult. One was the first appearance of Mr. Emil Sauer before Mr. Arthur Chappell's audiences and the other Rubinstein's only Pianoforte Quartet in C (Op. 66) which was performed for the first time. This work displays the deceased Russian virtuoso in his ripest manner as a composer. He was seldom symmetrical in dealing with symphonic forms, and the first and third movements of this Quartet are somewhat disjointed and rhapsodical, though in the latter defects in construction are atoned for by the impressiveness of the writing generally. This slow movement reminds the hearer of Beethoven's in the Pianoforte Trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1). The Allegro scherzando in F is very bright and piquant, and the Finale is a well-constructed movement. Rubinstein's Quartet is virtually a pianoforte solo with string accompaniment, and Mr. Sauer seemed to recognise this, his companion artists being "nowhere" at times. The gifted pianist selected as his solo Beethoven's penultimate Sonata in A flat (Op. 110), and, after a highly finished if not remarkably striking performance, gave as an encore Chopin's Nocturne in G with indescribable beauty of touch and method. Miss Gwladys Wood was agreeable in songs by Handel and Brahms, and Mendelssohn's perennial Quartet in E flat brought the Concert to a conclusion.

The Concert of Monday, the 18th ult., is the last we can notice this month, and justice can be done to it in few words. Mr. Sauer made his second and last appearance this season, taking part in Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in B flat, and playing as a solo Chopin's Allegro de Concert in A (Op. 46), which, in his hands, was wonderfully effective.

In response to the inevitable encore, he gave the same composer's Berceuse with equal charm. The vocalist was Mr. von Dulong, who again showed the perfection of his vocal method in a selection from Schumann's cycle of songs, "Dichterliebe," and other lyrics by Dvorák and Grieg. Mozart's Quartet in C (No. 6 of the set in C, dedicated to Haydn) ended the Concert.

THURSDAY SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

At the fourth Concert of the series, held in Queen's Hall on the 7th ult., the composer drawn upon for the whole of the first part was Beethoven; and, considering the prescribed limits of the Thursday scheme, the choice of pieces could scarcely have been improved upon. For instance, as the tenor air there was the peerless "Adeleide," sung by Mr. William Nicholl with a refinement of style and purity of expression that not only developed the full beauty of the work, but secured for its interpreter the compliment of a double recall. Miss Meredith Elliott distinguished herself in "Creation's Hymn," and Miss Anna Kelly obtained warm approval for her delivery of "Kennst du das Land?" The Grand Trio in B flat (Op. 97) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, efficiently played by Messrs. Septimus Webbe, Otto Peiniger, and Hans Adolf Brouil, headed the list; and as violin solo the second named of these artists gave the Romance in F. According to custom, the second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Septimus Webbe acquitted himself well in Edward German's Concert Study in A flat, and Mr. Brouil played two solos by Mr. J. H. Bonawitz. Other specially successful features of this section were Mr. Nicholl's finished rendering of Ernest Lake's "My love and delight," and the old song, "With early horn." This conscientious vocalist was also associated with Miss Kelly in Luzzi's duettino, "Insieme." At the next Concert—when the earlier half will be devoted to Dr. Hubert Parry's works—Mr. Nicholl will give the MS. songs "Weep ye no more" and "Thine eyes still shine on me."

THE MUSICAL GUILD.

AMONG the smaller and less conspicuous concert-giving institutions of London, it would not be easy to name one whose members have struggled on with more energy and perseverance, through years of discouragement and comparative neglect, than that which is known as the Musical Guild, which has striven for twelve seasons—since 1889—to foster a taste for the best specimens of chamber music amongst the residents of Kensington. A meeting was held a few weeks since to consider what steps could be taken to secure the continuance of the excellent Concerts given by the ex-students of the Royal College who compose the Guild. The meeting must have been a success, if we may judge by the large audience at the first Concert of the twelfth series, which took place at the Town Hall on the evening of Monday, the 18th ult., the attendance being very considerably in excess of anything we have seen before at a Guild Concert; though it should be made known to the less wealthy amateurs of the neighbourhood that there are some two hundred places at a shilling each, which, in their interests as well as those of the Guild, we should be glad to see occupied. Our intent being rather to draw attention to these Concerts than to criticise the details, we will merely say that the chief pieces of the programme were Beethoven's Septet and Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet, of the performance of both of which works we can speak in terms of praise needing little, if any, qualification. Solo pieces for clarinet and violoncello were admirably played by Messrs. C. Draper and P. Ludwig, and the vocalist, Mr. C. Magrath, contributed, besides Halévy's "Si la rigueur," two songs by Mr. A. Davidson Arnott (a member of the Guild), the second of which, a setting of Shelley's "Time long past," is a really admirable composition, rich in poetical feeling and musically treatment. The whole Concert was most enjoyable.

SIR A. C. MACKENZIE ON NATIONAL MUSIC.

On the 9th ult. and two following Saturdays Sir A. C. Mackenzie delivered a course of Lectures on "The Traditional and National in Music," at the Royal Institution.

In the first Lecture he dealt chiefly with Humperdinck's opera "Hänsel und Gretel." Folk-music, he said, was of almost inexhaustible interest, for apart from the pleasure and knowledge derived from a consideration of its intrinsic beauties, its varied characteristics, its value as a key to the musical—and sometimes the political—history of nations, it had become an undoubtedly prominent factor—an active force, in the art music of the present day. In music, at least, they could not fail to recognise a strong desire to preserve jealously the peculiar qualities which distinguished national temperaments. There was hardly a country in which there could not be found musical composers occupied in the endeavour to idealise their native song and dance, either by the merely imitative process or by the adoption of the actual matter as thematic material in the higher forms of art music, such as the sonata, symphony, and opera.

In "Hänsel und Gretel" there was the union of the national element with the latest and most intricate methods of musical composition and its attendant instrumentation—doubly interesting by reason of the seeming incongruity of the thematic subject-matter and the masterly science which was displayed in its treatment. It was not the least of its merits that it bore the stamp on every page, "Made in Germany"—from no other country could it have emanated. The study of the development of national opera had a certain fascination for musicians in England, possibly because they brought wistful eyes to bear upon it. It had come to be regarded as an almost unattainable quantity in this country; indeed, the English opera-house remained a sort of "Spanish castle" built in air. The lecturer proceeded to mention that some of the most popular plays which occupied the attention of the German stage were the works of Gerard Hauptmann. In their domestic realistic element they had a strong point of resemblance to "Hänsel und Gretel." Sir Alexander said the polyphony of German art was now, apparently, as well understood by the English as by the German student; hence the success of "Hänsel und Gretel." The folk-opera as represented by Weber's "Der Frieschütz" and Lortzing's comic operas had little in common with Humperdinck's work. Their themes were the result of assimilation rather than actual reproduction of familiar matter, but in "Hänsel und Gretel" the composer seemed to have started with two distinct and separate ideas. He took as the basis of the whole fabric some of the best known nursery and student songs, using them either in snatches or in their entirety, or as mere suggestions, and occasionally there were to be found instances of that unconscious reproduction of the national element which he (Sir A. Mackenzie) was inclined to rate as of a higher value than the mere contrapuntal development, however skilful, of any "canto fermo." In the second place, Humperdinck at the outset treated this simple, nay even commonplace, given material in the latest and most complex manner of the master of the "Meistersinger." Having dwelt appreciatively on the humour shown by the composer, the lecturer gave a short sketch of Humperdinck's career (referring especially to his personal association with Wagner) and then proceeded to analyse the work. The first scene might be described as domestic, the second as highly poetic, and the third as fantastic almost to the verge of grotesqueness. The music revealed that excessively sincere form of flattery which the pupil paid to his master—it was only to the purblind that this reverential deference was not apparent, and it was made more lifelike by that method of instrumentation which was the natural result of Wagner's polyphonic style. Sir Alexander referred to many beautiful passages in the score, and said he thought there was every probability that the composer would give still more convincing proof of his powers of originality in future efforts. He was quite sure Humperdinck's claims to be accepted as a thoroughly national composer were not only already justified, but most readily admitted.

In illustration of the Lecture, several pieces from "Hänsel und Gretel" were charmingly sung by Miss Jeannie Douste, Miss Marie Elbe, and Mr. Charles Copland.

The second Lecture was entitled "English Country Songs," but Sir Alexander dealt also, at considerable length, with the question of national music generally. He said it was not his intention to discuss the relative merits of the folk-music of the nations, or to weigh the chances of their success in their application to art music. He only wished to arrive at some reasonable conclusion as to the desirability of the introduction of national characteristics into art music at all. Some people looked upon the use of externals—outward characteristics—as a mere patent incubator, and thought that a composer might hide his want of originality by the infusion of folk-song and national peculiarities. There was, however, only a limited amount of truth in that impression. The beginning of a national school of composition had to be found in a complete knowledge (not a mere superficial appreciation) and a love of the people's music. He instanced Bohemia and Russia, where schools had been founded within a couple of generations; but in speaking of Dvorák's latest work, "From the New World," he said the composer had sacrificed himself on the altar of enthusiasm. It was difficult to believe in the efficacy of an international exchange of expression in folk-music. Composers in this country were being constantly urged to help towards the formation of a school of English music, one which should reproduce the distinctive qualities of our national music. This was more easy of suggestion than of performance, and few of those who were constantly pointing in this direction were inclined to venture on the difficult task of determining the special and peculiar characteristics which such a school should bear. The fact that England had been amongst the very first of countries to produce art music was rather a disadvantage than an advantage, so far as the preservation of musical physiognomy was concerned. Unlike Scotch and Irish music, English music did not seem to have been written from the heart's blood—there was not that prevailing element of sadness; but, of course, the emotion of the music might not be the less true. He spoke in eulogy of the movement to secure permanent record of English country songs before they were swept away by modern influences, and said that the participation in such a work was better than the pressing and pinching of composers to be national before everything else. Miss Amy Harding (in the absence through illness of Miss Broadwood) and Mr. David Bispham illustrated the Lecture by singing several songs from the collection entitled "English County Songs," which were accompanied by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland. The third Lecture took place too late for notice in our present issue.

PIANOFORTE AND VIOLIN RECITALS.

A NUMBER of performances have taken place during the past month which may fairly come under this heading, but they have been, speaking generally, of an ordinary pattern, and may be dealt with briefly. The second Recital of Miss Florence May, in the Queen's Hall, on January 31, included Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata in C (Op. 53), Brahms's Variations on an original theme (Op. 21), and some piquant little movements from a Harpsichord Suite in A, by Henry Symonds, an organist in the City during the early part of the last century.

Miss May's third and last Recital for the present was given on the 14th ult., the principal features in her programme being Mozart's Sonata in A minor and Schumann's "Faschingsschwank aus Wien," the latter being crisply and even powerfully rendered. Three numbers from Brahms's set of pieces (Op. 116 and 117) and Chopin's Fantasia in F minor (Op. 49) were also well played, the only noticeable defect being a certain hardness of touch. With all respect to the memory of the late Hans von Bülow, whose opinion of what he termed "petticoat pianists" was not very high, we venture to think that, in a female executant, delicacy of method is not undesirable.

Miss Amy Hare, who gave a Recital at St. James's Hall, on the 13th ult., is another energetic player. Educated at the Royal Academy of Music, she has since won reputation in the United States, and may now be pronounced a very able, if not quite sufficiently refined executant. Her programme was less conventional than usual, for it included a Sonata by the semi-forgotten composer Paradies, who spent a considerable portion of his life in this country during the last century; and Weber's fine, but now rarely-heard Sonata in E minor (No. 4). A large measure of justice was rendered to these works, Miss Hare possessing an excellent technique, and also to pieces by Chopin, Schumann (this composer being represented by the ever-welcome "Papillons," Op. 2), Brahms, Rubinstein, and Liszt.

Master Basil Gauntlett's Recital at the Steinway Hall, on Thursday, January 31, was rendered interesting to those who admire juvenile prodigies by the fact that the young performer was stated to be only nine years of age. He is a grandson of Dr. Gauntlett—a clever, though somewhat eccentric musician, who died nearly twenty years ago. Though not displaying phenomenal capacity, Master Gauntlett afforded evidence of sound tuition, doing credit to his preceptor, Mr. Carlo Ducci. The programme did not include any works of magnitude, which was wise; but a number of minor pieces by Byrde, Frescobaldi, Couperin, Domenico Scarlatti, Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert, and Chopin gave plenty of variety to the scheme. At the same time, the young aspirant may be recommended to continue his studies and give no more public recitals for the present.

That excellent artist, Mr. Franz Rummel, gave the first of a further series of Pianoforte Recitals at St. James's Hall, on Friday afternoon, the 15th ult. The work in which his ability was at the outset prominently displayed was Beethoven's set of Variations on an original theme in F (Op. 34); Chopin's favourite Sonata in B flat minor, with the Funeral March following; Schumann's enormously difficult Toccata in C (Op. 7) was vigorously interpreted; and Mr. Rummel's rendering of two "Miniatures" by Rubinstein (Op. 33) was delightfully refined. Other pieces by Strauss, Mendelssohn, and Liszt were included in the programme.

The briefest record is all that is needed concerning a Pianoforte Recital given by Mr. Gustave Pradeau, at the Princes' Hall, on Saturday, the 16th ult. The programme contained the names of three composers only, but Bach was represented by his "Italian" Concerto and the French Suite (No. 5), Chopin by the Sonata in B minor, and Schumann by four minor pieces. Mr. Pradeau was most commendable in the music of Bach.

Miss Ethel Spiller, who gave a Violin Recital at the Princes' Hall, on Monday afternoon, the 18th ult., has much executive facility, although her tone is somewhat hard—this defect, however, being possibly due to her instrument. Whether by accident or design, Miss Spiller chose pieces which are favoured by Mr. Sarasate, whose style is also apparently her model. She evinced brilliant technique in Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor (No. 1), which, however, suffers much in the absence of an orchestra, and in pieces by Ries and Saint-Saëns. Of the remaining contributions to the programme, the most acceptable were the songs artistically rendered by Mrs. Lee.

MR. DOLMETSCH'S RECITALS.

THE first of the two recent Concerts given by Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch took place in the Salle Erard, on January 29, and was devoted to Italian composers of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries. As usual, the programme contained many interesting features, notably two piquant dance tunes for the lute and viol, respectively called a "Cascarda" and a "Balletto," by Fabrizio Caroso, published in 1581; and a delightfully characteristic Sonata for viola da gamba, accompanied by the harpsichord, by Benedetto Marcello, dating from the early part of the eighteenth century, the string part in this latter work being most effectively played by the Concert-giver's clever daughter, Miss Hélène Dolmetsch. The rendering, by Mrs. Hutchinson, of an expressive song, "O cessate di piangermi," by Alessandro Scarlatti, and the playing by Miss Ethel Davies of four harpsichord pieces by Domenico Scarlatti, were also most enjoyable.

On the 12th ult. Mr. Dolmetsch received his patrons in the Queen's (Small) Hall, and provided them a fare of still greater antiquarian and, be it added, musical attractiveness. The pieces heard on this occasion included an admirable specimen, in the shape of a Sonata for the viola da gamba, of the facile genius of G. P. Telemann, a prominent representative of the Hamburg school; and a Sonata for the flute, violin, violoncello, and harpsichord, by Handel, containing a stately slow movement. Bach's "Chromatic Fantasia," played upon a clavichord, the delicate tones of which necessitated a silence rarely secured from a musical audience, must have been a revelation to many; and Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland played on a fine harpsichord a Toccata in G, by the same master, with such effective use of changes of timbre that one realised the fact that the mighty metallic modern grand is not an entire gain. Bach's inimitable "Bauernkantate," heard at a previous Concert, the solos of which were excellently sung by Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Douglas Powell, concluded a delightful evening.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

ILLNESS unfortunately thinned the ranks of that well-drilled body, the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society, at its second Subscription Concert of the present season, on Tuesday, the 10th ult., at the Queen's Hall, and the playing was perhaps not quite so praiseworthy as usual. Still, Mr. George Kitchin's zealous followers rendered a considerable measure of justice to Schumann's Symphony in B flat, No. 1; the Overture to "Hänsel and Gretel," and Bizet's little suite, "Jeux d'Enfants." Two Symphonic movements, written by Mr. H. A. Keyser when a student at Dresden, in 1889, show that at the time the composer was under Mendelssohnian influences, but they are agreeable and nicely scored. Miss Beatrice Langley in Spohr's Dramatic Concerto showed that she is making rapid strides as a violinist, and Mrs. Lee was acceptable in the songs she gave in place of those set down for Mrs. Helen Trust, who was unfortunately unable to appear.

On the following evening the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society gave a remarkably successful Concert, also in the Queen's Hall. Really fine performances of Dvorák's delightful Symphony in E minor, "From the New World," and Mendelssohn's Overture "The Hebrides" were secured, under the direction of Mr. George Mount. A very youthful violinist, Master Maurice Alexander, displayed promise of no ordinary character, and Madame Sapio, an agreeable light soprano, was successful in her vocal selections.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

ON the 6th ult. an Orchestral Concert was given at the Imperial Institute, the programme including the delightful Overture to Peter Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad"; Beethoven's Fourth Symphony in B flat, a scena, "Ich wohne dies Gewand," from Bruch's "Odysseus," sung by Miss Louise Watson; Spohr's eighth Violin Concerto (Scena Cantante), played by Miss Jessie Grimson; and a setting for soprano and orchestra of "Zara's Ear-rings," from Lockhart's "Spanish Ballads." This was the work of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor—a scholar of the College, who is already known by a number of compositions published during the last few years. The Ballad in question displays decided talent, the orchestration especially being full of felicitous touches. It was sung by Miss Clementine M. Pierpoint, whose clear, high soprano told well in Mr. Taylor's music. The orchestra was not in its best form; slips were not infrequent, and we have often heard Professor Stanford's young people play with greater finish and refinement. At the Concert on the 13th ult. we heard a capital performance of Dvorák's fine Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81)—a work which seems to stand every chance of becoming a classic. Misses Gwendolyn Toms, Marie Motto, Ruth Howell, Emma Smith, and Mr. E. Tomlinson were the interpreters. Miss Isabella Graham played Chopin's Study in E (from Op. 10) smoothly and expressively, while there was plenty of energy and brilliancy in her rendering of Tchaikowsky's more peculiar than beautiful Scherzo Russe.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A MIXED choir of about fifty selected voices, under the conductorship of Mr. H. R. Evers, imparted distinction to the Concert given on the 20th ult., by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, at the Imperial Institute. The choral numbers included an "Ave Maria" by Liszt, an "Offertorium" by Reinecke, and Mendelssohn's fine setting of the 2nd Psalm. These were most effectively sung, and the admirable quality of the female portion of the choir was further shown in the "Song of the Spirits," from Mr. Corder's music to the "Tempest." As usual, several enjoyable instrumental performances were given—notably, on this occasion, by Miss Edie Reynolds and Mr. M. Donnawell, whose respective violin and flute solos were greatly appreciated. The solo pianists were Miss Edith Greenhill, Miss Ida C. Betts, and Miss L. West; and songs were contributed by Miss Gertrude Hughes, Mr. Bertram H. Wallis, and Mr. Wright Beaumont. Mr. Christophe Wilson proved an efficient accompanist.

MR. CHARLES FRY'S RECITALS.

ALTHOUGH to the reputation of Mr. Charles Fry must be chiefly accredited the large audiences that have attended his Recitals, with Miss Olive Kennett, during the past month at St. Martin's Town Hall, there can be little doubt but that the attractiveness of these evenings was much increased by the musical arrangements.

For the first Recital, on the 5th ult., Mr. Clement Locknane had written some new incidental choral and orchestral music to "Macbeth," in which the greater part of the lines of the Three Witches were set with excellent effect, probably for the first time. The music was rendered by a quintet of strings (led by Mr. Gatehouse) and harmonium (at which the composer presided), and a small choir directed by Mr. J. T. Hutchinson, that gentleman singing the music assigned to Hecate. Some new incidental numbers were also specially composed by Mr. Berthold Tours for "Romeo and Juliet," selections from which formed the chief portion of the second Recital, on the 12th ult. Mr. Tours's music consists of four orchestral pieces—an Andante grazioso, an Allegro, an Adagio religioso, and an Allegro appassionata, severally designed to suggest the respective characters of Juliet, Mercutio, Friar Lawrence, and Romeo. The pieces are written for strings, may be described as French in character, and played successively, form an effective Suite, in which manner they were first heard on this occasion preceding the Recital. Sir Arthur Sullivan's piquant incidental music to "The Merchant of Venice" was given at the third Recital, on the 19th ult. No little artistic importance pertains also to Mr. Stanley Hawley's essentially illustrative music to some well-known dramatic poems, of which "The Bells," "Soul Music," "Lorraine Lorrée," and "The Story of a Faithful Soul" were severally heard at these Recitals. Mr. Hawley's music follows the spirit of the text with a fidelity and suggestiveness that can only be described as masterly, and the musical intuition of Mr. Fry and Miss Kennett enabled them to take full advantage of this clever background, and made these recitations not the least enjoyable of their effective impersonations.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

MORE than usual interest was attached to the meeting of the Musical Association on the 12th ult., owing to the reading of a paper by Sir George Grove, entitled "A few words on the successive editions of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony," a subject in which he is known to take a great interest. Sir George said his remarks were not to be taken as those of a musician, but were simply intended to call attention to the alterations which had been made in the score of the Ninth Symphony in the successive publications of the last thirty years. All the original editions of Beethoven's Symphonies were issued with the composer's approval and, "errors excepted," were to be taken as correct. In one case, that of the redundant bars in the Scherzo of the C minor Symphony, Beethoven wrote to the publishers immediately after publication, correcting the mistake; but for some reason his letter was not acted upon, and, indeed, was not noticed until some thirty years afterwards, when the intuition of Mendelssohn prompted him to make inquiries, which resulted in the production of the letter. The Ninth Symphony was first performed, in MS., at Vienna, on May 7, 1824; the second performance being that of our own Philharmonic Society on March 11, 1825. The score was published by Messrs

Schott and Sons in the well known folio edition at the end of 1826 or beginning of 1827. That Beethoven saw the proofs of this edition was evident from references to them in his letters to the publishers before publication. The edition must therefore be accepted as so far having had his approval, with the exception of one or two additional indications which he requested should be made, but which were not attended to. In 1827 Messrs. Schott re-published it in octavo size, and then the plates of the folio were melted down. This octavo edition was intended to be in all respects, save as to size, a fac-simile of the folio edition, but there were some important differences. In the Scherzo, where the time changed to four crotchets in a bar, there was engraved in the folio edition Presto $\text{♩} = 116$, which agreed exactly with the list of metronome marks in Beethoven's letters to Schott and Moscheles. In the octavo edition, however, the minim had been changed to a semibreve, thus exactly doubling the speed. Twelve bars before the beginning of the famous cadence for the soli voices, at the words "Was die Mode streng theilt," Beethoven, apparently excited with his subject, and with his usual love of plain speaking, had changed the word streng, or "strictly," into frech, or "insolently"—i.e., from "that which fashion strictly parts," into "that which fashion impudently parts." Surely so characteristic and personal a touch of the great composer's individuality might have been suffered to remain, but in the octavo edition Schiller's word streng had been restored—and this, as in the former case, without note or comment. In the Finale the double bar at the change of signature to five sharps was put four bars earlier in the octavo edition than in the folio edition. Again, Beethoven was a tyrant over his copyists. He knew exactly what he meant, and his intention was that the public should know it too. In a letter to a copyist he wrote: "When I put a dot above a note you must not put a dash, and vice-versâ. Dashes and dots are not the same things." The importance Beethoven attached to this difference was observable in the folio edition, but in the octavo was found one constant level of dots; and what was still more unfortunate, the same system prevailed throughout Breitkopf and Härtel's "critical and correct edition" of the entire series of Beethoven's symphonies. Sir George also mentioned several instances where the explicit directions of Beethoven during his life had been ignored, and concluded by expressing a desire to see an edition of the symphonies as Beethoven left them, and in which apparent errors or omissions and suggestions should be noted in the margin or set out in footnotes. Above all, he hoped so vital a difference as minim = 116 and semibreve = 116 in the Trio of the Ninth Symphony would be corrected at once, and our excellent horn players be thus secured from the scramble which they had too often lately been forced to make of a well-known passage.

During the discussion, in which the chairman, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Mr. F. G. Edwards, Dr. Vincent, and several others took part, many interesting particulars were given concerning the MS. copy sent to the Philharmonic Society, which contained several emendations by Beethoven himself, and a pencil translation of the text into Italian, in which language the work was first performed in this country under the direction of Sir George Smart. In answer to Mr. Shedlock, Sir George admitted that Schindler and Berlioz maintained that the two redundant bars in the Scherzo of the C minor Symphony were intended. At the close, Mr. Goldschmidt made an interesting communication with reference to the chorales of Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, doing so in reply to some questions addressed to him by Sir John Stainer at the first meeting of the Association this season. The chorale introduced in the first sonata was known as "Was mein Gott will" ("What God ordains"), and was originally a French popular song of date 1529. Bach had used this tune in six cantatas, and once in the St. Matthew Passion (Part I., No. 31). That in the third sonata was "Aus tiefer Not" ("Out of the deep"), and appeared in Luther's first hymn book (Wittenburg, 1524). The chorale in the fifth sonata was probably by Mendelssohn himself. That in the sixth was the well-known "Vater unser im Himmelreich" ("Our Father which art in Heaven"), originally published in 1540, and often ascribed to Luther. In the third and sixth sonatas Mendelssohn had used the chorales in their entirety and in almost their original form.

PLAIN SONG AND MEDIÆVAL SOCIETY.

THE sixth annual Meeting of the Plain Song and Mediæval Society took place in the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 9th ult., when, after the business customary on such occasions had been satisfactorily transacted, the Rev. G. R. Woodward read an attractive paper on "Ancient Carols." To-day carols may be said to be wholly associated with the Christmas season, and the lecturer did well, therefore, to remind his listeners that this was not so in the Middle Ages, many, having for their subject the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, having been extremely popular. Attention was also drawn to the fact that although little connection existed now between carols and dancing, yet carols originally were dances with songs. In the Middle Ages they were for the most part didactic and historical, more objective than subjective, and at "Miracle plays" and "Mysteries" were used to describe the events represented on the stage rather than the feelings of the spectators. When, the lecturer said, the Puritans put down dancing and singing carols they should have recollected Michal's punishment for despising David when he danced and sang before the Ark. There could be no doubt, however, that the Miracle plays and carols were parodied in an objectionable manner. Thus the ancient carol, "Nowell, Nowell," was sung to "For our Blessed Lady's sake bring us in good ale and cake." The popular Punch and Judy show was probably a relic of a Miracle play, with its tambourine-drum and pan-pipe. Punch sounded very much like Pons or Pownce, Pilate; Judy might have been intended for Judas, or Judith who slew Holofernes; and Toby was evidently the dog mentioned in the Apocrypha in the book of Tobit.

The lecturer also gave much interesting information concerning a number of French, German, and English carols, which were effectively sung by the choir of St. Barnabas, Picnic, under the direction of Mr. Luard Selby. Three French carols, "Patrem parit filia," "Viderunt, Emmanuel," and "Orientis Partibus," gave an excellent idea of the art of music in the Middle Ages. Of the four German examples the most remarkable were "Puer Natus," written in the Hyper-Dorian mode, and "Puer Nobis," taken from the "Pie Cantiones," printed in Pomerania in 1582. The English carols proved no less inferior than the preceding. "Angelus Virginem" had been discovered by the Rev. G. H. Palmer in the Arundel MS. 248, the latter having been written between 1250 and 1260. The music was found on a five-line staff, and the title was mentioned by Chaucer in one of his Canterbury Tales—that of the Miller. "This Endris Night," remarkable for its rhythm and naïveté, was taken from one of the Royal MSS. of the time of Henry VIII., where it was set for solo voice and chorus. "Make we joy," written in the Dorian mode, was in an odd MS. at the British Museum and, slightly altered, in the Selden MS. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. The words were remarkable for the first and last lines of each verse being in Latin and the first line of a hymn.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT BOURNEMOUTH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WE have to record, with much satisfaction, the complete success of the first Bournemouth Musical Festival, which took place on the 19th ult. Like many gatherings of a similar character, this Festival had small beginnings. Ten years ago Dr. Lemare, to whom the beautiful Southern watering-place is indebted for much good musical work, established the Bournemouth Choral and Orchestral Society, which from time to time gave performances of standard compositions. Latterly, although the appearances of the Society have been few and far between, a work of organisation and consolidation has been going on, with the result that this year Dr. Lemare and those associated with him thought the time was ripe for the inauguration, in a modest way, of the movement for which they had been quietly but earnestly preparing. The Festival under notice, as befitted an initial effort, was a comparatively unambitious one. Only two Concerts were given, with the same programme for each, both in one day; but importance was given to the occasion by the presence and co-operation of Sir Joseph Barnby and Dr. J. F. Bridge, who kindly travelled from London to conduct their own works. All the available local talent was incorporated in the Festival forces, which numbered considerably over 200 performers. The chorus consisted largely of members of the Choral and Orchestral Society, strengthened by amateurs from the surrounding neighbourhood. The orchestra, led by Signor Bertocini, included many local players, professional and amateur, and a contingent of the Royal Marine Artillery band.

The Concerts took place in the Assembly Rooms of the Mont Dore, a spacious, but for many reasons not an ideal, building. Sir Joseph Barnby's cantata "Rebekah," Dr. J. F. Bridge's "Cradle of Christ," Sir A. C. Mackenzie's Overture "Britannia," and the Finale from the first act of Mendelssohn's "Loreley" constituted the programme. Miss Gertrude Izard, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Daniel Price were the principal vocalists, all of whom had been specially recommended by Sir Joseph Barnby and Dr. Bridge. Miss Izard, a young lady with an excellent voice, sang well, but with a slight excess of vibrato, which she will do well to guard against. In the "Loreley" music she was at her best, and sustained the solo passages with really brilliant effect. Mr. Lloyd Chandos was also very successful in the part of Isaac in Sir Joseph Barnby's work, and Mr. Daniel Price deserves to be specially complimented on a worthy and highly satisfactory accomplishment of his share of work in each cantata. The choir sang, throughout each Concert, with a degree of proficiency and intelligence which gave proof of much careful training. The band accompanied the choral music with considerable care, and in Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Nautical Overture acquitted themselves well. The attendance at both afternoon and evening Concerts was very large, and congratulations are due to Dr. Lemare and all concerned for successfully carrying through so important an undertaking.

"THE ROSE OF SHARON" AT CAMBERWELL.

LIKE all music worthy of the name, Sir A. C. Mackenzie's dramatic Oratorio "The Rose of Sharon" securely stands the test of time. Ten years have passed since it was originally heard—years that have brought several rivals in the highest forms of musical art—but it is not too much to say that this work has now a firmer hold of the good opinion of the critical than when it first became evident that the Norwich Festival of 1884 had proved the means of introducing to the world an elaborate composition in which loftiness of idea was supported by the ablest workmanship. It says much for the judgment of the patrons of the South London Choral Association that they enthusiastically greeted the Oratorio on the 14th ult., at the South London Institute of Music in the Camberwell New Road. From beginning to end the various elements of the work received the closest attention, while the magnificent choruses illustrating the Procession of the Ark (ending the second part) evoked spontaneous outbursts of approval. The choralists knew what was expected of them in such imposing numbers as "Make a joyful noise," "Arise, O Lord," and "God save the King," and zealously endeavoured to prevent disappointment. Alike for boldness of attack, sustained energy, and regard for detail, their labours were highly meritorious. Miss Maude Ballard, though stated to have been recently suffering from cold and sore throat, gave due expression to the beautiful strains of the Sulamite; Madame Josephine Cravino was quite equal to the contralto airs, Mr. J. Gawthrop sang with unimpeachable taste as the Beloved, and Mr. Robert Price was a spirited representative of Solomon. As leader, Mr. T. E. Gatehouse could not boast the resources of a West-End orchestra; but he contrived to make his followers bring out the principal points, whilst aid was given by Messrs. W. H. Harper and Sidney Venables at the pianoforte and organ respectively. Mr. Leonard C. Venables conducted with unflinching decision and judgment. The performance was unquestionably a great success.

"ANTIGONE" AT ISLINGTON.

A VERY interesting entertainment was given at Myddleton Hall, on the 7th ult., in aid of the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, when the "Antigone" of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, was performed by the Old Girls' Association of Sydenham High School, under the direction of Mrs. C. J. Birch. The performers on this occasion being all ladies, we confess we anticipated that the music would suffer by the transposition of the vocal parts; but we may say that we were agreeably disappointed, for though the sonority of bass voices was much missed, the high upper parts were given with a vigour and enthusiasm which few male choirs could equal.

The citizens of Thebes were represented by fifteen Grecian maidens in classic attire. They were assisted by a select choir of twenty voices, principally members of the Highbury Philharmonic Society, who were judiciously placed off the stage. The choruses were all capitally rendered, the choral recitatives going especially well together, considering there was no conductor. The fine Hymn to Bacchus was repeated.

Of the dramatis personæ we would especially mention Miss R. A. Jones and Miss M. Austin, who, as Antigone and King Creon of Thebes, sustained their long and trying parts most creditably. Miss L. Harvey as Hæmon must also be commended for her good delivery of blank verse. Miss Payne was good as Téiresias and as a messenger, though her make-up as the blind seer was not satisfactory. The other parts were creditably sustained by Misses E. Lewis, Ransom, and Wedekind. Miss R. Nixon was an efficient chorus leader and sang her solo very well. The stage presented the appearance of a Greek theatre, the scenery having been lent by Queen's College. The stage management was ably directed by Misses Courtenay and Payne. To Mrs. C. J. Birch belongs the principal credit of the affair, as she had not only superintended the rehearsals and coached the performers, but presided at the pianoforte, ably supported by her son at the Mustel organ; she fully deserved the enthusiastic call she received at the end.

THE "CARRODUS JUBILEE" AT KEIGHLEY.

KEIGHLEY, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, is not a particularly attractive town. It seems far more given over to the grim realities of manufacturing than to the idealities of art. Yet it can boast of literary and artistic associations of more than ordinary interest. That it is not unmindful of these is shown by the projected Brontë Museum, to be opened next month, and again by the event that took place in Keighley on the 5th ult. Of all the natives of Keighley, none has achieved a wider reputation than Mr. Carrodus. It is difficult to believe that half-a-century has passed since Mr. Carrodus first played a solo in public. Such is, however, the case; and certainly no happier method of celebrating this artistic jubilee could have been devised than for the artist to return to his native place, and give his fellow townsmen a sample of his matured powers. Our municipalities are not, as a rule, guilty of an unbridled enthusiasm in artistic matters. Yorkshire can boast of one musician of world-wide fame in Sterndale Bennett; but Sheffield, his native town, has done little or nothing to perpetuate the memory of one of its most distinguished townsmen. All the more honour, then, to Keighley, whose municipality seized the occasion of Mr. Carrodus's visit to enrol him as its first honorary Burgess. The ceremony of enrolment took place during the interval of the Concert, and was attended with as much pomp as an English municipality—whose gifts are not of the histrionic order—can muster. The event was, indeed, of probably unique character. No fewer than seven individuals bearing the surname of Carrodus—which foreign-sounding surname, it may be mentioned, is probably a corruption of the Scotch "Carruthers"—appeared on the platform as performers. Mr. Carrodus himself, four of his sons—Ernest (contrabasso), John (violoncello), William (flute), and Richard (violin)—with his wife and sister as accompanists, made up this family party. A pleasant feature of the event was the presence in the audience of Mr. Carrodus's mother, whose bright face made one still more inclined to suspect some error in the date assigned by the hero of the evening to the beginning of his artistic career. The little ceremony between the parts was begun by the Town Clerk, who read the resolution of the Town Council conferring the freedom of the borough upon Mr. Carrodus. The presentation was next made by the Mayor, its most substantial part being a handsome silver-gilt casket, designed with appropriate ornaments by a local architect. Mr. Swire Smith, one of the chief promoters of the affair, spoke a few well-chosen words on behalf of the subscribers to the cost of the casket, welcoming Mr. Carrodus as a citizen of Keighley, congratulating him on his success in his profession and on the musical ability shown by his sons, and expressing his satisfaction that in his case a prophet was not without honour in his own country. The singing by all present of "Should auld acquaintance be forgot," and a few words of acknowledgment by Mr. Carrodus, who, as might be expected, showed much less confidence in this part of the programme than he had done in its musical portion, ended the ceremony. Altogether the event was one of exceptional interest and of good omen. A century ago the proposal to do such honour to a "mere fiddler" would have been received with scorn. Now-a-days it seems that not merely politicians, soldiers, and aldermen, but even artists have some claim to a share of civic honours.

REVIEWS.

Two Books of Song. Vol. I. In the Shadow. Vol. II. In the Sunshine. By J. Blumenthal.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

SCHUBERT, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Franz, Brahms, and Grieg have written songs which take so high a rank in that branch of musical literature, and they have said so much, and said it so well, that composers must at times feel inclined to lay down their pens in despair. Some imitate the involved rhythms and harmonies of Schumann and Brahms, others, the Northern lights and shades of Grieg; and such imitation is often cleverly contrived; but if they have nothing to add of their own, the trick is soon discovered, and the effect of the music soon wears off. Of the composers named, Schubert is the one who is least in danger of being copied; simplicity, his strong point, is not a thing wherewith to catch most composers—at any rate, those of the present day.

But Mr. Blumenthal possesses the art of simplicity, and so far reminds one of Schubert. We have not the least intention of comparing one with the other: Schubert wrote in the style of Schubert; Mr. Blumenthal writes in a style of his own. The latter is acted upon by many powerful influences, but they affect only the manner, the colouring; the individuality of the composer is distinctly felt. Simplicity is a natural, not an acquired gift. Try to be simple, and you will probably produce something childish, or hopelessly uninteresting.

In these new songs Mr. Blumenthal has more than maintained his reputation. They show deeper thought, greater refinement, and offer more points of interest in the workmanship than former works from the same pen. Of the fifty-five songs contained in the two collections, some, naturally, rise to a higher level than others; but we may honestly say that there is not a single one unworthy of the composer. The excellent selection of poems deserves note. Let us mention a few of the authors. Among the English there are Lord Tennyson, Swinburne, R. L. Stevenson, and George Macdonald; among the German: Uhland, Sturm, Heine, and Lenau. The songs are divided into two classes—the one tells of shadow, the other of sunshine. Vocalists will, of course, select from the one and the other, so as to obtain suitable contrast; in life there is a mixture of both, and so should it be in art. But now let us say a few words about some of the songs.

In Vol. I., No. 3, "Erlösung" (A Release), words by F. Weber, English version by Clara Grant Duff, there is much modulation, but this is counterbalanced by the reposeful character of the music. The closing symphony, with its persistent pedal, its mystic repeated figure, and its unexpected close in the minor, is effective. No. 4, "Das Meer" (By the Sea), is a poem by Strachwitz, with English words by the lady above-mentioned. The music is broad and strong. The accompaniment, with its sforzando chords and long rolling dominant pedal, is impressive; the quiet close in the major, "Sleep softly, weary child," deserves note. No. 6, "Ihr Grab" (Her Grave), reminds us in its title of Schubert, but the only resemblance between the two songs is that of key: both composers chose the mournful one of B flat minor; Mr. Blumenthal's setting, though simple, shows restrained power. No. 8, "Toujours" (Always), to Sully-Prudhomme's delicate poem "Ici has tous les lilas meurent," English version by Gwendolen Gore, is refined and expressive. No. 9, "Entfernte Glocken" (Distant Bells), has, naturally, a "bell" accompaniment; it is cleverly written, and demands a refined player to bring out its effects. The accompanist is instructed to make the highest note (a B flat) of each chord for the left hand sound as if it were a distant bell; this instruction, by the way, is only given in German. The harmonies are appropriate, though here and there somewhat far-fetched. No. 11, "Softly," words by Eastman, which tells of one who is dying, is quiet, quaint, and full of tender expression. Particularly earnest—one might even say tragic—is the phrase which accompanies the words "Whisper! life is growing dim within her breast." There are some bold consecutive fifths in the accompaniment, but the result justifies the means. No. 14 offers another illustration of such law-breaking; there, consecutive fifths continue through five bars. No. 17, "Zu spät" (Too late), consists first of all of a poem by Betty Paoli, translated by Gwendolen Gore, entitled "Lied ohne Gesang" (which we would translate Song without Singing), and then a tone-poem for piano-forte. In the former each stanza ends "But then—too late," and this is represented in the latter by an Adagio phrase of two bars. The music, of modest structure, is somewhat Italian in character, and reflects well the passion of the words. No. 29, Heine's "Wie kannst du ruhig schlafen?" and No. 30, Macdonald's "Shadowland," are two remarkable songs. But we must turn from shadow to sunshine. The latter is not very strong in No. 1 of the second volume. One scarcely associates sunshine with Heine. It is a setting of his "Ein schöner Stern" (New Hope), English version by Gwendolen Gore; the music is interesting. No. 6, "Erwachen" (Love's Awakening), is a dainty little song, with an effective accompaniment. No. 7, "Le Meilleur Moment" (The Moment Eternal), words by Sully-Prudhomme, English by Gwendolen Gore, is exceedingly pleasing; the music is simple, and has in it something of French lightness. The English translation of the title is rather free. No. 8, "Die Gefangenen," is a bright tripping song, pleasant to sing, pleasant to listen to; it has, indeed, the character of a Volkslied. No. 11, like No. 17 in the first volume, gives the poem first and then a tone-poem to illustrate it. The title is "Die Zufriedenen" (In Paradise). The music is graceful. No. 17, "Anbetung" (Adoration), has both grace and passion. The opening phrase is an impressive one, and, indeed, throughout the song there are passages which would be most effective if declaimed by a pure and powerful contralto voice. No. 18, "Le Navire est à l'eau" (Saved), by A. C. Swinburne (from Chastelard), English version by Gwendolen Gore, is an attractive song, in spite of the sameness of the rhythm, an effect undoubtedly intentional on the part of the composer. No. 19, "At Last," from "Love lies bleeding," has powerful, passionate moments. The end is curious. The key of the song is E major, but the last chord of the concluding symphony is the dominant seventh of the key of the subdominant. Mr. Blumenthal has gone beyond Chopin and Schumann, who only ventured to close on the dominant seventh of the key of the piece. No. 20, "Frieden" (The Magic Touch), German words by Th. Storm, English by Gwendolen Gore, is a quiet and rather peculiar song; it seems like a study in chromatic harmonies. No. 23, "Illumination," from "Love lies bleeding," is a short song, but has considerable character; the harmonies are well chosen, and the rhythm is varied. No. 24, "My River," words by Emily Dickinson, has a smooth part for the voice, and a very light, flowing, and graceful accompaniment. The last number in the volume is a setting of Uhland's "Seliger Tod" (Resurrection), English words by Gwendolen Gore, and it is certainly one of the finest of the series. Here again the composer ends with a chord of the dominant seventh, and, as before, not even that of the opening key. But we must conclude with a word or two about the preface and the illustrations. The composer tells us that "the collective title given to these songs does not quite express the idea" which he had in view in writing them. He has "tried to give expression to some of our deeper feelings or questionings—such songs as one might sing to one's-self, when in the mood, or to some intimate friends."

Each volume has a drawing, "the one representing Shadow, the other Sunshine," and these were graciously designed by H.R.H. The Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne). They are both poetical, delicately drawn pictures (the one represents a glen with the shadow of trees; the other a sheet of water lit up by the rays of the sun) and will add greatly to the attraction of the work.

Hymn Tunes with Varied Harmonies. Arranged by J. W. Elliott. [Phillips and Page.]

THIS is a valuable addition to the resources of church hymnody. The author has taken twenty of the most well-known hymns, and arranged them for the choir and organ in a manner that happily enforces the meaning of the words and imparts increased interest to the music. The voice parts are chiefly written in unison, the verses being sometimes given to the sopranos, at others to the tenors and basses; but in each hymn there are passages in four-part harmony artistically introduced. Advantage is taken of the unison portions to vary the organ accompaniments, which are always appropriate and frequently most effective. Some musicians may take exception to the chromatic harmony in the organ part to some of the tunes of ancient origin, but the author can plead the example of Bach in his harmonisation of German chorales. It should be added that a few bars of introduction precede the hymns, and that each hymn can be had separately.

Collection Nouvelle de Pièces d'Orgue avec Pedale obligée. Henri Deshayes, Organiste du Grand Orgue de l'Annonciation à Paris. [Paris: Richault et Cie.]

THE fourth, fifth, and sixth books of this collection are, as a whole, excellent examples of high-class modern French organ music. They are written in sympathy with the genius of the instrument, and should present no difficulties to the well-trained organist. The composer seems to have a predilection for the key of G—out of seven pieces, four being in G minor and one in G major. The fourth book contains a "Romance sans paroles" and an "Andante moto," both Mendelssohnian in character and melodious. The fifth book comprises a graceful "Cantabile" and an "Andante con fuoco et Toccata," the latter a brilliant piece; and the sixth book consists of a "Meditation," "Canzonetta," and "Elegie," all worthy of the attention of organ players.

Berceuse. Liebeslied (Duetto). Tarantella. For the Pianoforte. By Dora Bright. [Edwin Ashdown.]

THESE three pieces well sustain the reputation of one of the foremost lady composers. Considerable elaboration has been bestowed on the "Berceuse," which, however, the interest of the themes fully justifies. In the "Liebeslied," in which the path of love apparently runs through pleasant places, the two-voice parts are effectively treated, and the "Tarantella" is a brilliant example of its class.

In the Forest. Improptu. Eine Wehklage. For Pianoforte. By Landon Ronald.

A Broken Faith. Song. Words by Madame de L'Aubinière. Music by Landon Ronald.

[Stanley Lucas, Weber, Pitt and Hatzfeld.]

THE pianoforte pieces well merit the attention of pianists who have fair command over the keyboard. The first, Allegro appassionata, is vivacious and effective; and the second permeated by an expressive gracefulness that makes it very attractive. The third justifies its title—which, by the way, it would have been better to have written in English—and may be regarded as a successful endeavour to express depth of sentiment. The song is dedicated to Fräulein Olitzka, for whose voice and dramatic style it is admirably suited. It might be made very effective in the concert-room. Taken altogether, these compositions are the best we have seen from this promising young composer, and denote most satisfactory progress.

FOREIGN NOTES.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—A Herr W. Blee, in Queuleu, near Metz, has presented this town with 100,000 marks, the interest on which is to be devoted to supporting local musicians, performing good operas, and giving good concerts.

BARCELONA.—M. Massenet's "Manon Lescaut" has found its way to Spain. It was performed here recently, for the first time, at the Liceo Theatre, and enthusiastically welcomed.

BARMEN.—"Moses," a new Oratorio by Max Bruch, for soli, chorus, orchestra, and organ, was produced on January 19 by the local Singverein, under the direction of the composer, and well received. It is divided into four parts, respectively entitled "On Sinai," "The Golden Calf," "The Return of the Messengers from Canaan," "The promised land, and lament of the people over Moses' death." The work is especially distinguished by some fine, sonorous choruses. Mynheer Messchaert sang the title rôle.

BERLIN.—The programme of the second Subscription Concert of the Singakademie included three cantatas by Bach, which were stated to have never been performed before. They were "Christen, ätzt diesen Tag," and "Sehet, welch eine Liebe uns der Vater erzeiget," which were composed for the Christmas Festival of the year 1723, shortly after Bach had entered upon his duties as Cantor at the St. Thomas Church, Leipzig. The third, "Wachet, betet, seid bereit," dates from 1716, but was afterwards altered and lengthened.—The Royal Opera has accepted Smetana's tragic opera "Dalibor" for performance during the current season. Meanwhile, the production of Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" has again been postponed—this time till next year; and Mascagni's "Ratcliff" has been given up altogether.

BONN.—At the fourth Subscription Concert of the Städtischer Gesangverein Dr. Dvůrák's latest Symphony, "From the New World," was performed here for the first time and met with much applause. Herr Eugen d'Albert conducted a new choral work from his pen, "Der Mensch und das Leben" ("Man and Life"), for six-part chorus and orchestra, and his second Pianoforte Concerto in E. The latter was played by his wife, Madame d'Albert Carreño, who also joined her husband in Sinding's Variations in E flat minor and Liszt's Concerto Pathétique for two pianofortes.

BRUSSELS.—M. Paul Gilson is a young Belgian whom many of his countrymen consider one of the most talented of living composers, while in Germany also some of his works, especially his "La Mer," have been performed and highly appreciated. On January 20 a new and important work from his pen, a setting of the ever fresh story of Francesca da Rimini, for soli, chorus, and orchestra, was produced at the Concerts Populaires, under the direction of M. Joseph Dupont, and tumultuously applauded. It seems, however, to be more remarkable for contrapuntal workmanship and quite extraordinary orchestral effects than melodic invention.—On January 30 Miss Marie Brema appeared at the Monnaie Theatre as Ortrud in "Lohengrin," and produced a great impression. On the 1st ult. she gave a Vocal Recital at the Cercle Artistique, when her programme consisted exclusively of English, Irish, and Scotch songs. Miss Maud Valérie White, several of whose songs Miss Brema sang, was the pianist.—Signor Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" (called "Pailasse" in French) was given, for the first time, at the Monnaie Theatre on the 14th ult., with Mlle. Simonnet, MM. Seguin and Bonnard in the chief rôles, and warmly received. The composer was present, and received the usual "ovation" at the conclusion.—At the Conservatoire, the students gave a Concert performance of the whole of Wagner's "Rheingold." The orchestra executed its difficult task in an admirable manner, while M. Seguin was excellent as Wotan. The other characters were sustained by pupils of the Institution, and M. Gevaert conducted.

CADENET, BOUCHES-DU-RHÔNE (FRANCE).—The municipality of this place has just affixed a marble tablet to the house in which the composer Félicien David was born. It bears the following inscription in the Provencal dialect:—"Din aquest outau es nascu lou 8 de mai 1810 lou grand musician, Felicien David. Li felibre de Paris, li cigalié e li gens de Cadenet." The ceremony took place in the presence of the aged parents of the late composer of the "Desert."

CASSEL.—The English violinist, Mr. Henry Such, met with great success at the Concert which he recently gave here in conjunction with the youthful pianist, Fräulein Margarethe Eussert. Local papers speak in very enthusiastic terms of Mr. Such's perfect technique and expressive style. Similar highly favourable impressions are recorded in other German towns in which Mr. Such has appeared.

COLOGNE.—"Des Königs Garde" ("The King's Guards"), a new comic opera, by Herren Otto Brandes and Leonhard Emil Bach, both of London, was produced at the Town Theatre on January 27, and well received. The "opinions of the Press" are, however, anything but unanimous.—The Conservatorium String Quartet, consisting of Herren Holländer, Baré, Schwartz, and Grützmacher, performed recently (with the aid of two other artists) a String Sextet, by Bernhard Köhler, a boy of sixteen, and pupil of the local Conservatoire. The work is said to be without a trace of immaturity, and it has created genuine astonishment and wonder on account of its fine, broad, and bold themes, rich polyphony, and rare finish of workmanship. It possesses all the qualities of a ripe and important work.

COPENHAGEN.—Verdi's "Falstaff" was performed here for the first time on January 16, at the Royal Theatre, and well, though not enthusiastically received. Herr Johann Svendsen was the Conductor, and Herr Simonsen the interpreter of the truthful "round man."

DÜSSELDORF.—"Das Gralspiel" is the somewhat puzzling title of a new three-act opera, which was produced here on January 19, at the Town Theatre. The composer is Herr August Reissmann.—At the fifth Subscription Concert of the Städtischer Musikverein a new choral work, entitled "Aus Deutschland's grosser Zeit," and dealing with events in the Franco-German War, was produced with much success. The composer is Herr Ernst H. Seyffardt.

LEIPZIG.—Rarely have such scenes of enthusiasm been enacted in local Concert-rooms as were witnessed during Johannes Brahms's recent stay in this town. The grand old master had not been in Leipzig since 1888, and his present visit is solely due to Mr. Eugen d'Albert, whose persuasive powers must be of quite an unusually fascinating order to induce the retiring composer to make himself the object of such hero-worship as the Leipzigers indulged in. On January 27 Brahms played his two beautiful Clarinet Sonatas with Herr Mühlfeld; his fine G major String Quintet (Op. 111) being performed between these two latest specimens of his genius. He was next present at a Concert given, on January 29, by the Bohemian Quartet, at which the great F minor Pianoforte Quintet was interpreted in the most superb manner, Mr. d'Albert being the pianist. The programme of this Concert also included Schubert's A minor and Mr. d'Albert's E flat String Quartet, the original Scherzo of which latter work had to be repeated. The master's last appearance was at the fifteenth Gewandhaus Subscription Concert, at which Mr. d'Albert played and the composer conducted the two Pianoforte Concertos in D minor and B flat, a herculean task which the pianist surmounted in the most brilliant manner, the enthusiasm of the audience becoming almost delirious at the close of the colossal work in B flat; finally, Brahms conducted his delightful Akademische Fest-Ouverture.

MAYENCE.—A new Symphonic Fantasia, by Iwan Knorr, was produced at a recent Symphony Concert and very favourably received. It consists of four movements; its themes and spirit are essentially Russian, as befits a Russian composer, and it is in many respects an important work.

PALERMO.—"Santuzza" is the title of a new work, by Signor Bimboni, which was lately produced here with complete success. It is a continuation of Mascagni's "Cavalleria," and local papers affirm that Signor Bimboni has written a "worthy sequel" to that opera. No doubt they mean this for a compliment.

RHEIMS.—M. Massenet's "Thaïs" was recently given here with success for the first time. The part of the heroine was sung by Madame Verheyden, who, we read, is not only a good vocalist, but also "belle à ravir," which is a consideration in rôles of this description.

ST. PETERSBURG.—"Dubrovski," a new opera by Ed. Nápravník, was produced on January 15, and, although it occupied four and a half hours, it achieved a complete success.—At a Concert given by the Russian Musical Society, on January 26, only compositions by the late Peter Tchaikowsky were performed, including his second (so called "Russian") Symphony, the orchestral Fantasia "Francesca da Rimini," and (for the first time) a posthumous Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. It had been proposed to give this Concert on the anniversary of the composer's death, but the national mourning for the late Czar frustrated this intention.

SCHWERIN.—Herr Hans Sommer's beautiful poetic opera "Lorelei" was, on the 1st ult., added to the répertoire of the Court Theatre, and warmly welcomed.

STETTIN.—"Der Halling, oder Nordische Blutrache," ("The Halling, or Northern Vendetta"), is the suggestive title of a new opera (actually in three acts!) which was successfully produced at the Town Theatre on January 30. The composer is a young new-comer, Herr Anton Eberhardt.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE third Subscription Concert of the Belfast Philharmonic Society was given in the Ulster Hall, on the 8th ult., and took the form of miscellaneous selections, in which the Society had the assistance of Madame Alice Gomez, the Meister Glee Singers, Mr. Leonard Borwick (solo pianist), and Miss Eldina Bligh (solo violinist). The members of the chorus had but little to do—namely, the Easter Hymn from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and the Evening Hymn from Sullivan's "Golden Legend" (a work which was given by this Society at the beginning of the present season with great success). The last-named was beautifully rendered and warmly received, but the former was lacking in dramatic expression and fell somewhat flat. Mr. Leonard Borwick made his first appearance here, and made the most favourable impression by his truly artistic playing. His selections were Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp and Scherzo in B minor, and Liszt's "Liebestraum" and "Rhapsodie Hongroise." His intellectual rendering and technical execution of these morceaux were rapturously received, the player being twice re-called. The Meister Glee Singers are always certain of a hearty reception here, and at no previous Concert has their singing given more unqualified pleasure. Mr. Gregory Haast was unable to be present through illness, but his place was excellently filled by Mr. Edward Branscombe, who, in addition to assisting in the glees, sang Mr. Arthur Godfrey's song "Where-e'er thou art" very sweetly. Miss Eldina Bligh made her début here as a violinist, playing Handel's Sonata in A major and, in the second part, contributing Bruch's Andante from the G minor Concerto and Brahms-Joachim's "Hungarian Dances." This young lady's playing created a favourable impression. Madame Alice Gomez was not in her best voice, but received considerable applause for her singing of "Cuban Hammock Song" and Liza Lehmann's "An Irish Love Song." The orchestra of the Society played Volkmann's Serenade for stringed orchestra with violoncello obbligato, also Schumann's "Traumerei" and Czibulka's "Song d'amour." For the 13th inst. this Society announces Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

Mr. Frank Liebhich, of the Belfast Conservatoire of Music, gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Ulster Minor Hall, which was well attended. The entire programme was selected from Chopin's works.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE most important musical event which has taken place during the past month was the second of Mr. Stockley's orchestral series, given on January 31. Despite the Arctic severity of the weather a good audience assembled, the programme offering on this occasion several distinct novelties, the pièce de résistance, however, being the B flat Symphony (No. 4) of Beethoven. Great interest centred in the production of Grieg's new Suite "Sigurd Jorsalfar," and a highly successful rendering was made of the varied and captivating movements of this work, very characteristic as it is of the composer—who, by the way, has long been installed a favourite here with our musical public. Quite an agreeable innovation was the presentation of two important works for duo pianoforte (two pianofortes)—viz., Mozart's Concerto in E flat and Saint-Saëns's Grand Duo. Dr. Rowland Winn and Mr. Percy Stranders made a thoroughly artistic exhibition of these vastly interesting pieces. Mr. Plunket Greene sang with effect a set of three ancient ditties—quaint little strains of a lilting sort—Irish, Welsh, and Cornish respectively, but made a more considerable impression in Dr. H. Parry's "Anacreontic Ode," a noble piece of song-music, which seems perfectly suited, moreover, to this artist's voice.

In accordance with the customary rule, that the "crowned" works of our Triennial Festival shall be repeated during the following season, Dr. Parry's "King Saul" was re-presented by the Festival Choral Society at its Concert of the 14th ult. This important work was awaited again with great expectation, and a fine audience assembled in the Town Hall on this occasion; Dr. Parry, as at the Festival performance, conducting his own work. In accordance with a generally-expressed sentiment, the score has been compressed a little; the performance of last month, taking, roughly speaking, two hours and a half. Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, this time, appeared in the title rôle, Mr. Iver McKay (David), Mr. J. Sandbrook (Samuel), Miss Anna Williams (Michal), and Miss Jeanie Rankin (The Witch of Endor). Mr. Davies, though hardly competing with Mr. Henschel in respect to dramatic force of expression, yet did all requisite justice to the exacting music of the King. At the close of the movement, "Saul's Dream," and also after the dialogue with Samuel, Mr. Davies was applauded enthusiastically. Mr. McKay's best effort was in the expressive solo "In the Lord put I my trust"; Mr. Sandbrook made a remarkably good impression. Miss Williams was again heard to advantage, in the "Lamentation" solo especially, a most artistic effort. The chorus—as in most of Dr. Parry's works—has much exacting work committed to it, the characteristic force of the composer being, indeed, peculiarly manifest in such finely dramatic choral writing as, for instance, the numbers "Vain words thou speakest" and "Glory to Saul." Dr. Parry received a deafening ovation at the close of his work.

Mr. Beard has given a very successful Saturday night Concert at the Town Hall. Selections from "Faust" were given on this occasion, by members of the Birmingham Grand Opera Society. Mr. Edgar Bainton, a young and rising pianist, made a good exhibition of his very remarkable talent.

The last business connected with the Festival of last year has been dispatched. This consisted in the handing over of a cheque, to the amount of £4,500, to the representatives of the General Hospital. It was stated, at the same time, that the sum yielded in toto by the Festival performances, from their start in 1768 to 1894, has been £132,065.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE annual "Ladies' Night" of the Bristol Madrigal Society, on January 24, was one of the best in the annals of this time-honoured Association. Not only were the compositions in the excellent programme delightfully sung, but they were enthusiastically received by a very large assemblage, who gathered in the great hall of the Victoria Rooms to hear them. Ancient and modern pieces were agreeably combined. "Welcome, sweet pleasure" (Weelkes), "No din of rolling drum" (Striggio), "So saith my fair and beautiful Lycoris" (Marenzio), "Die not, fond man" (Ward), "Stay, Corydon" (Wilbye), "My bonnie lass" (Morley), "Have I found her?" (Bateson), "The shepherd's pipes" (Marenzio), "To shorten winter's sadness" (Weelkes), and "In these delightful pleasant groves" (Purcell), all fine examples of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, were contrasted with Pearsall's "Who shall wed my lady fair" and "In dulci jubilo"; a couple of Elizabethan pastorals, "Corydon, arise" and "Diaphenia," from the pen of Professor Villiers Stanford; a suave descriptive piece, "The Sun descending," of Blumenthal; "To other day as I was twining," a pleasing humorous trifle of Charles Santley; "O hills! O vales of pleasure," of Mendelssohn; and "Sweet Stream" (Sterndale Bennett). So admirable was the singing of the choir, under the direction of Mr. D. W. Rootham, that little fault could be found, and the excellence of the performances as a whole was testified to by the hearty applause with which every piece was received, and by demands for a repetition of several of the compositions.

The last Popular Chamber Concert of the present season took place on the 9th ult. Mozart's Quartet for strings (No. 1) in G, Schumann's Quartet in E flat (Op. 47) for pianoforte and strings, and J. Raff's Sonata (Op. 128) for pianoforte and violin were in the list. The executants were Miss Mabel Rootham, Messrs. Ward, H. Bernard, Gardner, and Pavey, who discharged their duties with distinction. Miss C. R. Trask and Mr. Frank Rose were the vocalists.

Mr. Ernest Young's Recital, on the 16th ult., at the Victoria Rooms, is deserving of notice, so artistically was every vocal piece and instrumental composition rendered. Mr. Young was assisted by Master Val Burkhardt (an exceptionally clever and intelligent lad), Miss Oppenheim, Mr. Percy Lewis, and Mr. Harry Venn.

The Thornbury Society of Glemmen gave a capital Concert, at Cossham Hall, in the old Gloucestershire town, on the 5th ult. Under the direction of Mr. H. P. Thurston, the members sang with gratifying results "Here's a health to all good lasses," "How merrily we live" (M. Este), "Hark! Apollo strikes the lyre," "The two Roses" (H. Werner), "Mynheer Vandunck" and "The May Fly" (Calcott), "Onward roaming" (Muller), "He who trusts in ladies fair" (Eisenhofer), "Glorious Apollo" (S. Webbe), "Weighing Anchor" (G. A. Macfarren), "Come away" (Schafer), "To all you ladies now on land" (Calcott), and "The long day closes" (Sullivan). A similar performance, equally successful, was given by the same Society on the 14th ult., when many of the choral pieces were repeated.

The Burnham Philharmonic Society gave a very creditable and enjoyable interpretation of Cowen's charming English Idyll "St. John's Eve," under the direction of Mr. J. Clift Wade, on January 31. The characters were well sustained by Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Mrs. Joel Baker, Mr. Humphrey Jones, and Mr. Montague Worlock.

A gratifying performance of Handel's "The Messiah" took place in Wootton-under-Edge Town Hall, on January 30, under the direction of Mr. R. Hayward. The principal vocalists were Miss Hunt, Miss Tapscott, Mr. Davis, Mr. Tavinner, Mr. W. L. Tapscott, and Mr. E. Hunt.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Burns Anniversary (January 25) gave the Scottish Glee Choir an opportunity of again distinguishing itself as an able musical body. Some part-songs were capitally rendered under the direction of Mr. Henry Baxter, and solos, recitations, and band music filled up the evening.

Paderewski's Pianoforte Recitals at the Leinster Hall, on the 4th and 5th ult., were signalled by a renewal of the furor that attended his visit of last year.

Much interest attended the Dublin University Choral Society's first Concert, which took place in the Examination Hall, Trinity College, on the 9th ult. The memory of its late Conductor was appropriately recalled by the opening number, Chopin's Funeral March, which was played scored for full band by Sir Robert Stewart. Haydn's "Creation" (Parts 1 and 2) and the Funeral Anthem from Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" furnished the programme. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton and Mr. Dan Jones, and Mr. Theodore Werner was leader of the orchestra. Mr. Charles Marchant is now the Conductor of the Society, and it is not to be doubted that in his capable hands it will be no less successful than the Oratorio Society (St. Patrick's) which Mr. Marchant directed for many years.

The Royal Dublin Society's Chamber Music Recitals continue to attract large audiences to the Library of Leinster House.

Herr Werner's ninth Violin Recital took place in the Leinster Lecture Hall, Molesworth Street, on the 12th ult., when he well maintained his reputation as an artist of the front rank.

The Dublin Musical Society gave Mendelssohn's "Elijah" for its second Concert of the season, on the 20th ult. Miss Medora Henson, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Dan Jones, and Mr. Andrew Black were the principals; Dr. Joseph Smith conducting.

MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE third Concert of the Harrison-Simpson series was held on the 6th ult., in the Kinraid Hall. Mrs. Henschel gave an ideal interpretation of Liszt's "Loreley" and Purcell's "Nymphs and Shepherds." Miss Clara Butt, who made her first appearance in Dundee, was successful in "O ma Lyre," from Gounod's "Sapho," and Handel's aria "Lascia ch' io pianga," and her beautiful voice made a great impression. Miss Pauline Sant-Angelo played Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise (No. 5) and Rubinstein's Valse Caprice with remarkable skill and vigour. The other performers—Miss Marianne Eissler, Mr. Braxton Smith, and the Dilettante Vocal Quartet—were also well received.

The third of Messrs. Paterson's Scottish Orchestral Concerts was given on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Henschel, and attracted a large audience. The programme included Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz," Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and Liszt's Symphonic Poem "Les Préludes." Max Bruch's G minor Concerto and Svendsen's Romanza were admirably played by Miss Frida Scotta. Miss Lalla Miranda was the vocalist.

Two Organ Recitals were given by Dr. Turpin, on the 1st ult., in St. Luke's Free Church, Broughty Ferry, on the occasion of the opening of the new organ, and were well attended.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Norwich "Gate House" Choir (so named from its place of weekly rendezvous) gave its forty-seventh invitation Concert, at Noverre's Rooms, on January 24. The part-songs consisted of King's "The Sands of Dee," Field's "Fair Daffodils," Stanford's "On a hill there grows a flower," and a new composition by Edward German, "O lovely May," the latter a bright and sparkling melody, with a florid pianoforte obbligato accompaniment. Under Mr. Kingston Rudd's careful tuition the choir has gained a reputation for part-singing which on the present occasion was fully sustained. Several songs were sung by individual members of the choir. Lady Hallé contributed two violin solos, and was joined by Mr. Rudd in what proved to be an exceptionally fine performance of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata for violin and pianoforte.

The members of the North Walsham Amateur Musical Society gave their winter Concert on January 30, when Parry's "Judith" was undertaken, under the conductorship of Dr. Hill. The band and chorus numbered upwards of sixty performers, the principal vocal parts being assigned to Miss Lockett, Miss May Seiber, Mr. Sawford Dye, and Mr. Smith (Peterborough Cathedral), with Master H. H. Brookes and Master F. W. Hill as boys in the well-known trio. Considering the difficulties to be encountered the Society gave a very creditable performance.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MR. EMIL SAUER's first Recital was undoubtedly the most important musical event in Edinburgh last month. A large audience took advantage of the opportunity offered on the 7th ult., by Messrs. Methven and Simpson, to hear the great pianist.

At Messrs. Paterson's eighth Orchestral Concert, on the 4th ult., "Hänsel und Gretel" told their story of childish woes in Humperdinck's clever Prelude, and the audience warmly testified to the pleasure the charming composition gave. The "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture left something to be desired from such a splendid band, but the Scherzo was perfection. The Nocturno and the Wedding March were also included in the selection. Miss Frida Scotta made her first appearance in Edinburgh as the solo violinist, and in the slow movement of Bruch's well-worn Concerto (G minor) and Svendsen's Romanza she quite captivated her hearers by her sympathetic, simple playing.

The ninth of Messrs. Paterson's Concerts gave us the chance of hearing Mr. Henschel's new "Stabat Mater." The work had been carefully studied by the Choral Union, and Mr. Collinson succeeded in obtaining from his chorus effects which gave great pleasure to all friends of the Choral Union. The beautiful "Virgo, virginum," was really exquisitely sung, and nervous energy and power characterised the rendering of the exciting "Inflammatum." The soloists were Mrs. Henschel, Miss Jansen, Mr. Leyland, and Mr. Henschel. The composer was warmly welcomed and enthusiastically recalled. The orchestral part of the programme included the "Idomeneo" Overture and the eighth Symphony, which was superbly played by the Scottish Orchestra, under Mr. Henschel.

At the last of the Saturday Popular Concerts, on the 16th ult., the programme consisted of the "Oberon" Overture; Haydn's B flat Symphony (in the last movement of which Mr. Henschel's orchestra excelled itself); a Serenade by Saint-Saëns for cor Anglais, viola, and orchestra (encored); the popular selection from Saint-Saëns's "Henry VIII." Ballet; and two songs by Miss Agnes Jansen. The very large audiences at all these excellent Concerts have been gratifying alike to performers, impresarios, and those who have the cause of music in Edinburgh at heart.

On the 6th ult. Miss Helen Macgregor, one of the most talented among our local violinists, gave a Recital, in which she was assisted by Mr. Peter Macgregor and Mrs. Millar Craig. Miss Macgregor's solos were the first movement of Mendelssohn's Concerto, an Adagio by Spohr, and a Polonaise by Wieniawski, in all of which she gave proof of earnest study and steady improvement. Mr. Peter Macgregor joined her in Gade's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata (Op. 21), and played two solos; and Mrs. Millar Craig showed her usual artistic taste in her selection of delightful songs by Brahms, Schumann, and Schubert.

Excellent Concerts of chamber music were provided at the Philosophical and Literary Institutions in Edinburgh last month. The artists were Mr. Townsend (pianoforte), Madame Hamilton and Mr. Colin McKenzie (violin), and Mr. Grant McNeill (violoncello).

In the Music Hall, on the 15th ult., Mdlle. Chaminade made her first appearance in Edinburgh, with a programme drawn entirely from her own compositions.

Mdlle. Landi was altogether delightful in the songs Mdlle. Chaminade writes so charmingly, and Mr. Andrew Black was just as successful in gaining the applause of the audience. M. Rivarde gave a splendid performance of Bach's "Chaconne"; and Mrs. Andrew Black acted as accompanist and also joined the Concert-giver in several duets. Mdlle. Chaminade herself played the pianoforte solos.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON the 5th ult. the Scottish Orchestra performed Brahms's "Tragic" Overture, and Miss Eibenschütz again appeared as a substitute—she was warmly welcomed, and that is, perhaps, the best compliment that we can pay her—in the absence of Mr. Stavenhagen. On the 9th ult. the Scottish Orchestra migrated to the City Hall, and with much acceptance. The headquarters of the band are, of course, in Glasgow, and hence the satisfaction in local circles with the Royal command to appear at Windsor on the first of this month.

The "Flying Dutchman" was given successfully on the evening of the 12th ult., when the Choral Union again introduced the work to a Glasgow audience. As before, the second and third acts were performed, and it need not be said how Madame Ella Russell, Mr. Alec Marsh, and Mr. Bispham acquitted themselves. The chorus was in excellent form, the band was occasionally aggressive, and Mr. Bradley conducted with his wonted skill. At the thirteenth Classical Concert (19th ult.) Dr. Joachim appeared in Brahms's Concerto for violin and orchestra in D (Op. 77) and in his own Notturmo (Op. 12). The Symphony was Schubert's No. 8 in B minor—the "unfinished"—and Mr. Henschel was, of course, the conductor. Dvorák's Symphony, No. 5, "From the New World," had a place in the programme of the Popular Concert of the 23rd ult., and Messrs. Henschel and Bispham were announced to sing "O weep for those," a duet for two basses from the pen of the former. Rossini's "Moses in Egypt" was revived on the evening of the 26th ult.—to the satisfaction of a good many amateurs, who very frankly pin their faith to the creed of the jaunty Italian master. An excellent array of soloists had been secured, and these included Miss Thudichum, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and Mr. Bispham. The Glasgow Choral Union sang the choruses, and Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It was as an orchestral conductor that Sir Charles Hallé made his greatest mark in Liverpool nearly a quarter of a century ago, and it is in the same capacity that the latest memories of him remain. At the Philharmonic Concert given on the 5th ult. the regular instrumental forces were augmented to the number of a hundred, and the programme was mainly devoted to the works of Wagner, Berlioz, and Goldmark, writers whose intentions can only be realised by the employment of a host of performers. The Concert proved by far the most interesting of the present series, of which it formed the ninth. The tenth took place on the 19th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony was performed.

The scheme of the third Concert of the Orchestral Society was truly of as miscellaneous an order as could well be conceived, the leading feature being Grieg's Piano-forte Concerto in A minor, of which the solo part was admirably played by Mr. Steudner Welsing. Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture, Humperdinck's "Descent of the Angels," Weber's "Invitation to the Valse" (Berlioz's arrangement), and Jensen's "Wedding Music" were included in the programme, Mr. Rodewald conducting with his invariable ability and discretion. Other Concerts—but they come under the speculative category—have been those of the Harrison series, at the Philharmonic Hall, and Mr. Shaw's now well-established subscription series at Hope Hall. Emil Sauer has visited us, and joined the long procession of pianists who have made their mark in this city since Monsieur Hallé, as he was then announced, first led the van at the Philharmonic Hall in 1849. Mr. Weingärtner (a veteran professor), Mr. Leopold (a new-comer to the same ranks), and others have given Chamber Concerts and Recitals, and instrumental music has been, as usual, far more to the fore than have choral performances. A new departure in the latter respect has, however, been made by the Sunday Society, under the auspices of which organisation a very good chorus has been recruited by Mr. Argent. The initial venture took place on the 17th ult., when Rossini's "Stabat Mater" formed the basis of what will probably turn out a successful musical experiment.

The memorial to Mr. W. T. Best is still in the air, and the local Mercury states that some of the committee are anxious to augment the sum already subscribed, although the subscription list was supposed to be closed considerably before Christmas. The total sum raised had then amounted to about £200, a considerable portion of which had necessarily been swallowed up by advertising, printing, postage, and so forth.

Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" was produced in a very worthy manner by the Royal Carl Rosa Company, at the Court Theatre, on the 14th ult., and Weber's "Der Freischütz" has been revived during the past month. For the rest, the operas previously enumerated in this column have been repeated.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

DURING February we have been unusually favoured by the visits of pianoforte players of high attainment. Quickly after the very successful Recital of M. Paderewski came that of Herr Emil Sauer, whereby the fame of an executant previously known to us only by brief report was at once so well established that his promised return, on the 4th inst., is very eagerly expected. Herr Sauer's programme ranged from D'Albert's version of Bach's great Organ Fugue in D to Liszt's description of the "Carnivale de Peste"—perhaps not a very wide limit. But while these, his first and last efforts, served to show immense dexterity of finger and a sufficient looseness of wrist, the intermediate numbers were of far greater importance. The reading of the "Sonata Appassionata" was characterised by a wholesome restraint, doubly welcome after the somewhat violent perversion of Bach by the transcriber who so disdains his native country, and the Chopin selections were very delicately interpreted; but the excitement culminated with the wonderfully clear manipulation of Schumann's Toccata (Op. 7) and the most expressive rendering of the "Nachtstück" of the same author.

During the same week Sir Charles Hallé afforded us an opportunity of hearing M. Paderewski's rendering of the Schumann Piano-forte Concerto, certainly the most sympathetic reading of recent years; so that the minds of those who delight to institute a direct comparison between players of very like attainment were set at rest, and were enabled to grade their favourites pretty comfortably. The Polish Fantasia of M. Paderewski (produced at the last Norwich Festival) may be classed with the lucubrations which Liszt called his "Rhapsodies," of which we now get quite enough. The Recital of Madame de Pachmann was given at the Concert Hall, under less favourable circumstances, but was, in every respect, except attendance, pleasant and satisfactory, if less exciting. Should Madame de Pachmann contemplate a second venture here, she would do well to note how admirably the way was prepared for Herr Sauer's coming, and the bold management whereby was secured the immediate success of the Subscription Concerts of Messrs. Harrison (so well engineered by Messrs. Hime and Addison of this city), at the third of which Miss Sant-Angelo improved her position as a young pianist of promise, and Mrs. Henschel and others sang pleasantly.

The past month has been further marked by several Lectures of some interest. It could hardly be said that those of Dr. Carl Ambruster (adequately illustrated by Miss Pauline Cramer) on Wagner, and on Schubert as "the greatest song-writer of all times," increased the information even of the lady amateurs who attend afternoon recitals. The time has come when such topics as Wagner's treatment of Leitmotive, or Schubert's prolific genius, need to be more than extolled in familiar phrase. Most people are now prepared for some solid information on points hitherto vaguely eulogised. At the Athenæum, on the 11th ult., Dr. Watson gave some account of the state of music in England in Shakespeare's time, and concerning the great dramatist's many references to the art, the illustrations being added by the choir of the Institution. The Organ Recitals of Mr. Pyne, at the Town Hall, have, with excellent results, been resumed, and other of our regular Saturday evening relaxations continue to attract their regular patrons.

But really the most important musical event of the recent past was the introduction, at our Thursday evening Concerts, of the Symphony in A minor of Edward German, whose incidental music for several plays has, on various occasions, so greatly charmed us. Compared with Continental aspirants, a young English composer has not only immense difficulty in obtaining his first opportunity, but an almost certainty that, unless he should succeed in at once creating a very definite and positive impression, no second chance will ever be afforded him. Without any time for experiment and for the gaining of experience, he is expected to demonstrate an absolute mastery over all the details and contrasts of orchestration, and to preserve throughout a long work the unbroken interest of his hearers, never for a moment allowing the attention to flag. That Mr. German should, in his first great essay, have commanded the respect of an audience accustomed to the largest works of the great masters; that he should have convinced everybody that he has something to say and that he knows how to say it clearly; that he has a faculty of consistent development, and is perfectly familiar with the scope and capacity of every orchestral instrument, could not fail to excite very strong anticipation of still higher achievement. It may be that, occasionally (as with many of our greatest writers), a brighter contrast of themes would better sustain the attention of easily tired ears; but no recent composition of like dimensions has excited greater hope, and it was most gratifying to find that so young a writer could so easily maintain a consistent symphonic dignity of text and treatment. The rendering of "The Golden Legend" and the "Walpurgisnacht," on the 14th ult., was, apart from the choral singing, decidedly dull, and, whether from the influence of the inclement weather or some other cause, the result was very wearisome. Of the Concert of the 21st ult. I shall not be able to report in time for this issue.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE past month has been considerably more active in musical matters than its predecessor, although by no means a busy one for so important and populous a district as this is. The third Concert of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society took place on January 29, and proved to be as successful as the Concerts of this excellent Society invariably are. The instrumentalists were Mr. Willy Hess (first violin), Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs (second violin), Mr. Speelman (viola), Señor Pezze (violoncello), and Mr. J. M. Preston (pianoforte). The principal works performed were Mozart's String Quartet in C major (No. 6), the Andante and Variations from Schubert's familiar post-humous Quartet in D minor, Beethoven's Quartet for strings in C major (Op. 18, No. 4), and Brahms's Sonata in A (Op. 100) for pianoforte and violin. The whole of these works were exceedingly well played, but particular mention must be made of the performance of the Sonata by Mr. Willy Hess and Mr. J. M. Preston, the latter a talented local pianist. The vocalist was Mdle. Marie Fillunger, who sang songs by Schumann, Schubert, Mendelssohn, and Brahms in a most artistic manner. For its final Concert of the season the Chamber Music Society has engaged, as usual, Miss Fanny Davies, Herr Joachim, and Signor Piatti. It is to be hoped that the distinguished violoncellist will be sufficiently recovered from his illness to put in an appearance.

On the 12th ult. Herr Emil Sauer, the eminent pianist, made his first appearance in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and gave a Recital in the new Assembly Rooms before a large and very enthusiastic audience.

During the past month we have been reminded of the good old times, when Dr. William Rea did so much to promote amongst the people of this locality a love for music of the highest class. In the days alluded to, performances of important works for voices and orchestra were frequent, and occasionally the works produced were conducted by their respective composers. Latterly, such performances have been few and far between, and it is to be hoped that the present revival is an indication of an improvement which may become permanent. On the 12th ult. the Newcastle Harmonic Society gave a performance of Dr. Joseph Parry's dramatic Oratorio "Saul of Tarsus," in the Town Hall, Newcastle, and was fortunate in being able to induce Dr. Parry to journey from Wales to conduct his work. The soloists were Madame Williams-Penn (a most capable artist, who scored an unequalled success), Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Morgan Wilkinson. Choir and orchestra were efficient, and the work, which should be more extensively known than it is, made a profound impression upon the large audience assembled to hear it. During the progress of the performance, Dr. Parry was most enthusiastically applauded, and at its conclusion he received quite an ovation. Dr. Charles Chambers, the Conductor of the Harmonic Society, presided at the organ with much skill, and deserves much credit for his enterprise in bringing about the performance.

On the 26th ult., too late for notice in this issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, the Gateshead Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. James M. Preston, gave a performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and a Wagner selection. The soloists engaged were Miss Emily Davies, Madame Marie Bellas, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Sandbrook. Reference will be made to this Concert next month.

The Lectures at the Literary and Philosophical Society, Newcastle, have been more interesting than usual to musical amateurs this season. On the 6th and 20th ult. Dr. G. F. Huntley read papers upon "English Composers of Glee and Part-Songs," with illustrations by the Cathedral Choir; and on the 13th ult. Professor J. F. Bridge lectured upon "Shakespeare and Music," also with illustrations. The three Lectures were largely attended and greatly appreciated.

During the past month Mr. Valentine Smith's Opera Company has been giving a series of popular performances of well-known operas in the Art Gallery Theatre.

On the 18th ult. Dr. Rea's Amateur Vocal Society gave an excellent performance of Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," in the Town Hall, Newcastle. The soloists were Madame Medora Henson, Mrs. Vinycomb, Madame Marie Bellas, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Lyall—all of whom did remarkably well. The choruses were admirably sung, and the orchestra—with the exception of certain passages for the wind, and notably the horns—was eminently satisfactory. Dr. Rea conducted, and it was quite a pleasure to see him occupy once more a position which, in days gone by, he so frequently filled with credit to himself and intellectual profit to the community at large. Dr. Rea's services in the past to the cause of music in the North of England cannot well be over-estimated, and they should not be overlooked.

Organ Recitals have been given in Newcastle, during the past month, by Professor J. F. Bridge, in Jesmond Parish Church; Mr. J. M. Preston, in St. George's Church; and Dr. G. F. Huntley, in the Cathedral, the last-named being assisted by Herr Oppenheim, a violinist resident in Newcastle.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Recital by M. Paderewski at the Victoria Hall, on January 29, from its association with the Audley Relief Fund, calls for special notice. When the great virtuoso heard of the terrible calamity he generously offered the net proceeds of his engagement. The crowded and enthusiastic audience listened with rapt attention for nearly two hours, and at the close accorded the eminent pianist a perfect ovation. It is pleasing to record that £164 has been forwarded, and that Messrs. Albut and Daniel (the local agents) and Herr Gorlitz (private secretary) generously withheld their claims.

Mr. E. Brain, J.P., received an illuminated address from his Fenton Choir on his appointment to the local bench as Chairman of the District Council.

The Hanley Sunday School Union held its second Annual Vocal Festival on the 18th ult., in the Victoria Hall. A large choir, under the direction of Mr. J. Garner, rendered a selection of part-songs and anthems.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

M. PADEREWSKI'S Recital, on January 28, attracted a crowded audience to the Albert Hall, and his programme was most enthusiastically listened to, the scene at the close of the Recital being one of unusual excitement.

The first appearance in Nottingham of Mdle. Eibenschütz was at the Drawing-room Concert on January 29. Nottingham amateurs owe a great debt of gratitude to the committee of these Concerts for the long list of artists of renown who have been engaged. The last Concert maintained the high standard in interest and execution which has been reached. Mdle. Eibenschütz played Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata and a group of pieces by Scarlatti, Schumann, Brahms, and Liszt with great acceptance; and Mr. Gompertz's String Quartet played Smetana's famous Quartet in E minor ("Aus meinem Lieben") and portions of quartets by Haydn and Schubert with success.

On the 7th ult. the Sacred Harmonic Society gave a miscellaneous Concert, which had been anticipated with interest, because of the strong programme and the promised appearance of Miss Ella Russell, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Andrew Black. The choral pieces were Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and "Spring" (from Haydn's "Seasons"), which were in danger of being forgotten in Nottingham. Under Mr. Adcock's direction they were capitally presented, and we trust the interest awakened in the Society and amongst amateurs in these revivals may justify more of such miscellaneous Concerts. Miss Ella Russell was very successful in both the cantatas, and her dramatic talent was well displayed in "Softly sighs." Mr. Andrew Black, as usual, carried his audience away with enthusiasm, especially in the scene from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman." Mr. Leyland replaced Mr. Hirwen Jones, who was unavoidably absent. The band deserve honour for the admirable work they did in an exacting programme, including Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A PERFORMANCE of "The Messiah" was given on the 11th ult., in the Albert Hall, in aid of the Sheffield Infirmary, and, despite the inclement weather, a fairly large audience assembled. The Concert was promoted by Messrs. Wilson, Peck and Co. Mr. Samuel Hadfield conducted a powerful and well-balanced chorus, and the orchestra, led by Mr. J. Peck, played the score in admirable style. Mr. J. W. Phillips was organist. The principals were Miss Florence Lenten, Mrs. Burrill, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Robert Grice.

The third of the Harrison Concerts took place on the 14th ult. There was a large audience.

Dr. Henry Coward, who, for several years, has successfully directed the performances of the Sheffield Musical Union, was, on the 15th ult., presented by the members with the robes of a Doctor of Music, to mark the appreciation with which his services are regarded. The gathering was a representative one, and Dr. Coward was the recipient of numerous congratulations.

MUSIC IN WILTS AND HANTS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A SERIES of Chamber Concerts has been given in Salisbury during the past month, under the direction of the Rev. H. W. Carpenter, in aid of St. Mark's Church Building Fund. The quartets and trios of Beethoven, Mozart, Schumann, and Gade have been drawn upon in the programmes, the executants in the series being Mrs. Regan, Mr. F. L. Bartlett, Mr. Regan, Mr. Fooks, Miss Hussey, and Miss Fussell. The Countess of Radnor, Mrs. Windley, Miss Bath, the Rev. H. W. Carpenter, and the Rev. H. J. Trueman have appeared as vocalists.

Successful Concerts were given in the Town Hall, Devizes, in the afternoon and evening of the 13th ult., by a string orchestra, under the conductorship of the Rev. W. H. Weekes. Well-arranged programmes were admirably carried out, Miss Elvira Gambogi being the vocalist.

The Westbury Philharmonic Society gave its annual Concert on Tuesday, the 19th ult., when Miss Ellicott's cantata "Elysium" was included in the programme. The principal vocalists were Miss Elsie Mackenzie and Mr. Alfred Wetton. Mr. Alfred Foley conducted.

The Marlborough Choral Society, with Mr. W. S. Bambridge as Conductor, resumed work on the 5th ult. Gaul's "Una" and Mozart's Twelfth Mass have been chosen for study.

The Trowbridge Musical Union is preparing Mendelssohn's "Elijah" for the next Concert.

Too late for notice last month was the performance of Sir John Stainer's cantata "The Daughter of Jairus," which took place in the Abbey Congregational Church, Romsey, under the direction of Mr. W. Summers. The choral portions of the work were sung in an excellent manner, as also were the solos by Miss Scullard, Miss E. Read, Mr. Arthur Legg, and Mr. J. B. Tarrant. The cantata was given without a conductor, Mr. Summers presiding at the organ. Cowen's cantata "The May Queen" has been chosen for performance at the next Concert of the Romsey Musical Society, and a special effort is being made to enlist new members.

So far as Bournemouth is concerned, the most important event to record is the Festival which took place on the 19th ult., an account of which appears elsewhere.

Gaul's cantata "Ruth" was performed in St. Michael's Church, Bournemouth, by the St. Michael's Choral Society, on January 30. An efficient string orchestra, under the leadership of Signor Bertocini, supplemented the organ, which was played by Mr. W. Lee, and the whole performance reflected much credit on the Conductor, Mr. A. W. Russe. The soloists were Miss Violet Wyntre, Miss E. Oakley, and Mr. Howard May. The cantata was preceded by Schumann's "Traumerei" from the "Kinderszenen," arranged for strings; and the "War March of the Priests," from Mendelssohn's "Athalie," was played by the band and organ as a concluding voluntary. The Concerts at the Winter Gardens have, during February, been of more than usual importance. Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Paderewski, and other artists of note have appeared to overflowing houses; and Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun., has, every Thursday afternoon, given an excellent programme of classical music, in which his fine band has fully sustained its reputation.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE visit of Mr. Henschel's Scottish Orchestra has been the chief musical event in Leeds since the New Year began. It took place at the third of the Subscription Concerts, on January 30. So highly trained and well disciplined a band has not been heard in the West Riding for many a year. Dr. C. H. H. Parry came to conduct his "English" Symphony, and, though under a strange conductor, the orchestra responded to his indications with an intelligence and sympathy that were as delightful to him as they were beneficial to the performance. Dr. Parry had taken the trouble to refurbish his Symphony for the occasion. Much of the first movement was re-written, trombones were added to the score, and two new variations were substituted for existing ones in the Finale. These variations, by the way, proved one of the most delightful portions of the Symphony. Even though all are in the same key, there is no feeling of monotony, the treatment being varied, interesting, and scholarly. Dr. Parry also conducted the scena from his Birmingham Oratorio, in which King Saul describes his vision, Mr. Henschel resuming the part he created with excellent effect. For the rest, a superb performance of the "Siegfried Idyll" and Mr. Sons's refined and artistic playing of Dvorák's Violin Concerto were among the most notable incidents of a thoroughly enjoyable Concert. On January 23 M. Paderewski gave a Recital at Leeds, and repeated his programme at Bradford on the 8th ult. The music he chose suited him admirably, and his poetic and, at the same time, brilliant performances brought forth an amount of enthusiasm not often seen at a Pianoforte Recital. Mr. Christensen gave one of his Chamber Concerts at Leeds, on the 4th ult. The programme included Raff's Pianoforte Trio in A minor (Op. 155), in which the Concert-giver was assisted by Messrs. Edward Elliott (violin) and Arthur Bolton (violinello). Mr. Elliott's clever playing of Max Bruch's G minor Concerto was a noteworthy feature of the Concert. Miss Mary Poole sang several songs simply and pleasantly enough. On the 19th ult. one of the Messrs. Haddocks' "Musical Evenings" took place. Mr. Edward Lloyd's ballad singing was the chief thing of the Concert, in which Miss Lillie Wormald, Miss Alice McFarlane, and Mr. Stanley Cookson also took part as vocalists. Miss Teodoras was the pianist and Miss Durbridge gave a couple of harp solos.

Mr. Edgar Haddock gave a Violin Recital at the Leeds College of Music, on the 12th ult., his programme including Bach's Chaconne and Beethoven's Concerto. Mr. Wallis Vincent was the accompanist.

Bradford, like Leeds, has to boast of an exceptionally interesting Subscription Concert during the past month. Advantage was taken of Mr. Mühlfeld's presence in England to secure his assistance as clarinetist in Brahms's Clarinet Quintet, with which he must in this country ever remain closely associated. The superbly artistic qualities of his playing have been too often insisted upon to need more than bare acknowledgment now. Lady Hallé, Messrs. L. Ries, Gibson, and Becker completed a cast upon which, for finish and refinement, it would be difficult to improve. They were also heard together in Mozart's Quintet in A for the same combination of instruments. Sir Charles Hallé was the pianist and Mrs. Henschel the vocalist. At its Concert, on January 26, the Bradford Permanent Orchestra made a special feature of pieces by Sir Arthur Sullivan, which doubtless contributed greatly to the popularity of the event. Mendelssohn's D minor Pianoforte Concerto was most brilliantly played by Mr. Frederick Dawson, whose fine staccato touch and dashing octaves were remarkable. In introducing a Waltz by Waldteufel the committee may have compromised their dignity, but it will be generally thought they acted wisely. Musicians as scrupulous as Wagner, Brahms, and Bülow have not hesitated to express their admiration of a Strauss waltz. Miss Brigg was the vocalist, and her absence of affectation and excellent enunciation made her singing very enjoyable, in spite of some apparent nervousness. On the 16th ult. another Concert was given by the same Society. Dr. Cresser, the Organist of the Chapel Royal, came down to conduct, for the first time in public, his Symphony founded on old English popular tunes. The most successful movements were the melodious and expressive Largo, which is not indebted to folk-lore for its material, and the Scherzo, in which excellent use is made of two old songs, "A jug of this" and "Phyllida flouts me." Mr. John Dunn played Spohr's Ninth Violin Concerto in really masterly fashion and showed his exceptional command of the instrument in some brilliant solos. Mr. Lucas Williams was the vocalist. The band, of which Mr. G. F. Sewell is the Conductor, shows a steady advance this season. Perhaps the strongest proof of this was to be found in the extremely delicate and careful manner in which the accompaniments to the Concerto were played.

At Huddersfield, two Subscription Concerts have been given since our last notice of music in Yorkshire. On January 29 the Scottish Orchestra appeared. The programme was similar to that given at Leeds the following night, the chief difference being the Symphony. This was Haydn's delightful work in B flat (No. 9 of the Salomon set), of which an almost ideally perfect reading was given. More finished, sympathetic playing it would be difficult to imagine. Sir A. C. Mackenzie's "Britannia" Overture and Liszt's "Les Préludes" were also included in the programme. The Subscription Concert, on the 12th ult., was of a more miscellaneous kind. Madame Bertha Moore and Miss Dorothy Jackson—a descendant, we believe, of the composer of "Jackson in F"—were the vocalists. The pianist was Mr. Frederick Dawson, whose facile execution was shown in music by Beethoven and Chopin; and Miss Frida Scotta made a most favourable impression by her thoroughly artistic violin playing. A trombone quartet added variety to the programme. On the 19th ult. the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave a most enjoyable Concert, the programme consisting mostly of the type of vocal music suggested by their name. Madrigals by Palestrina and Benet, glees by Mornington and Bishop, and part-songs by more modern composers, were sung with excellent precision and delicacy under Mr. J. E. Ibeson's able conductorship. Solos were contributed by various members of the Society.

On January 29 a Subscription Chamber Concert was given at Scarborough, in which Mr. W. H. Cass (violin), Miss Alderson-Smith (violinello), and Mr. Owen Williams (pianoforte), with Miss Layton as vocalist, took part. The chief things in the programme were Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in F (Op. 80) and Grieg's Sonata in A minor (Op. 36) for violinello and pianoforte. On January 31 the second of the Wakefield Subscription Concerts took place. Mozart's String Trio in E flat (Op. 18) and Rheinberger's very effective Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 38) were admirably played by Messrs. Bent, Kreuz, P. Ludwig, and Miss Maggie Moore; and the Rev. L. Knights-Smith sang songs by Cornelius and Schumann. Sir Charles Hallé took his band to York on the 11th ult. and played Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. The second part of the programme was, so far as concerned the orchestral pieces, given up to Wagner. Mr. Chilver Wilson was the vocalist.

Preparations for the Leeds Festival are in full swing. Sectional chorus rehearsals are now being held, and early in March it is proposed to hold the first full choral rehearsal, under the conductorship of Sir Arthur Sullivan, who writes that, as a result of his stay at Monte Carlo, he already feels "a different man altogether."

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The musical season is in full activity, and everywhere interesting Concerts are in progress, chief among which are those given by our three great orchestral societies every Sunday. These are (1), the Concert Society of the Conservatoire, devoted to classical music and modern works of undisputed value; (2), the orchestra of M. Lamoureux, whose repertory consists chiefly of the works of Wagner and others of generally modern tendency; (3), the orchestra of M. Colonne.

To these three great enterprises we must add the Harcourt Concerts, at which a prodigious quantity of music is consumed, but where the performances have not the finish which makes the reputation of the other Concerts. The chamber music societies are so numerous that only the principal ones can be mentioned: the quartet parties of M. Marsick, of M. Gélos (last quartet of Beethoven), of M. Mendels, of M. Nadaud (French music), of M. Fernandez (works of Schumann), of M. Parent, of M. Lefort, of M. Rémy, of M. Weingartner, &c.; the Recitals of the pianists Breiter, Paul Brond, César Gélos, Philipp, &c. Each of these concert parties gives from three to six Concerts during the season. There are yet to mention the societies with definite objects, such as the Société Nationale (modern school), the Société des Compositeurs, &c., and the amateur societies.

The most important musical event of the past month has been the production at the Opéra, on the 15th ult., of Mlle. Augusta Holmès's lyric drama in four acts, "La Montagne Noire." Criticism has dealt somewhat severely with this work, probably on account of disappointed expectations. Mlle. Holmès was known to have Wagnerian predilections, and some successful works had given her the reputation of possessing considerable individuality. This led to expectations being greater than the realisation. One must, however, recognise that there is life and movement in the opening of the first act, and that Mlle. Holmès has dealt successfully with certain parts that required charm. Apart from a few thematic reminiscences, the work has no affinity with the Wagnerian method. The plot, which is not novel or worth describing in detail, is a tragic story of the struggle between love and duty. In order to preserve interest during four acts with this subject—little new from the passion point of view—a musical intensity and powerful orchestration would have been necessary; but this Mdlle. Holmès has not been able to give us. To finish this brief notice, we will say that as far as the critics are concerned the work was certainly not a success; but we must wait until some more representations have been given in order to know what attitude the public will take.

M. Charles Lefebvre, the composer of the opera "Djelmah," produced last year at the Grand Opéra, has been appointed professor of the chamber music class at the Conservatoire in the place of the late Benjamin Godard.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE season of opera at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, is now approaching its close. Taking into consideration the emaciated condition of many pocket-books, owing to the financial pressure which is being generally felt here, it must be set down as having been a remarkably successful one for the managers. Whether the novelties brought forward have either realised the hopes of the managers or met the expectations of the public may well be doubted. "Falstaff" came late in the season, or it would probably have had a run, as it was well cast, mounted, and managed (which last bit of praise cannot always be truthfully bestowed on opera at the Metropolitan); but the season was well-nigh over before it appeared. "Manon Lescaut" served more as a background for Miss Sybil Sanderson than anything else, and though the lady was most dexterously advertised she has not yet succeeded in taking either boxes or pit by storm. The last of the novelties was Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Dallah," which was only a novelty in its operatic form, for it had already been given by Mr. Damosch's Society as an Oratorio. It made its début at the Metropolitan under peculiarly distressing conditions, the evening set for the first performance coming right in the middle of the late "blizzard." With the mercury at zero, and a fifty-mile-an-hour wind driving sharp and cutting snow in clouds about the streets, an audience would have been out of the question, even had the opera been a popular one and the singers all favourites. As it was, but a meagre handful of people attended the performance, and the critics (in whom all the milk of human kindness seems to have been frozen up) carped at everything and everybody, from the composer to the scene-shifters, so that the work seems likely to continue its career under the auspices of the Oratorio Society for some time to come.

Following the present season will come a short period of Wagnerian opera, under Mr. Damosch's bâton, in which Rose Sucher and Alvary will be stars of greater magnitude. Wagnerian music-drama having heretofore proved unprofitable, it will be interesting to watch the result of this coming venture. Mr. Damosch is evidently proceeding with caution, and if (as is supposed in some quarters) he is being backed by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, a moderate loss will not entail disaster on anyone.

So far, the Oratorio Society has not left the well-beaten paths, except to bring out Mr. Damosch's "Scarlet Letter," which has already been reported. The Boston Orchestra has duly continued its visits, and at the last of them produced a Concerto for violin, composed by Mr. Loeffler, a member of the band, which met with a most warm reception. The Kneisel Quartet is also coming over from Boston at stated intervals; but the best of the New York Quartets—the Beethovens—is not doing as much as usual. Its first violin (Mr. Gustav Dannreuther) has taken to leading orchestras frequently.

At Cincinnati the permanent orchestra has just been assembled, and Mr. Frank van der Stucken has been hard at work organising it. Reports of its first public work are very encouraging. The existence of this band is due in great measure to the energy and perseverance of the ladies of Cincinnati, who have worked heart and hand to secure the guarantee fund requisite for maintaining such a company of first-rate musicians. The first plan was to raise a sum which should yield an annual revenue of about 40,000 dollars, which would have maintained a large band.

It is reported that this has been rather modified and the scale of expenses reduced. Nevertheless, the organisation is said to be on a good working basis, and its prospects should be bright, for the Cincinnatians take a vast pride in the music of their city, and having put their hands to the plough are not likely to look back.

The Church Choral Society of New York gives three of its musical "Services" this season as against two last year. The next one will be held at St. Bartholomew's Church, of which the Conductor of the Society, Mr. Warren, is the Organist. There will be some unaccompanied compositions by Arcadelt, Palestrina, and Mendelssohn; an Evensong, composed for the chorus by Mr. Harry Rowe Shelley; and a cantata, "The Resurrection," by Mr. W. le Grand Howland. This occasion will probably furnish an opportunity for the display of the organ of St. Bartholomew's—a monstrous electric affair, completed last fall.

Brooklyn has a capital chorus, organised late last season, and called the Oratorio Club. So far its Concerts have been given in aid of the Church Charities Foundation of that city, which is a sort of fashionable almsgiving enterprise, so that the Club has had the advantage of good patronage. Its Conductor, Mr. Walter H. Hall, has got his material well in hand, and the chorus sings remarkably well. Although called an "Oratorio club," it travels outside the line of sacred composition, and at its first Concert this season gave "The Rose," by Mr. W. W. Gilchrist, and Gade's "Crusaders." The Club suffers for the want of a good Concert-room—the Brooklyn Academy of Music being simply a theatre and having no proper stage for choral and orchestral work.

Among the choirs the season of uncertainty over the engagements of the coming year is beginning. Probably there will not be very many important changes in New York this season. The most prominent church, thus far, to announce a new régime is All Angels', from which the present organist, Mr. Witherspoon, will retire on May 1, and be succeeded by Mr. William Smedley, who comes from St. James's Church, Chicago. Mr. Smedley is an alto singer, and will train the choir with an accompanist at the organ. Mr. Walter Hall withdraws from the Church of the Heavenly Rest to devote himself exclusively to St. Ann's, Brooklyn, of which he has been the visiting Choirmaster for a year past. It is said that Mr. John White will leave the Church of the Ascension, but the matter is not, as yet, definitely settled. Mr. White is one of the finest soloists in the city. At St. Andrew's, Rochester, N.Y. (an important post), Mr. A. Gore Mitchell has just been engaged, and is beginning to get a badly disorganised choir into good shape.

It seems as though we were at last to have some collegiate instruction in music worthy of the name, since the appointment of Mr. Horatio W. Parker and Mr. Samuel S. Sanford as instructors in the theory and practice of music at Yale College. Mr. Parker has instituted a good theoretical curriculum at Yale, and he has a most valuable coadjutor in Mr. Sanford, who is himself an accomplished pianoforte player, and is, besides, a man of large private means (the son of the millionaire president of the Adams Express Company), and an ardent enthusiast in his work. It is said that he not only serves the College without remuneration, but expends money and time lavishly in aid of the department of instruction in which he is interested. Mr. Parker retains his post as Organist of Trinity Church, Boston (the choicest position in that city), spending certain days with his Yale classes at New Haven. This will continue until September next, when he will give up his Boston duties to reside in New Haven. His successor at Trinity Church has already been chosen—indeed, was selected several months ago—which serves to give an idea of the length of foresight which American churches are coming to exercise in the filling of organ appointments. The days of "open competitions" and advertising of vacancies are rapidly passing away. Such matters are now quietly adjusted from the inside, before anyone except those in position to be closely informed knows anything about them.

Dr. Walter B. Gilbert has just completed a quarter of a century of service as Organist and Choirmaster of Trinity Chapel, New York. To celebrate this event, Dr. Gilbert arranged a service, of which his Oratorio "St. John" was the chief portion. This was sung by a chorus composed of present and past members of his own choir, and of the choir of men and women from St. Paul's Chapel, under Mr. Leo Kofler. There was an orchestra, a pupil of Dr. Gilbert's played the organ, and the Doctor himself conducted. The Rev. Dr. Vilbert, minister in charge at Trinity Chapel, delivered a congratulatory address, and a service of silver was presented to Dr. Gilbert. Unfortunately a terrific snowstorm was raging on the evening set for the service, so that the congregation, which under ordinary circumstances would have been large, was reduced to very small proportions.

MISS MARIE WURM gave a Pianoforte Recital, on the 21st ult., in the Queen's (Small) Hall, of a somewhat novel description, the talented pianist extemporising the whole of her programme upon themes given by her audience. Many of the great masters possessed the ability to improvise in a brilliant manner; but art has its fashions, like all else, and we no longer expect our leading composers to "oblige" with a fugue or sonata at a moment's notice; being disposed, indeed, to value their works the more when we learn that considerable time and study have been spent upon them. Miss Wurm's courageous endeavour to revive a pleasant form of the exhibition of special gifts attracted a numerous audience, which evinced much interest in the manner in which the subjects submitted for acceptance were treated and developed. A theme sent by Professor Bridge in a sealed envelope met with fugal treatment; and themes supplied by Mr. C. A. Barry and Mr. Fuller Maitland were made to respectively form the basis of an effective Largo and a sprightly Gavotte in a Suite of five movements. A Theme and Variations, a Sonata, a Nocturne, Mazurka, Berceuse, and Polonaise followed, with more or less success, and served to display the fair pianist's fertility of resource and adroitness in making the best of the materials supplied her; but, truth to tell, interest diminished in the performances as curiosity became satisfied, and there is little likelihood of extemporary pianoforte recitals becoming popular.

MASCAGNI'S "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" were repeated, under the direction of Mr. William Carter, on the 6th ult., by the Queen's Hall Choral Society, and showed that the strictures given on the former occasion had been of value. Much improvement was displayed in the rendering of the choruses, the singers evidently now recognising the fact that they were engaged on dramatic music, and not on a selection of hymn-tunes. Miss Ella Russell and Mr. Andrew Black were admirable in leading parts, and good service was done by Miss Marie Hooton, Miss Agnes Janson, and Messrs. McGuckin, Copland, and Branscombe. — The performance of "Elijah," on the 21st ult., was the most successful achievement of this Society under its present conductor, and the merits of the interpretation were appreciatively recognised by a numerous audience. Mr. Douglas Powell's impersonation of the Prophet was marked by great intelligence and ability, and Miss Thudichum, Miss Clara Butt, and Mr. Iver McKay respectively sang the principal soprano, contralto, and tenor solos in a most satisfactory manner. Able assistance was also given by Miss Winifred Parker, Miss Rose Williams, Mr. Stuart Dudley, and Mr. Shakespeare Stewart.

MISS MAUDE VALÉRIE WHITE'S Concert at Queen's Hall, on the 4th ult., was chiefly made up of her own compositions. There was no difficulty, however, in avoiding monotony. Mr. Plunket Greene, who made his final appearance prior to departing for the United States, was heard to great advantage in "To Mary," in "Crabbed age and youth," and in five of Schumann's "Dichterliebe." He also took part with the Countess Valda Gleichen (the substitute for Miss Marie Brema, unavoidably detained in Brussels) in a duet by Brahms. Miss White's "The devout lover" and a couple of her German Lieder were sung by Mr. Kennerley Rumford, the settings of Burns's "John Anderson" and of Tennyson's "The Throstle" were tastefully given by Miss Beverley Robinson, and Miss Dale did justice to "In yonder fair valley." The composer accompanied the majority of her songs, and invariably in an able manner. Mr. Borwick accompanied Mr. Greene in the Schumann pieces, and with his wonted neatness played solos by Scarlatti and others.

MR. W. G. WOOD'S Organ Recital at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on January 26, included "Chorus Magnus" by Capocci, Liszt's "Prelude and Fugue on the name of Bach," "Two Sketches" by Schumann, and "Triumphal March" by Dudley Buck. Mr. T. E. Wootton gave two humorous bassoon solos; and Miss Katherine Fisk's artistic interpretation of several songs was greatly appreciated. Mr. Fountain Meen was the accompanist. — On the 16th ult. a Pianoforte Recital was given by Miss Ida C. Betts, Miss Gertrude Peppercorn, Miss Edith Purvis, and Miss Lily West (all members of Mr. Matthey's Class at the Royal Academy of Music), who presented a very varied and attractive programme. The vocalist on this occasion was Madame Alice Gomez, and violoncello solos were contributed by Mr. Leo Stern. Mr. Fountain Meen again acted as accompanist.

The Dedication Festival was observed in St. Paul's Cathedral, according to custom, by the performance of the greater portion of Mendelssohn's Oratorio relating to the great Apostle. At the morning celebration, Gounod's Messe Solennelle, as arranged for the English Church, was given with orchestra. The music also included the same composer's "O saving Victim" (during Communion) and some hymns. At the afternoon-service the selection from "St. Paul" began with the Overture, to which immediately succeeded the scene of the Conversion. The noble chorale "Sleepers, awake," the imposing chorus "O great is the depth," and "How lovely are the messengers" created all the usual effect. The Cathedral choir was greatly augmented for the occasion, and the attendance was as large as ever.

MRS. LEE'S Vocal Recital, at Princes' Hall, on the 15th ult., was of more than ordinary interest. To the charm of a contralto voice of admirable quality Mrs. Lee adds singular gifts of expression, which she employed with specially good effect in Schubert's "Lindenbaum" and "Aufenthalt," Brahms's "Geistliches Wiegenlied" (viola obbligato well played by Mr. A. Hobday), and several Hungarian melodies by Mr. F. Korbay, who played the accompaniments to his own compositions. Her success was genuine and deserved. Mr. David Bispham gave in fine style Schubert's "Waldesnacht" and Korbay's "Serenade," besides joining in a couple of duets. Miss Ethel Spiller contributed two violin pieces, and Mr. Bird accompanied throughout the first part.

THE second Concert of the season given by the Woodside Park Musical Society took place on the 19th ult., at the Woodside Hall, North Finchley. The work chosen was Schumann's beautiful and unduly neglected cantata "Paradise and the Peri," a very creditable performance of which was given. The solos were undertaken by Miss Teresa Blamy, Miss Gertrude Bevan, Mrs. A. E. Duncan, Mrs. L. Cowing, Mr. James Gawthrop, Mr. L. Wagner, and Mr. Butlin, the latter, at short notice, doing duty for Mr. Holden Walker, who was suffering from a severe cold. Mr. H. Davan Wetton rendered efficient aid at the harmonium, and Miss Preston played the pianoforte part with great skill. Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted, as usual.

AN excellently arranged Orchestral and Vocal Concert was given, under the conductorship of Mr. J. W. Lewis, on the 9th ult., in the Dulwich Public Hall, by the choir of Emanuel Congregational Church, Barry Road. Miss Annie Layton, Miss Kate Cherry, and Mr. A. J. Layton were the vocal soloists; Mr. W. Fuller's violin playing in De Beriot's Concerto (Op. 16) was greatly appreciated; and Mr. G. Hunter's and Mr. F. Thornton's respective clarinet and violoncello pieces much enjoyed. The part-songs included Schumann's "Gipsy Life," and the orchestral pieces, Ambrose Thomas's Overture to "Raymond" and German's "Henry VIII." Dances.

THE St. Peter's Choral Society gave its second Concert of this—the tenth—season, in St. Peter's Hall, Brockley, on the 5th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Handel's "Acis and Galatea" were performed, under the direction of Dr. C. J. Frost. A professional string band was engaged, and the Symphony of the "Hymn of Praise" was given, with the assistance of Mr. J. Curran at the pianoforte and Mr. A. J. Sindall at the harmonium. The principals were Miss Florence Monk, Mr. Wilfred Achfeld, and Mr. Dan Price; Mrs. W. F. Sergeant joining Miss Monk in the duet "I waited for the Lord."

MR. SCHULZ-CURTJUS announces a series of five Wagner Concerts, to be given at the Queen's Hall during the summer. Herr Hermann Levi, the renowned Conductor of the Munich Opera, will conduct the first Concert, which is to take place on April 25. Another Concert—that of June 6—will be directed by Herr Siegfried Wagner, who will, on that occasion, introduce a Symphonic Poem from his own pen; and the remaining three Concerts will be conducted by Herr Felix Mottl. The singers at present engaged for these Concerts are Fräulein Ternina, Frau Mottl, Herr Gerhauser, and Mr. Van Dyck.

THE Cricklewood Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation," on the 13th ult. The soloists were Miss Margaret Hoare, Mr. Reynolds Wood, and Mr. Arthur Johnson. Mr. A. A. Yeatman presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Albert Rayment conducted, the chorus numbering fifty members. The Concert concluded with a short miscellaneous programme, in which the Cynthia Quartet sang Bridge's humorous part-song "The Goslings," Hatton's "The Letter," "Simple Simon," and "The Chinese March." Miss Winifred Jones contributed two violin solos.

MR. H. J. T. WOOD gave a Concert, on the 8th ult., at the Paddington Baths, in aid of St. Matthew's Church, Bayswater. One of Haydn's Symphonies, an arrangement for strings of a Harpsichord Suite by Purcell, two dances from Monsigny's "Aline," and the orchestral portion of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor (the solo part carefully played by Miss C. Worship) were creditably rendered by Mr. Wood's amateur force. Mr. C. Jacoby gave with finish Wieniawski's Polonaise Brillante, and Miss Grainger Kerr effectively sang a couple of Beethoven's Scotch songs.

THE third annual dinner of the Westminster Abbey Old Boys' Club took place, on the 9th ult., at the Victoria Mansions Restaurant, where Mr. J. C. Barrett took the chair, the company numbering about seventy. Amongst the visitors there were old boys from the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral, and the Chapels Royal, Windsor and St. James's. After dinner an excellent programme, arranged by Mr. F. Charlton Fry, was given, in which Messrs. Avalon Collard, Eustace Bryant, H. C. Hutchinson, Thurgood, Baker, S. H. Parry, F. C. Fry, and Arthur Payne took part.

AN excellent Vocal and Pianoforte Recital was given in the Queen's (Small) Hall, by Messrs. Arthur Oswald and Stewart Macpherson, on January 31. The accomplished baritone singer introduced Sir Arthur Sullivan's simple but charming cycle of songs "The Loves of the Wrens," verses by the late Poet Laureate, and rendered them with much artistic feeling. Mr. Macpherson's principal solo was Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22), in which he showed himself a very able pianist. There was a good attendance, and the performance was in all respects successful.

THE executive of the Bridlington Musical Society have decided to extend its operations and inaugurate, in the third week in May, a small Festival in place of the single Concert given last year. The works chosen are Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Professor Villiers Stanford's choral ballad "The Revenge," and a selection of orchestral and vocal pieces. The chorus of 150 voices, an orchestra of 50 performers, and professional soloists will be engaged, under the conductorship of Mr. Bosville. Such an admirable scheme will doubtless meet with the generous support it so well deserves.

ORGAN Recitals are being given every Saturday, at five o'clock, at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, by Mr. E. H. Lemare. The programmes have been full of interest, those during the past month having included compositions by the old masters, such as Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Boccherini, and the modern school being represented by Saint-Saëns, Guilmant, Liszt, Wagner, and others. Mr. Lemare's ability as an executant is well known, and the Recitals have been heard by crowded and attentive audiences.

MISS EDITH FITZGEORGE gave an Evening Concert at the Victoria Hall, Bayswater, on the 18th ult. Songs were contributed by the Concert-giver, Madame Esmée Squire, Misses Stuart-Barker, Edith Grosvenor, Alice Seymour Keay; Messrs. Burford, M. Wicktor, and Cowper; a pianoforte duet (Moszkowski) by Miss Mira Lyddell and Mr. R. Halton Pearce, and pianoforte solos by the two last-named artists; and Mr. Halton Pearce played a "Fantasie" of his own composition. Mr. Dermott O'Neil gave an amusing recitation.

MESSRS. JARROLD AND SONS, of Norwich, will shortly publish a concise Dictionary of native musicians, composers, organists, singers, instrumentalists, writers, &c., who have aided British musical art from the earliest times to the present. The collection is by Mr. Crowest, the author of "The Great Tone Poets," &c. Any persons desirous of contributing information for this work should address themselves to the publishers, or to Mr. Crowest, as soon as possible.

THE second Smoking Concert of the London County Council Musical Society took place at St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 4th ult., Lord Carrington presiding. The choir sang several part-songs and plantation songs, including an arrangement by the musical director, Mr. J. W. Ivimey, of "Simon the Cellarer," and the orchestral selection comprised German's popular dances from the "Henry VIII." music.

THE tenth season of the Children's Orchestra commenced at the Westminster Town Hall, on January 30, under the direction of Mr. Percy Armitage. The pieces selected were well within the means of the juvenile instrumentalists, who executed them with much spirit and evident enjoyment of their tasks. Mr. Whitney Mockridge and Mr. Johannes Wolff took part in the Concert.

AT the Clapham Philharmonic Concerts, on January 31, Mr. Tobias A. Matthay gave a Pianoforte Recital. The programme included two pianoforte pieces by Sinding and a new Sonata by Mr. Matthay, both given for the first time. The vocalists were Miss Dora Matthay and Mrs. Tobias A. Matthay, and the accompanist, Mr. Walter Mackway.

A HIGHLY successful Concert was given at the Shepherd's Bush Athenæum, on the 19th ult., by the Orfeo Glee Singers, assisted by Miss Lillian Lister, Miss Lillian Verkrusen, Mr. Stanley Nilmont (who contributed a musical sketch), and Mr. Alfred Allen (the latter officiating as solo pianist and accompanist).

THE choir and orchestra of the Goldsmiths' Institute gave an effective performance, on the 16th ult., of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," under the conductorship of Dr. C. J. Frost, the solos being well sung by Mrs. Aylmer Jones, Miss Gordon Scott, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Dan Price.

A SERIES of Lectures on "Counterpoint" will be delivered by Dr. C. M. Garrett, on the 6th, 13th, and 20th inst., at the Royal College of Organists. Members are invited to attend, and it may be added that Dr. Garrett's syllabus indicates that the discourses will be of great value to students.

THE Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "The Messiah," on January 30, at All Hallows, Bromley-by-Bow. The soloists were Mrs. Coles, Miss Rina Robinson, Mr. Gilbert Denis, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. Dr. Turpin presided at the organ.

MR. CHARLES SALAMAN has once again given the musical world reason to be glad of his achieving another birthday, his eighty-first, by publishing a new song, entitled "Canst thou be true," distinguished, as so many of its predecessors, by refined expression of graceful fancy.

MR. ALFRED GILBERT has accepted the office of Hon. Treasurer to Trinity College, London, in succession to Mr. J. A. Hammond, who has successfully administered the funds of the institution during the past eleven years.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce the following deaths:—

LUCY EMMA, LADY GOSS, widow of the late Sir John Goss, the distinguished Church composer, died at Bramcote, Streatham, on the 15th ult., aged ninety-five.

WILHELM HEINTZ, organist at the Cathedral and director of music in the University of Lund, Sweden.

FRAU MARTHA SCHROEDER, née SCHWIEDER, formerly well known in Germany as a pianist, died at Göttingen, on the 8th ult., aged thirty-six.

HENRI TIBBE, pianist and professor at the Music School of the Dutch Society for the Encouragement of the Art of Music, Amsterdam, where he died recently, aged thirty-one.

VICTOR MARCHOT, formerly conductor at the theatres of Liège and Rouen, music teacher and composer. He died at Liège, on January 18, aged thirty-seven.

LOUIS JOSEPH ARMAND CROHARÉ, professor at the Conservatoire, accompanist at the former Théâtre Lyrique, afterwards at the Grand Opéra in Paris, where he died, aged seventy-four.

CAVALIERE ALESSANDRO ANTONELLI, director of the municipal band, Bologna, where he died on January 2.

FRAU MAGDALENE BEHREND-BRANDT, formerly highly esteemed in Germany as a dramatic singer. She died in Paris, on January 25.

ANSELM EHMANT, highly esteemed teacher of the piano-forte and composition. Born at Frankfort-on-Maine in 1832, he became a pupil of Hauptmann and Moscheles at the Leipzig Conservatoire, and in 1855 emigrated to Paris, where, up to 1870, he conducted two male-voice choirs, and where he died, on January 14.

KARL VON BONGARDT, director of the Court Theatre, Detmold, and formerly well known as an opera singer. He died on January 27, aged forty-eight.

MADAME WORRELL, Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and formerly well known as a singer of much charm, on the 12th ult., at 56, Arlingford Road, Tulse Hill, aged thirty-eight.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"HÄNSEL UND GRETTEL."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Times and again have I read and heard remarks about the "well-known" popular melodies employed by Humperdinck in his opera "Hänsel und Gretel." At a recent Lecture on the subject the lecturer played one of the melodies, saying that it was a well-known students' song, but failed to inform us which students' song. No more do other writers and critics tell us what the original melodies are that Humperdinck is supposed to have employed, except in the case of the opening song—which they declare to be a reminiscence of "O du lieber Augustin"—

Now comes the question, What constitutes a plagiarism? The accidental identity of a few intervals or rhythm does not, at least to my mind; whereas the character of a phrase will often give undeniable proof of the fact that the author was well acquainted with classical models. If we take the character of the above-quoted opening song, its character is so totally different from "O du lieber Augustin" that it has nothing in common with it but the first five notes—the sixth differs already.

Were the notes different, but the character of the whole piece the same, I should not hesitate to call it plagiarism. There is, however, a reason for the assertion that Humperdinck made use of existing popular melodies, and this is it: that in all the melodies in "Hänsel und Gretel," which are absolutely his own, he has described the situation with such truthfulness, and so naturally, and has succeeded so perfectly in writing true folk-melodies, that the listener imagines he must have heard them before. The diatonic character of the melodies assists in this illusion, as it often will bring the same notes in a similar order, thus giving a handle to the reminiscence hunter, who fails to see that some little difference in rhythm, or even a note or two placed differently, will entirely change the character of the phrase. To show how this will occur in genuine folk-music I give here the beginning of two songs, the first of which is Alsatian and the second Rhenish; both are of great antiquity, and although there is a similarity in the beginning, the continuation gives them a totally different character—

Alsatian:

Rhenish:

As an intimate friend of the composer of "Hänsel und Gretel," and knowing as I do the whole history of the opera, I feel justified in saying that Humperdinck never dreamt of taking or adapting existing melodies, but that they are absolutely his own inspiration.

In fairness to the composer you would greatly oblige me by giving the above a place in your valuable paper, and believe me, gratefully yours,

E. VAN DER STRAETEN.

"FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—If you deem it a matter of sufficiently general interest for publication in your valuable paper, I should much like to aid, if possible, in clearing up a confusion of ideas which I think all piano-forte and organ teachers must feel is too common with the public, and even with some of their own fraternity.

When you publish, as in your last number, a notice to the effect that Herr Emil Sauer was trained on the Deppe system, and that he and Miss Amy Fay speak enthusiastically of the same, we know that you, of course, do not imagine that we have only to adopt this system generally to obtain dozens of players every year like Herr Sauer. But many are inclined to draw such inferences, which the upholders or teachers of the system are very ready to foster; the result being that those who find that the process which made Herr Sauer what he is will not give them half the lightness, delicacy, or power of his touch, are, of course, disappointed, perhaps very puzzled, and, for certain, more sceptical than before about "systems." They do not know or do not reflect that by methods hitherto employed the development of the pianist is like the "development" of a photographic plate, which, without that process, could, it is true, produce no picture; but the beauty of the ultimate "print" depends mainly upon the manner in which the lens received the rays of light and cast them on the sensitive film, and comparatively little on the "development" process, which can never make a fine negative from a badly taken plate. So with fine pianists. The original possession by them of a musical ear and (for questions of touch) of good tonicity of muscle and perfect circulation through all muscles of the arm constitutes the "plate" from which, using the "Deppe" developer, the "Tausig" developer, the eight-hours-a-day developer, or any other that they happen to find exactly suits their case, they have produced their exceptional technique. And even they themselves, perhaps, fancy that all the credit is due to the developer. I venture to say that a still very dimly understood fact is this: that until we first really and scientifically get to the bottom of the precise differences in the physical constitution of the first-class pianist and of the player with a harsh, disagreeable touch, who nevertheless has worn through the ivory of his piano-forte keys; and, secondly, transform, by imitation or extension of Nature's working, our "development" methods into distinctly more radical operations than they are at present, we cannot possibly be likely to gain the power or imparting to more than a few of our "musical" pupils a firm, even touch or rapid technique. And just as long as this is the case, so long will the mental and technical difficulties be confounded, the musical periodicals be full of fruitless discussions on "touch," and the present anomalies in teaching the pianoforte—each professor adopting separate principles—continue unaltered.

Yours, &c.,
MACDONALD SMITH.

THE NEW CRITICISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—May I be allowed to call attention, in your columns, to a specimen of the New Criticism, as practised by a prominent evening London newspaper?

Some three weeks ago an important work, new to London, was produced at the Albert Hall. On the day previous to the performance, the paper in question published a preliminary article on the work, from which we extract one typical sentence: "He (the composer) avoids anything like clearness of melody and easy symmetry of thought, as he would avoid the devil himself." Then, after some further remarks, the critic concludes, "We would not prejudice Thursday night's performance."

For sheer effrontery I think this would be hard to beat, even amongst the files of the newspaper in question.

Faithfully yours,
G MINOR.

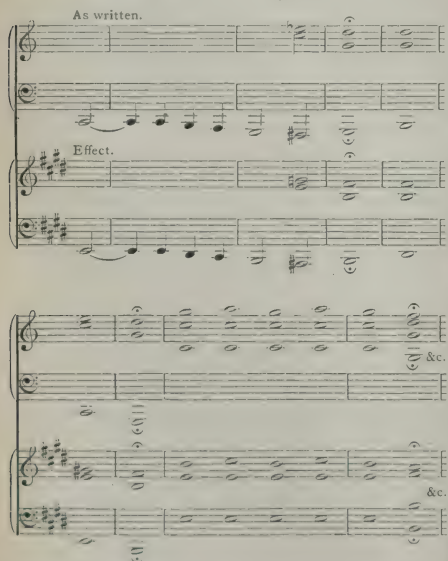

DIFFICULT HORN PASSAGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

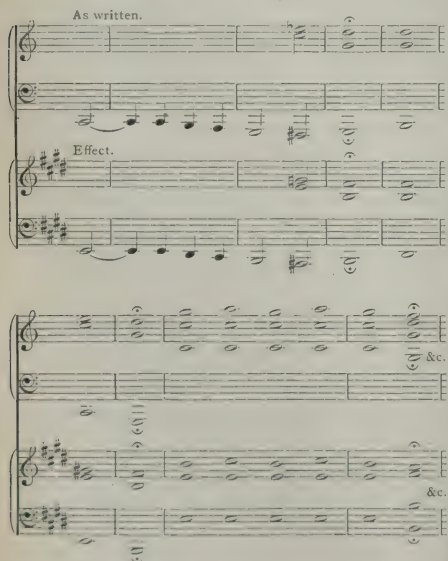

SIR,—It may interest some of your readers (as well as the writer) of the notice of Vivier (in the February number of THE MUSICAL TIMES) to know that not only did Vivier really produce a chord of three, or even four, notes simultaneously, but that he was neither the first nor the only player who has been able to do so.

In Carl M. von Weber's Concertino for horn (written in 1815) the following passage occurs at the end of the Cadenza (after the Recitative)—

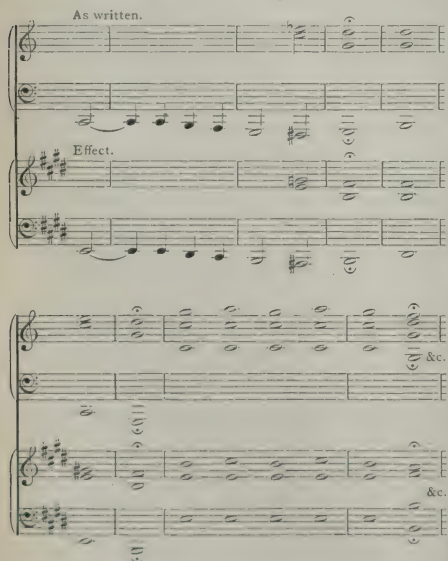

As written.

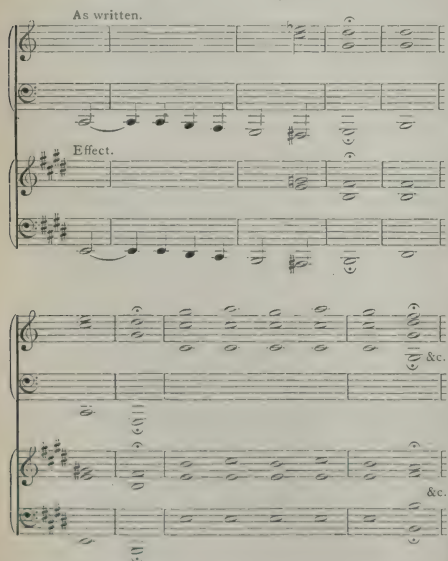

Effect.

Jähns, in his Thematic Catalogue of Weber's Compositions (p. 201), has a note, of which I translate a portion, to the following effect:

"In the final Cadenza an uncommon effect is to be noticed; a passage of nine bars for the horn alone, in three and four-part harmony. So that Weber, in 1815, already indicated an effect, which, after having been entirely forgotten, was revived by the celebrated Vivier about thirty-five years later, and created an extraordinary sensation."

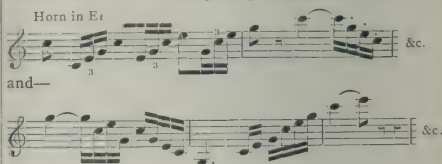

He goes on to explain—not, I think, quite completely—how the effect is produced.

I can testify to the possibility of the effect, as I have often heard it produced, more or less completely, by a moderately skilful amateur.—I am, &c.,

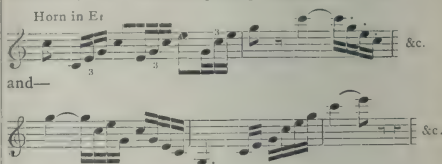

Severn Grange, Worcester. E. W. WHINFIELD.

P.S.—The same Concertino contains, in the final Polonaise, some rather surprising passages, such as—

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * Notices of concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

F. W. WEIRER (Geelong).—Thanks; but the subject is now too stale in Great Britain.

J. D. HORWOOD.—César Franck died at Paris from the effects of an accident, November 8, 1890.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

BASINGSTOKE.—On the 11th ult. the Harmonic Society gave excellent performances of Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" and Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty." The soloists were Miss Kate Drew, Miss Mary Reeve, Mr. Charles Butler, and Mr. Giffard Wells. Mr. J. S. Liddle led the band and Mr. W. H. Liddle conducted.

BEDFORD.—Mdlle. de Nohac gave a Matinée musicale at the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult. Mdlle. de Nohac, whose efforts were heartily appreciated, was assisted by Mr. Templer Saxe, Miss M. Chetham (solo violin), and Miss Ethel Herbert (reciter). Dr. H. A. Harding acted as accompanist.

BLACKBURN.—A most successful choral contest took place on the 9th ult. There were five entries for the competition, which was open to all musical societies and choirs of thirty-five voices and under. Mr. R. H. Wilson was the adjudicator, and gave the first prize to Accrington Wesley Choir, the second to Leeds Vocal Union, and the third to the Ramsbottom Presbyterian Choir. Very large audiences were present both afternoon and evening.

BRIGHOUSE.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. H. Pearson, gave an attractive miscellaneous Concert on the 5th ult., in the Town Hall. The choir was heard in Schubert's "Forth to the Meadows," Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song" (Op. 59), and some choruses; and Madame Thomas, associated with Messrs. Tomlinson, Rees, Whiteley, Burnett, Crossland, and Pearson, performed Saint-Saëns's Septet in E flat (Op. 65). Vocal solos were also given by Miss Bertha Sladdin and Mr. John Ridding. The orchestra, led by Mr. W. Rees, accompanied Mr. Pearson in Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor (Op. 25) and played several pieces of important design.

BROADSTAIRS.—On the 5th ult. a performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given, in the large hall of St. Mary's Home, by the Broadstairs and St. Peter's Choral Society. The principals were Mrs. Vincent Henniker, Miss Van Senden, Mr. O. F. Morgan, and Mr. O. Williams. Mr. F. G. Davison presided at the organ and Mr. G. B. Middlemiss at the pianoforte. The choruses were effectively sung by the active members of the Society, about seventy in number. Mr. H. B. Osmond conducted.

CHESTERFIELD.—A complimentary Concert was given to Mr. Thomas Cooper (of the Parish Church Choir) on the 11th ult., in the Stephenson Memorial Hall. The vocalists were Madame Vadini, Miss C. Cooper, Miss L. A. Jackson, Mr. Thomas Cooper, Rev. N. C. Robertson, and Mr. D. Harrison. Miss E. H. Barker contributed violin solos and Mr. H. N. Biggin accompanied. There was a very large audience.

DENABY.—A Concert was given in the Large Hall, on the 5th ult., the first part consisting of Sir Joseph Barnby's "Rebekah." Miss Marjorie Eaton interpreted the title rôle, and the other principals were Mr. Hawksworth and the Rev. R. P. Roseveare. In the miscellaneous second part Miss Eaton sang with much charm "Scenes that are brightest" and two songs by Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

ENNISCORTHY.—The winter Concert of the twenty-sixth season of the Choral Union took place on January 22, in the Church Institute. The programme consisted of Landeghen's cantata "Merlin; or, the Charmed Oak," and a miscellaneous selection. The vocalists were Miss H. C. Preston, Miss R. Byrne, Miss L. Goff, Mr. McEnnis, and Mr. A. McDermott. Miss M. Garland played some violoncello solos, and Miss E. Alcock and Miss E. Murphy were the accompanists. Mr. F. Hatson Wright conducted.

GRAVESEND.—In the Upper Public Hall, on the 7th ult., Mr. T. E. Breakwell, music-master, H.M.S. Worcester, gave his second Pianoforte Recital. Mr. Breakwell gave ample proof of his ability as a pianist, and his performances were warmly received. Miss Marie Kehrein was the vocalist and Miss Edith Jarvis the violinist.

HARROGATE.—A Concert, under the auspices of the Harrogate Literary Society, was given in the Spa Room on January 30, when J. Allanson Benson's cantata, "The Water Nymph," was effectively performed by the members of the newly-formed Musical Society, supported by an efficient orchestra. Miss F. Sellers, Miss M. Barracough, and Mr. J. Browning were the soloists, and the work was conducted by the composer. The second part consisted of vocal and instrumental solos and part-songs, the last-named being well rendered by the choir under the direction of its Conductor, Mr. W. H. Breare.

HENDON.—Mr. L. Fowles and Mr. Edward Hermann gave an excellent Chamber Concert on the 8th ult., in the Public Hall. They were ably assisted by Mr. H. Wyand, Mr. J. Rosoman, and Mr. A. D. Swift. Vocal solos were sung by Mr. Ripley and Mr. W. J. Morrell.

LIVERPOOL.—The programmes of Mr. J. Herbert England's recent series of Saturday and Sunday Organ Recitals, in St. George's Hall, have presented an excellent and attractive selection of music, the performance of which has doubtless proved both enjoyable and instructive to the large audiences attending.

LLANFAIRFECHAN.—On the 14th ult. a performance of Schubert's "Song of Miriam," with Miss Hughes as soloist, was given by the Choral Society at the Town Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. Llewelyn Jones. In the second part of the programme, which was miscellaneous, the following performers took part: Miss H. Lempriere, Miss M. E. Jones, Miss E. Lempriere, Mr. J. R. Morgan, and Mr. H. Jones. Miss Hewitt and Miss Duckworth contributed violin solos, and Mr. A. Jones presided at the organ.

MALVERN.—A Pianoforte Recital was given, on the 16th ult., in the large hall of the Imperial Hotel, Malvern, by Mr. Herbert Sharpe. The pianist gave a fine and characteristic interpretation of Schumann's exacting Fantasia in C (Op. 17). In striking contrast was the tenderness and intellectual force combined in the artist's playing of the Fantasia of Chopin (Op. 49). The programme included selections from Brahms, Tschaiakowsky, Stojowski, Godard, and Grieg, and two charming and individual works by the performer, whose playing of his own realistic "Ruines d'un Château" (Op. 56) was much admired.

MEXBORO'.—A performance of Barnby's "Rebekah" was given in the Congregational Church on January 29. The soloists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Mr. Charles Blagboro', and Mr. J. G. Hewson. The choruses were admirably sung, and the instrumental portion of the work received a careful and effective interpretation by an orchestra ably led by Mr. J. A. Cox. Miss M. E. Scoraah presided at the organ and Mr. A. Popple conducted.

MIDDLETON.—Mr. T. V. Davies gave his third Concert at Middleton Hall, on the 11th ult., assisted by the following artists: Miss M. Davies, Miss G. Hughes, Miss A. Bona, Miss A. Hinton, Mr. Trefelyn David, Mr. I. Lewys, Mr. Ffrangon-Davies, Miss A. Trott (violin), and Miss Annie Lynne, the pianoforte playing of the last-named winning much approval. Several compositions by the Concert-giver were included in the programme.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On the 12th ult., in the Town Hall, the Harmonic Society gave an effective performance, under the conductorship of the composer, of Dr. Joseph Parry's "Saul of Tarsus." The soloists were Madame Williams-Penn, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Morgan Wilkinson. The accompaniments were played by an efficient orchestra, and Dr. Chambers, the Conductor of the Society, presided at the organ.

NEW MALDEN.—Madame de Launay gave a miscellaneous Concert, on the 18th ult., in the Lecture Hall. The vocalists comprised Miss C. Adair, Miss R. Percival, Madame T. Fysch, Mr. R. Trigg, Mr. T. le France, Mr. A. Smart, and Mr. S. Moore; and the instrumentalists included Miss M. May, Miss L. Sturman, Mr. D. Sturman, Mr. Waters, Mr. Essex, and Mr. F. Sinclair. Mr. F. W. Tagg gave a recitation, and Mr. Macdonald was the accompanist.

OSWESTRY.—Two Organ Recitals were given on January 31, by Mr. C. Morton Bailey, at Holy Trinity Church. The programmes included pieces by Bach, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Smart, Lux, Raff, Grison, Faulkes, and Shaw. Miss Emilie Lloyd and Mr. A. Wynne Corrie were the vocalists.

PURLEY.—The Choral Society opened its present season on the 12th ult., when the chief work performed was a cantata, entitled "The Fairy Partner," composed by Mr. Cuthbert Nunn, the clever Conductor of the Society. The solos were sung by Madame Marie Mallia and Mr. Frank Marten, and the work created a very favourable impression. Other artists who took part were Miss Dora Matthey, Mr. F. Marten, Mr. J. G. Coldwells, and Mr. P. L. Beall.

RAWTENSTALL.—Miss Bessie Holt gave a miscellaneous Concert on the 13th ult., in St. Mary's Schoolroom. Miss Holt's singing was much admired, and she was ably assisted by Miss E. Young, Mr. R. Walker, Mr. A. Wardley, Madame G. Thorpe (harpist), and Mr. Piddock (flautist). Mr. W. Lord was the accompanist.

RIPON.—A new cantata, illustrated by tableaux vivants, entitled "The Fairy Mirror," written by Dr. Coward, was effectively performed, on the 5th ult., in the Victoria Hall. The work was rendered by a choir of ladies and an orchestra of about fifty performers, the latter body being led by Mr. Stevenson; and the principal solos were sung by Miss Beecroft, Mrs. Burrill, Miss Brigg, Miss Kirkpatrick, and Miss Harrison, the last-named being the Narrator.

Mr. J. Castle was the pianist and the Rev. F. H. Taylor conducted. During the Concert some violoncello solos were played by Herr Schrumppf.

ST. AUSTELL.—"The Messiah" was performed, on the afternoon and evening of the 7th ult., by the Nonconformist Choral Union, in the Wesleyan Church. The solos were entrusted to Miss K. Collings, Mrs. Joel Baker, and Messrs. Hilcox, Popperwell, and W. J. S. Bishop. The choruses were effectively sung by about eighty voices; Mr. Howlett presided at the organ, and Mr. J. T. Hawke conducted.

SHEFFIELD.—The annual Concert in aid of the choir fund of St. Mary's Church was held on the 12th ult., in the Music Hall, Surrey Street. The part-songs sung by the choir, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Rodgers, included Smart's "Good night, thou glorious sun," and the beautiful Evening Hymn from Sullivan's "Golden Legend." Vocal solos were sung by Mrs. William Foxon, Miss M. Pfeilschmidt, Master H. Dudley, Mr. C. G. Booker, and Mr. F. Foxon; and a violin and pianoforte duet was played by Mr. J. H. Parkes and the Conductor. Mr. F. Cleaves recited, to pianoforte accompaniment, Poe's poem "The Bells."

SOWERBY BRIDGE.—On the 2nd ult. a Recital was given by Mr. Gaukroger on the new three-manual organ erected in Christ Church by Messrs. Abbott and Smith, of Leeds; and, on the 7th ult., a second Recital was given by Dr. J. V. Roberts, Magdalen College, Oxford. Both Recitals attracted large congregations and were much enjoyed.

STOCKPORT.—An excellent performance of "Elijah" was given on January 21. The principals were Miss A. Mullen, Miss Emery, Miss S. Berry, Mrs. Bayley, Mr. H. Beaumont, Mr. A. Scott, Mr. John Smith, and Mr. Andrew Black. The chorus deserve especial praise for the vigour and intelligence with which they sang throughout the work.

WHITCHURCH (SALOP).—On the 6th ult. the Musical Society, conducted by Mr. W. E. Rogers, gave an effective rendering of Gaul's "Holy City," in the Parish Church. The cantata was accompanied by the Orchestral Society, led by Mr. V. Somerset, and the organ, at which Mr. V. Blount presided. The principals were Miss Holford, Miss C. Holford, the Rev. E. J. Evans, and Mr. A. E. Ellis. This is the first occasion that the church has been used for such a purpose, and the new departure was in every way a success, the performance being apparently much enjoyed by a large congregation.

WIGAN.—The Rev. E. A. Ingram played an artistic selection of organ music on January 31, in St. James's Church, Poolstock.

WINDSOR.—The Shinner Quartet gave a Chamber Concert on January 31, in the Albert Institute. The programme included Schubert's posthumous String Quartet in D minor and Dvořák's Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81). Miss K. Timberman was the vocalist and Miss Annie Fry the pianist.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. George F. Andrews, to the Parish Church, High Wycombe.—Mr. Percy G. Hart, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Peter's, Bushey Heath.—Mr. Albert Ingham, Organist and Choirmaster to Dominican Church, Dundalk.—Mr. A. T. Robinson, Organist and Choirmaster to Buxton Parish Church.—Mr. W. THE ASCENSION

A SACRED CANTATA

BY

BRUCE STEANE.

(Op. 18.)

"Mr. Bruce Steane has brought sympathy as well as technical skill and exceptional judgment into his Sacred Cantata 'The Ascension.' He knows the exact point at which to develop, without too obvious preparation, the forces at his command, so that the attention of the listener is seized and the text receives additional significance. The solos are melodious and pleasing. The chorus, 'O Lord God of Hosts,' could scarcely be constructed with greater simplicity, yet every phrase tells. 'Let God arise' is a finely written chorus, abounding with life, energy, and enthusiasm. This is among the best numbers of the work. The result is obtained free of effort, and the composition can boast the solidity of construction that originally so much helped to secure for oratorio a permanent home in this country. Other elaborate numbers are the choruses, including for finale 'Glory be to God on high,' constituting a majestic finale to a work that is instinct with devotional spirit and sound musicianship. Mr. Bruce Steane's Cantata is, of course, specially adapted for Ascensiontide; but there is no reason why it should not be given at other seasons of the year by choral societies. It has all the elements of popularity, and contains nothing derogatory either to Art or to Religion."—Daily Chronicle, February 19, 1895.

"Following on the lines of Steane's 'Crucifixion,' the composer of 'The Ascension' supplies a desired want which has been long felt in the répertoire of music specially suitable for Ascensiontide. Mr. Steane's music is throughout tuneful and musically, grateful to vocalists, and effectively scored. We heartily commend this Cantata to the notice of choirmasters."—Musical News, February 23, 1895.

"Bruce Steane's Sacred Cantata, 'The Ascension,' words selected by the Rev. Gresham F. Gillett, M.A., is a capably-written, meritorious work, certainly deserving to be heard."—Musical Standard, February 16, 1895.

"This Cantata is, we believe, the first large vocal work by Mr. Bruce Steane, and it augurs well for his future career. From beginning to end this work is thoroughly interesting—the choruses are bold, and such as will be readily caught up, the solos melodious and pleasing. To choirs and choral societies on the look out for a really good work we can cordially recommend 'The Ascension.' It is thoroughly musically, and will certainly become popular with choirs and audiences."—Non-conformists' Musical Journal, March 1, 1895.

"In Mr. Bruce Steane's Sacred Cantata, 'The Ascension,' another classic has been added to the répertoire of English composers."—Key Note.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary Parish Churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, contains the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Thirty-three years have elapsed since the publication of the first English edition, and faithful to its original as that edition may have been in the main, it has been felt that closer adherence to the accepted standard text is attainable, and, as far as is at all practicable, should be attained. With this view the present edition is issued. The chorales, choruses, and solos have been newly and independently translated from the original German words, and the adaptation of the narrative of the Evangelist, a task rendered perhaps somewhat less difficult and hazardous by the aid of the Revised Version of the New Testament, has been carefully reconsidered and re-arranged so as to preserve unaltered, as far as may be, the musical text of the original.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU

AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs

BY THE

REV. E. V. HALL, M.A.

Late Precentor of Worcester Cathedral.

Price Eightpence.

Words, with music to the Hymns, price Twopence.

This is an attempt to provide music for Lent and for Good Friday of the simplest kind, for use in country churches. The music is interspersed with well-known hymns, in which the congregation may be invited to join. The Cantata may be used at a special service on Good Friday afternoon or evening, or on any day in Lent, and requires only a solo voice and a small choir.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

* UNA

4TH AND 5TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"Una" is quite one of his best.—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

† THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE
BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

* JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

5TH AND 6TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

† ISRAEL IN THE

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has afforded in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.; vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d.; 7s. 6d. per 100.

New Cantatas for May Day.

THE DAISY CHAIN

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

HAMILTON CLARKE.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.—The annual ceremony on the First of May, of the Installation of the Queen of the Daisy Chain, has been instituted by the Schoolmaster of the village, for the purpose of rewarding the most popular of the scholars in the girls' school. The celebration affords opportunity for an interesting display, and the author has woven into it a very ingenious and amusing plot, in which some of the most interesting characters are the Schoolmaster and Schoolmistress, a Ladies' Volunteer Ambulance Corps, commanded by Surgeon-Captain Amanda Chuckles, four other female and five male principal characters, with a chorus of schoolboys and girls. The scene is laid in the playground of the school.

PREFACE.

THE collective title given to these songs does not quite express the idea which the Composer had in view in writing them. But it was impossible to find an exact equivalent in English to the French Chansons Intimes or to the German Intime Liedchen.

In these short songs the Composer has tried to give expression to some of our deeper feelings or questionings—such songs as one might sing to oneself, when in the mood, or to some intimate friends.

The Composer is indebted to H.R.H. The Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) for the drawings representing respectively Shadow and Sunshine, graciously designed for these two Volumes by Her Royal Highness.

A SHORT HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

OF THE

DEGREES IN MUSIC

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE

WITH A CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF GRADUATES IN THAT FACULTY FROM THE YEAR 1463

BY

C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The attention which has of late years been given by our Universities to the cultivation of music, and the endeavour to again make the degrees of Doctor and Bachelor in that faculty of substantial value, as marks of real musical erudition and culture on the part of the holder, as was formerly the case, have induced me to try and investigate the early history of these degrees, which are peculiar to the English Universities, and are practically unknown abroad.

I have traced the course of the degrees from the earliest time they are mentioned to the present day, when the tendency becomes more and more marked to place music on a level in every respect with the other faculties.

Mr. TOBIAS A. MATTHAY, the well-known and highly gifted Pianist, and Professor at the Royal Academy of Music, says:—

"Of very considerable importance in pianoforte technique is the preparing and retaining of 'fit' muscles. I have always believed that much might be done in this direction by gymnastic exercises, but hitherto always found myself more or less disappointed, although I tested a very great number, with and without appliances, including many which I myself devised.

"After, however, an exhaustive, and, I may add, sceptical, trial of Mr. Macdonald Smith's really scientifically thought-out and singularly concise series of movements without apparatus, I have been convinced that he has solved this difficulty, and has, in applying the principle of full contractions, discovered an unmistakably effective means of attaining all that can be expected from exercises away from the keyboard. I therefore most cordially commend these gymnastic movements, both to professor and pupil, as a valuable time and ear-saving device."

MACDONALD SMITH, care of Steinway and Sons.

INSPIRATION IN MUSIC.

I MUST begin this paper by stating as precisely as possible in what sense the term "inspiration" is employed. There are various forms of the influence from without which we represent by a word primarily indicating a physical action. We recognise, for example, an inspiration that makes the person subjected to it merely a channel of communication between a supernatural power and mankind. "And when they bring you into the synagogues," said our Lord to His disciples, "and unto magistrates and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer or what ye shall say; for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye shall say." This absolutely controlling form has two modifications, one which is defined as "the infusion or communication of ideas or poetic spirit by a superior being, or supposed presiding power." It comes far short of positive verbal dictation. The third and least powerful form is described as a "highly-exciting influence," of course operating, like the others, from without. My readers will scarcely need an assurance that by "inspiration" I do not here mean that which was promised to the apostles. Who knows if it is ever vouchsafed? for that matter who can be certain that it is not? One assurance we have—that we never recognise it, and are quite unable to bring it within any ascertained law of action. In his Oxford lecture on "The Relation of Art to Religion," Ruskin asks: "What ground have we for thinking that art has ever been inspired as a message or revelation? What internal evidence is there in the work of great artists of their having been under the authoritative guidance of supernatural powers?" The famous critic calls this a "mysterious question," and avoids discussing it minutely, but he makes one definite statement: "And the more impartially you examine the phenomena of imagination, the more firmly you will be led to conclude that they are the result of the influence of the common and vital, but not, therefore, less Divine spirit, of which some portion is given to all living creatures in such manner as may be adapted to their rank in creation; and that everything which men rightly accomplish is indeed done by Divine help, but under a consistent law which is never departed from." Ruskin is careful to point out that this conclusion from the internal evidence of art-works does not entirely meet the case set forth in his "mysterious question," the reply to which cannot rest alone upon such testimony. This is an important point, seeing that we are unable by reference to the lecturer's "consistent law" to account for the precocity of a Mozart or a Mendelssohn. Herein lies the mystery towards the solution of which we darkly grope; the most of us, however, being content to look upon it as inexplicable and, therefore, to do nothing but wonder. Putting aside such exceptional phenomena, and having regard to the whole range of facts as far as known, I am bound to accept Ruskin's theory of the common, vital, and Divine spirit bestowed upon all men, and operating within them according as circumstances help or hinder its activity. But this conclusion seems to imply that there is no such thing as inspiration at all in the sense generally understood. So much, indeed, the lecturer distinctly asserts: "I shall be able to show you, without any doubt, in the course of our studies, that the achievements of art, which have been usually looked upon as the results of peculiar inspiration, have been arrived at only through long courses of well-directed labour, and under the influence of feelings which are common to all humanity." This, it will be observed, comes at one point very near the definition of Genius as "the faculty of taking pains."

After the remarks just made it will be assumed that the term "inspiration" as used in this paper does not imply the special control or guidance of a higher Power, which, in fact, gives us all of its Spirit and leaves us to make what we can of it amid the varied and confused forces that act and re-act upon our life. Ruskin goes on to point out that the strength and development of the indwelling spirit may be affected, favourably or otherwise, by a variety of causes—by our own conduct, our physical condition, our will, distress, and sin. I would add, and by our relation to exterior things and to the influences they exert upon mind and feeling. When that relationship is happy, the Divine spirit within receives a stimulus from without. It becomes stronger and more active, and sometimes capable of deeds which astonish none more than the doer. In this much modified, though essentially true sense I use the word which it has been thought necessary to discuss at such length.

Small space need be devoted to proving that the Ruskin theory is one of exceeding comfort to earnest and anxious men. True, it does not imply a condition of equality of powers, and, if it did, would affront common experience and observation. Nobody is absolutely master of his circumstances, which, in some degree or other, and to various ends, dominate our life. But it is encouraging when we see grounds for believing that in each of us burns the flame of a spiritual gift, lying, to a large extent, though not wholly, within the province of our will to make fruitful of worthy deeds.

The question now is: How may the young musician who aspires to distinction as a composer most fully profit by inspiration, as we have agreed to understand it? He must first of all prepare himself for a sympathetic reception of influences from without, just as the field labourer, by working the soil and exposing it to the action of sun and atmosphere, makes it fit to receive the seed he will presently scatter. Here the argument inevitably brings me to the junction of art and ethics. There is no such junction, say some, and, indeed, one of my friendly critics charged me the other day with the mistake of submitting artistic questions to the test of a rather narrow moral code. There may be a degree of truth in the accusation, though I hope not. I must assert, however, that in my view the realm of art and that of ethics have distinct points of contact. After indicating the day's work of a Montegna or a Paul Veronese, the great teacher and critic, whom I have already quoted, goes on to say:

"And then consider, so far as you know anything of physiology, what sort of an ethical state of body and mind that means!—ethic through ages past! What fineness of race there must be to get it, what exquisite balance and symmetry of the vital powers! And then finally determine for yourselves whether a manhood like that is consistent with any viciousness of soul, with any mean anxiety, any gnawing lust, any wretchedness of spite or remorse, any consciousness of rebellion against law of God or man, or any actual, though unconscious, violation of even the least law to which obedience is essential for the glory of life and the pleasing of its Giver."

Ruskin admits that not all great artists have been thus pure and noble, but he argues that their moral defects appear in their work, and stoutly contends for the intimate relationship between the worth of an artist's character and the strength and dignity of his creations. "All good has its origin in good, never in evil." Again: "If there is indeed sterling value in the thing done, it has come of sterling worth in the soul that did it, however alloyed or defiled by conditions of sin which are sometimes more appalling or more strange than those which all may detect in their own hearts, because they are part of a personality altogether larger than ours, and as far beyond our judgment in its darkness as beyond our following in its light." Here the master touches upon a grave and solemn subject in words which every young and aspiring musician should ponder with an earnestness proportioned to his gifts: "And it is a sufficient warning against what some might dread as the probable effect of such a conviction on your own minds—namely, that you might permit yourselves in the weaknesses which you imagined to be allied to genius, when they took the form of personal temptations;—it is surely, I say, sufficient warning against so mean a folly, to discern as you may with little pains, that, of all human existences, the lives of men of that distorted and tainted nobility of intellect are probably the most miserable." "With little pains," indeed, may this fact be discerned. The history of genius tells of many a moral wreck. The road along which genius has travelled is dotted with mournful ruins. And the cause lies in ill-governed instincts and unbridled passions, often abnormally strong in sensitive natures; to some degree, also, in the foolish leniency with which what are called the aberrations of genius have come to be regarded. No man can safely be taught that vice hateful in others is less to be condemned in himself.

Does not the contention stand to reason that he who aims at achieving great and noble deeds should fit himself for the task by cultivating all great and noble qualities? Milton says of Virtue—and another of our poets hath this:

She can teach thee how to climb Higher than the spherie clime.

Virtue, when proved and full Matured, inclines us up to God and heaven.

—in other words, makes us sensitive to the influences of whatsoever things are pure and of good report. This argument seems to me specially applicable to the case of music—the most intensely personal of the arts, and that in which expression comes most directly from the very soul of the artist. The argument, moreover, is supported by what we know of truly great composers. In nearly every case distinguished achievement is matched by individual excellence. Think of the solid virtues of Sebastian Bach; the personal purity and manly courage of Handel; the sweetness and affectionateness of Mozart; the blamelessness of Beethoven throughout his long struggle under the "burden of the flesh"; the delicate and gracious refinement of Mendelssohn, and, to name no other examples, the beautiful though too melancholy and tragic life of Robert Schumann. The struggle for personal fitness involves much repression of self, much agonising to reach the "strait gate," and is never brought to a successful issue without strong crying and tears; but the prize is worth the pains of conflict. Only through victory in this war can the young musician become the Pure Knight of legend, to whose protection Beauty commits herself in perfect trust.

What else now remains to do by way of building up a fitting home for inspiring ideas and emotions? There must be not only moral cleanliness and nobility of soul, but susceptibility to the impressions made by whatever is beautiful and exalted. This can be obtained only through general culture. The question is sometimes asked why young musicians are required to pass an examination in other branches of study before entering upon their special training. To all who give the matter a moment's thought, the answer is easy. The "literary examination," as it is sometimes called, does not mean that a knowledge of languages or mathematics is essential to a musician. It is simply a method of ascertaining in what measure the mind has been disciplined by study, and its faculties expanded by familiarity with great truths. But I include much more than "book learning" in the term culture as here employed. Perhaps the best and highest means of culture are not those which work through the intellect, but rather those to which we are emotionally sensitive. Many men are, so to speak, born refined, shrinking naturally from ugliness and vice of form and speech and thought. We call them "nature's gentlemen," and gentlemen are they in the truest sense, though perhaps boasting no glory of blood and state. But for most of us it is the old fashion—a fight for every inch of ground gained. Let us consider how that fight should be carried on. Best, undoubtedly, by constant familiarity with whatever is elevating in example and precept, with whatever tends to lift us above the small and sordid concerns of life, or promotes within us a feeling for beauty. The young musician should therefore be a reader, but only of books that are wholesome, and, preferentially among these, of such as cultivate the fancy and imagination, such as create sensitiveness of mind and feeling. Not for him should be the degenerate in literature and art—pleasant and exciting, perhaps, but inflammatory and yielding no nourishment. There is profound truth in the saying of Shaftesbury that "the taste of beauty and the relish of what is decent, just, and amiable perfects the character of the gentleman," and it is by indulging the relish for such things, making it a rule of life, that we can attain the "taste of beauty" which constitutes the fine flower of true culture and the most absolute testimony to its presence.

Now the question confronts us: How can the musician, who, by discipline and study, has qualified himself to receive inspiration, best attain it? For one thing, quiescence will not do. The negative attitude recommended to the apostles under very different conditions would here only result in barrenness. There must be activity—the activity of the painter who goes along the countryside searching for "bits," and plants his easel before the one that most commends itself to his feeling for the picturesque. How encouraging is the knowledge that the sources of inspiration are all around us—in the physical and moral world alike, in the speech of men and the courses of the silent stars; in the crowded city street, and on the deserted moorland; in the silver radiance of dawn, the splendour of noon-tide, and the dying glories of sunset. But we must see these things—the eyes to see, alas! are often wanting—and open to them every avenue of our nature. I have just lighted on some verses by an American poet, in which the writer, asking: "How to the Singer comes the Song," thus himself replies:

How to the singer comes the song?

At times a joy, alone;

A wordless tone

Caught from the crystal gleam of ice-bound trees;

Or from the violet-perfumed breeze;

Or the salt smell of seas

In sunlight weltering many an emerald mile;

Or the keen memory of a loveliest smile.

Thus to the singer comes the song:

Gazing at crimson skies,

Where burns and dies

On day's wide hearth the calm celestial fire,

The poet with a wild desire

Strikes the impassioned lyre,

Takes into tuned sound the flaming sight,

And ushers with new song the ancient night.

The whole philosophy of that which I would now teach is contained in, or suggested by, these verses, and I say to every young musician: Having prepared yourself for intercourse with the Divine manifestation we call Nature, live with her as a child with his mother, as a pupil with his master—nay, without irreverence, as the Christian with Him into Whose image he grows by constant contemplation. Nature is the fertile parent of lovely conceptions, and through them of emotions that yearn for utterance. Beethoven knew this when he sought the park of Schönbrunn, and found there inspiration for his "Pastoral" Symphony. Mendelssohn knew it as he looked upon the Isles of Fingal, and translated the grandeur of the scene into deathless sound. Each of us in his degree, some fully, others with but faint perceptiveness, has learned the same lesson and felt the same moving power. So Thomson, invoking Nature:

How mighty, how majestic are thy works!

With what a pleasing dread they swell the soul

That sees astonished, and astonished sings.

Here then is the free and ever-flowing source of inspiration. But only those can partake to greatest advantage who fit themselves by contemplation and self-abandonment. "As I mused," says the sacred writer, "the fire burned and I spake with my tongue," while that most ancient sage to whom we owe the "Book of Job" advises: "Stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God." Ah! if we could only stand still sometimes!

It would be absurd to say that a man cannot write music save under the inspiration of Nature. Many painters paint Nature when she is absent, or without taking the trouble to look at her. But we know what the studio landscape is, and how lifeless in its presentation of the forms of things without the spirit. We know, too, what "made music" is—how deficient in glow and how weak in its appeal to our sympathy. The composer will do little who does not open a purified and sensitive soul to the influences of all lovely things and noble thoughts. We might as well look to a cloistered monk for knowledge of life as expectantly to him for beauty and nobleness.

He lives upon himself, and sooner or later inanition sets in, with all the diseased fancies and unwholesome dreams that follow in its train. How much of the morbidity and extravagance of modern music is due to unhealthy states of mind, to intellectual hysteria, and haunting visions which a nature sane and sound knows not?

Let the young musician who reads these and of remembering that the primary duty of a scholar is obedience. So, to quote a writer whose eloquence will be recognised, he "shall be filled with the in-dwelling light of self-possessed imagination, which shall not be stained or enfeebled any more by evil passion, but glorious with strength and chastity, and which shall no more degrade or disguise the work of God in heaven, but testify of Him as words pay me the compliment of considering them, or, better still, let him at once resolve to try the effect of the course they recommend. Let him read the noblest poetry and prose; let him become familiar with beautiful works of art in painting, sculpture, and architecture; above all, let him, with eyes that see and fail not, study the ever open volume of Nature, and then he will be in the way of the inspiration that prompts to large achievement—in the way, too, of learning humility through self-knowledge, here dwelling with men, and walking with them, not angry, in the garden of the earth."

JOSEPH BENNETT.

FROM MY STUDY.

THE portrait of Robert Schumann given herewith is "processed" from a drawing by J. B. Laurens, now in my possession. According to an inscription on the back of the drawing, it was taken from life at Dusseldorf in 1851, and is noteworthy as showing the face very nearly in profile. A remarkable profile it is.

Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient was a native of Hamburg, and born in 1804; both her parents, Friedrich Schröder and Antoinette Sophie Bürger, being artists, the one an operatic baritone of some repute, the other a famous actress, known in her day as "the German Siddons." The child of these persons inherited the talent of each, and became one of the greatest dramatic singers that the lyric stage has known. Miss Schröder made her first appearance at the Vienna Opera House in 1821, and at once became famous, such was the beauty of her vocalisation and the power of her acting. In 1822 she played Beethoven's "Leonora" in the master's presence. He was not easily pleased, and probably heard very little of the singing. But he could see, and when the performance ended, smiled on the young artist, patted her cheek, and said he would write an opera for her—a promise never kept unhappily. Continuing to increase her renown between 1822 and 1832, Madame Schröder-Devrient (she married Devrient, the actor, in 1823) inevitably turned her steps towards London. She made her début at the King's Theatre in 1832. Chorley, who closely followed her career during the season, has given us the following description of her appearance and characteristics:—

"She was a pale woman; her face, a thoroughly German one, though plain, was pleasing from the intensity of expression which her large features and deep tender eyes conveyed. She had profuse fair hair, the value of which she thoroughly understood, delighting, in moments of great emotion, to fling it loose with the wild vehemence of a Mænad. Her figure was superb, though full, and she rejoiced in its display. Her voice was a strong soprano, not comparable in quality to some other German voices of the class . . . but with an inherent expressiveness of tone which made it more attractive on the stage than many a more faultless organ. Her tones were delivered without any care, save to give them due force. Her execution was bad and heavy. There was an air of strain and spasm throughout her performance." Chorley was influenced a good deal by prepossessions and prejudices; we must, therefore, take his opinions cautiously. Madame Devrient sang at Covent Garden in 1833, under Alfred Bunn, and again in 1837. But there were troubles between her and the manager, the artist's health gave way, and the engagement ended disastrously. The remainder of her life was unfortunate in various respects. It ended, after a painful illness, in January, 1860.

Mr. F. G. Highe, organist of Castleacre Church, Norfolk, writes enquiringly about a Christmas carol, of which this is the last verse:

God bless the ruler of this house,
And send him long to reign,
And many a happy Christmas may
He live to see again.
With all his friends and kinsfolk
That live both far and near,
So we wish you a merry Christmas
And a happy New Year.

The ditty has, it appears, been sung from time immemorial in the district of Castleacre. Perhaps some correspondent can supply information with regard to it. The tune, as transcribed by Mr. Highe, is obviously that of "God rest you merry, gentlemen."

I am indebted to Mr. Henry Joyce for the subjoined musical epitaphs:

ON A CELEBRATED MUSICIAN.

Philips! whose touch harmonious could remove
The pangs of guilty power, and hapless love,
Rest here, distrest by poverty no more;
Find here that calm thou gav'st so oft before;
Sleep undisturbed within this peaceful shrine;
Till angels wake thee with a note like thine.

Dr. S. JOHNSON.

ON STEPHEN, THE FIDDLER.

Stephen and time are now both even;
Stephen beat time, now time's beat Stephen.

ON THOMAS MERIDETH, ORGANIST.

(In St. Mary's, Winton College, Oxford.)

Here lies one, blown out of breath,
Who lived a merry life, and died a Merideth.

I have recently added to my library what may be called a "purity song book." It is entitled, "A Collection of Songs, Moral, Sentimental, Instructive, and Amusing. The Words selected and revised by the Rev. James Plumptre, M.A., Fellow of Clare Hall, the Music adapted and composed by Charles Hague, Mus. Doc., and Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge." The volume, printed at Cambridge by Francis Hodson in 1805, bears on its title-page the following lines from Cowper's "Task":

But is amusement all? Studios of Song,
And yet ambitious not to sing in vain,
I would not trifle merely, though the World
Be loudest in their praise who do no more.

Worthy Mr. Plumptre, as vicar of a rural parish (Hinxtton), had before him ample evidence of the fact that men when merry are not always wise. At harvest homes and village feasts, "Drunkenness seems to be the end of drinking, and noise of singing, and the songs, if not improper, are seldom either amusing or instructive." The vicar asks for a reason: "Is it that the use of liquor or of singing is incompatible with innocence—that men cannot be 'merry and wise'? or is it that the use has grown into abuse and that we do not take care to regulate these things?" Mr. Plumptre believes in the much virtue of regulation, and pours out his soul in a flow of Johnsonese addressed to Dr. Hague, whom he invites to help him "employ Music against Music." From the list of subscribers, it appears that the country clergy and gentry were of one mind with the Hinxtton vicar in believing that the rural song book needed revision. Their names, in serried ranks, fill eight pages of octavo (all titled patrons being grouped under each letter of the alphabet, and divided by a "blank space" from the mere squirearchy). It does not follow, of course, that these ladies and gentlemen unanimously approved of our author's suggestions for the regulation of popular ditties—suggestions, by the way, which Mr. Plumptre found in Patrick Colquhoun's "Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis." He would have the authorities regulate public amusements for the purpose of giving a right bias to the dispositions of the people. "How superior this," exclaims the good man, "to the odious practice of besotting themselves in ale-houses, hatching seditious and treasonable designs, or engaged in pursuits of the vilest profligacy, destructive to health and morals." In the next place, the common ballad-singers of the streets should be constrained to give a better turn to the minds of the lowest classes, teaching them loyalty patriotism, and obedience. There is also a hint to put the ballad press under censorship. Our excellent vicar had, no doubt, the best intentions in the world, and would have rejoiced in a peasantry made virtuous by policemen; but where, save, perhaps, in the seclusion of his study, could he have imagined that Englishmen would submit to the necessary operation? Mr. Plumptre was much better employed in compiling a virtuous song book and sending it forth clothed in the beauty of innocence to show his dissolute parishioners a better way.

To this collection are admitted only such pieces as promote the fear of God and the honouring of the King; also songs on the seasons, circumstances, incidents, objects, and characters of rural life; soldiers' and sailors' songs; some few drinking songs of a kind as mild as, I trust, was the Hinxtton village brew; songs on the passions, as friendship, love and marriage, contentment; and songs which contain any generous sentiments or give instruction in any way.

Looking through the pages of this book with a purpose, I detect a fine old Conservative flavour—an eager desire to convince the "lower classes" that everything is for the best in the best of all possible worlds. The author or compiler does not stop at a little in carrying out his design. He is feverishly anxious for "Church and King," and for that state of content enjoined by the Catechism. I wonder if the Hinxtton yokels had their tongue in their cheek as they joined in a ditty, called "The happy days of good King George," especially in this stanza:—

'Tis true our Taxes are become a burden very heavy, Sir,
And much we dread the Assessor's face when'er he comes to levy, Sir;
But we should roll in luxury, without some check in trading, Sir,
And, like a ship, the State sails on the better for the lading, Sir.

The vicar, of course, puts in a good word for his Church:

Our Church is good, her faith is pure, her rites, in happy plainness, Sir,
'Twixt Popish pageantry she keeps and Puritanic meanness, Sir,
Tho' firm her polity to guard, each sect we deem a brother, Sir,
The King her nursing father is, the Queen her nursing mother, Sir.

All to the tune of "Ally Croaker," which seems decidedly inappropriate to a case of such marked optimism.

I saw, the other day, that a popular vocalist had added to his repertory a song called "The Happy Farmer." There is a "Happy Farmer" in the Plumptre collection, probably that about to be revived. It presents a pretty, though, I am afraid, largely imaginative picture of rural peace and beauty. Thus, for example, sings the contented agriculturalist :

My house is convenient and whitened all o'er,
An arbor of jessamine fronting the door;
My flourishing orchard abundantly bears
Fine plumbs, golden pippins, and bergamot pears.
The rose, the sweet pink, in my garden are found,
Where dainties of health for my table abound;
My mind, when fatigued, here I often unbend,
Peruse a good book, or converse with a friend.

Where flocks and large herds in my pastures are seen,
The crows, or daisy, bespangle the green;
I view my gay lambs nimbly frolic and play,
Whilst under their feet spring the beauties of May.
Whilst joyful observing the flourishing corn,
The blackbird and linnet sing loud on the thorn,
Nor would I my peaceful employments lay down,
Or quit my green fields for the cares of a crown.

All very nice, but was there ever a happy farmer? One thing is quite sure: if this picture of the rent-payer ninety years ago were shown in our villages at the present day, the actual farmer's boot would go through it as a gross affront to the cherished traditions of his class.

Soldiers were wanted in the reign of good King George, and loyal Mr. Plumtre proved equal to the occasion with a song inculcating very cheerful sentiments on this point. It is styled "The Flowers of our Parish"—the volunteers, to wit—and begins with a remonstrance :

Ye Wives and ye Mothers, ah! cease your lamenting,
Nor fill Hinxton streets with your sighs and your tears,
Ah, why, gentle dames, would you thus be preventing
The Flowers of our Parish turning out Volunteers?
Ah, no; rather smile, be no longer affrighted,
And banish at once all your sighs and your fears,
'Tis rather a cause that your hearts be delighted
When the Flowers of our Parish prepare for the wars.

Excellent Mrs. Hannah More contributes a "Ploughman's Ditty," which puts most exemplary sentiments into the mouth of Hodge. A favourite device in this book, by the way, is to make the "pore workin' man" a channel for opinions and feelings that smack strongly of the vicarage study. Sings the ploughman :

I've my Church, too, to save,
And I'll go to my grave,
In defence of a Church that's the best, Sir;
I've my King, too, God bless him,
Let no man oppress him,
For none has he ever oppressed, Sir.

* * * * *

Now do but reflect
What I have to protect,
Then doubt if to fight I shall choose, Sir,
King, Church, babes and wife,
Laws, liberty, life;
Now tell me I've nothing to lose, Sir.

The bucolic landscape seen from the study window is always radiant, but our reverend friend admits that the sailor may sometimes encounter bad weather, and even pleads for poor Jack:

Why should the man who knows not fear
In peace be then neglected?
Behold him move along the pier,
Pale, meagre, and dejected!
Behold him begging for employ,
Behold him disregarded,
Then view the anguish in his eye
And say are Tars rewarded.

This song was written for Mr. Plumtre by "a Gentleman of Liverpool"; but the vicar's round hand may be detected in "Ne'er be drunk again." Hinxton is bent on temperance (not total abstinence, oh, no!) and sings:

When with good fellows we meet,
A pint apiece, not more,
'Twill let us stand on our feet,
While others lie drunk on the floor.
Then, prithee, go fill us a quart,
And let it be ale in grain;
'Twill cherish and comfort the heart,
But we'll ne'er be drunk again.

Did Hinxton, I wonder, never drink "t'other pint" when the vicar's back was turned?

Our well-meaning parson provided songs for club meetings (though shrinking, good soul, from the word club, as suggesting the Jacobins), for swains choosing a wife, for weddings, and even—cunningly persuasive one, this—for persons afraid of vaccination:

Long time the Small Pox o'er the world has been raging,
Sweeping thousands and thousands away to the grave,
But Providence, kindly, its rigour assuaging,
Has pointed the means from his fury to save.
For our own useful Cow a distemper has often,
No infection it gives; ne'er was life by it lost one,
Yet this will the rage of Small Pox always soften,
For none e'er have Small Pox after this from the Cow.

Fancy a rustic singing, "For our own useful cow," &c. No, you cannot fancy it, and I fear that Mr. Plumtre's labouring parishioners did not abandon "For it's my delight on a shiny night" or "Drink deep, my hearties."

X.

FRENCH MUSICAL CRITICISM.

THE action of the directors of the Grand Opera at Paris in giving a free performance of Madame Augusta Holmès's new opera, "La Montagne Noire," has not unnaturally provoked a good deal of discussion in the French press. These gratuitous performances are a regular institution at the French Opera, but, as a rule, they are given at the State-subsidized theatres in connection with the national galas, and form a parallel to the circenses, or free exhibitions in the arena, given to the populace of Imperial Rome. From the point of view of the direction these entertainments are exceedingly unpopular. The audience assemble hours before the opening of the doors, equipped with provisions of all sorts, and the state of the house next day is something indescribable, the floor being littered in every part with fragments of bread and meat, greasy pieces of paper, and other relics of this gigantic pic-nic. The pieces chosen for performance, moreover, are always of the most hackneyed order. But the gratuitous performance of a new work, which has been rather severely handled by the critics, is a new departure of an unprecedented character; the decision of the directors has not unnaturally given rise to a great deal of speculation as to their motive; and a writer in the Gaulois has furnished a solution to the mystery which is not only extremely plausible, but also throws a good deal of light on the question of French musical criticism generally. According to M. Thiébaud, the writer in question, the directors would never have adopted this course unless they had been anxious to escape from the tyranny of the coterie of professional critics whose chief aim seems to be to wreck all native compositions, and to substitute for the verdict of a few prejudiced experts the artistic Referendum of the entire public. This select circle of critics, according to the writer, are fanatically Wagnerian in their preferences, and no composer who does not denationalise his genius and adopt the most extravagantly Teutonic modes of expression has any chance of escaping the "batteries of Krupp guns installed in the bastions of musical criticism."

Whether M. Thiébaud is justified in ascribing such omnipotence to the Wagnerian coterie in Paris or not, there can be no doubt that Wagner has an exceedingly powerful and influential following in that city, and in view of the attitude adopted towards him thirty years ago, it is impossible to feel much sympathy for the alleged victims of what is, perhaps, one of the most curious instances of the irony of fate in all the annals of musical art. It was Wagner's misfortune, in 1861, that he was supported by an aristocratic rather than an artistic set in Paris. But it would be a great mistake to imagine that the chances of "Tannhäuser" were wrecked solely by the vulgar prejudices of a Philistine clique. Some of the acutest critics of the time were ranged against him, notably Berlioz, who made no secret of his satisfaction at the fiasco of "Tannhäuser." And now by one of Time's most freakish revenges it has come about that the popularity of Wagner in Paris has proved the great obstacle in the way of Berlioz gaining a hearing at the Opera, although the commanding merit of Berlioz's operas has met with signal recognition in Germany at the hands of a great Wagnerian conductor! Hardly less amazing, in view of the charges of Wagneromania brought against the French critics of to-day, is the strange case of Bizet. For it is a notorious fact that that most typically French composer was accused again and again of Wagnerian proclivities, and that these absurd accusations materially interfered with his chances of obtaining a fair hearing. If Bizet had lived twenty years later he would apparently have been condemned for not being Wagnerian enough! According to M. Thiébaud, since the opening of the new Opera House in 1876, about forty new works by French composers have been produced, but he adds: "I cannot recall a single one which has escaped the hostility of the high and mighty Wagnerian coterie." After protesting that he has no desire to belittle the genius of Wagner himself, and that he frankly admits the immense services rendered by the new criticism in purging opera of the vicious conventionalities of the Italian school, he continues as follows: "Granting all this, was it necessary to make a holocaust of all French works? Did the cult of the new divinity demand so many human sacrifices? The fact is that it has been left for the public to resuscitate from the grave to which they had been consigned by our critics, all those noble works which have afterwards charmed countless hearers, and, in spite of all opposition, are the greatest favourites in our national repertory. This was the case with 'Faust,' slain on its first apparition by our critics, which was welcomed by kindlier hearers abroad and returned to us with a new lease of life. This was the case with 'Carmen,' produced in England, if I mistake not, by Mr. Mapleson. Then there was Reyer's 'Sigurd,' which had to take refuge, like an outlaw, in Belgium; 'Salammbô,' which met with a similar fate; Massenet's 'Hérodiade,' imploring the hospitality of Brussels; 'Samson et Dalila,' welcomed in Germany, to say nothing of 'Gwendoline' and so many others which have come back to us from abroad." The explanation of this strange state of affairs is, according to the writer, simply the murderous hostility of the French press to anything native, and it is apparently a peculiarity of long standing. For when the Venetian Ambassador, in 1610, was rendering an account of his mission to France, he wrote as follows: "This nation is neither avaricious, nor brutal, nor given to murder or robbery, except against its own government and against itself. They are infatuated about everything that is foreign, and if any fashion or crime is imported from abroad, they immediately adopt and eulogise it." "Hence," continues M. Thiébaud, "it is, no doubt, thanks to this ancient peculiarity of ours, that French operas, in order to find favour with our exceedingly fastidious critics, must come back to us from abroad. Will the plébiscite system counteract the effect of this little oligarchy? That remains to be proved. Anyhow, the experience will be most curious."

One may admit that there is a good deal of inconsistency and exaggeration in the article which we have summarized, and yet there is obviously a certain substratum of fact in M. Thiébaud's strictures. More than that, there is a great deal in what he says which we may lay to heart for our own enlightenment and profit. As Sir Alexander Mackenzie judiciously remarked the other day, if we are to have a national school of English music, the efforts of native composers claim a sympathetic and encouraging treatment from the press as well as the public. The wholesale condemnation of English music affected by some writers is just as unfair and undesirable as the vulgar and offensive abuse of Mendelssohn and Dr. Joachim, to which we have been treated recently in the columns of a leading weekly journal.

For the Leeds Musical Festival, which is to take place on October 2 and three following days, chorus rehearsals are now in full progress in five different centres, under four chorus-masters. It will be remembered that the comparative weakness of the chorus of 1889 was sought to be rectified by employing a wider area of selection. This policy proved so satisfactory in 1892 that it has been continued, and to some degree extended, in arranging for the coming Festival. The total number of 341 voices—which may possibly be slightly augmented—is divided thus: Leeds contributes 128, of whom eighty are representatives of the Leeds Philharmonic Society; from Bradford the Festival Choral Society sends forty and the Old Choral Society sixteen; the Huddersfield and Halifax Societies contribute fifty-six each, and at Dewsbury, the local Choral Society's thirty is augmented by fifteen voices from Batley. The task of training these various bodies is in the hands of Mr. Alfred Broughton, Mr. W. H. Garland, Mr. John Bowling, and Mr. G. H. Hirst. The component parts of the chorus met for the first time, on the 16th ult., in the Leeds Town Hall, where Sir Arthur Sullivan took them through Beethoven's Mass in D, which promises to be a leading feature of the Festival, as it was in 1883, and portions of "The Messiah." "The Messiah," strange to say, will be almost a novelty as regards the Leeds Festival, not having been in a Festival programme since 1874. The remaining features of the programme, so far as it is at present settled, have already appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES. Its completion may be expected in a few days, and the chief additions will probably be Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," a portion of Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," with which it is intended to conclude the Festival, as in 1889.

turning over of programmes, the furtive glances at watches, and the aside whispers of 'sweet sixteen' to 'expectant five-and-twenty,' I am quite sure that half the much-expressed delight in classical and scientific music is nothing more than 'side,' though I can understand well enough the overwhelming influences of the dramatic music of the great writers of opera when coupled with the glamour of the stage and the spell of the human voice." Musical people may not all listen to the C minor Symphony with the ears of Berlioz, but they are sufficiently agreed on its character to recognise that Beethoven's music is capable of all the expressive and emotional suggestiveness with which Berlioz credited it, while in the more technical, or at least intellectual, feature of design, it is admittedly about as near perfection as it is possible to imagine. To put it plainly, a considerable proportion of even educated people have no more appreciation of the capabilities of music than a child of ten has of poetry. They as much prefer "Daisy Bell" to the C minor Symphony as the child would think "Old Mother Hubbard" preferable to "Paradise Lost." But the misfortune is that they are more inclined to doubt the sincerity of those who do admire Beethoven than to recognise their own incapacity.

ALTHOUGH the life-work of the late Professor John Stuart Blackie has exerted, and it may be added will exert, its chief influence upon questions unconnected with music, yet his labours for Scottish song and his love of the art that makes the world akin permit and indeed demand a tribute to his memory in these columns. The vitality and warm-heartedness of his spirit, dashed as it was with the recklessness of the Celtic temperament, are perhaps nowhere more discernible than in his metrical writings. Those who heard him lecture on art matters may esteem themselves privileged. Wit and wisdom, and praise of love and song, were mingled in these discourses in a manner that delightfully blended the enthusiastic exuberance of youth with the aphorisms of matured experience. On June 5, 1890, the Professor was invited to speak on the life and work of Goethe at the Annual Meeting and Conversation of the English Goethe Society. With springy step, grasping his faithful plaid and soft felt hat, neither of which the attendants had been able to induce him to relinquish, the Professor came down the long gallery, and, mounting the small platform at the end, held the attention of his audience for over an hour while he spoke in colloquial fashion on a variety of subjects more or less connected with the German poet and scientist. Some of the remarks referring to criticism are worthy of record. Apparently struck by the comparatively youthful appearance of a member of the press—who was striving to take down some of his words—and looking straight at him he said: "No young men should be critics. True criticism is an impartial judgment after careful consideration all round, and can only proceed from accumulated knowledge and life-long experience: then" (and a world of significance was imparted to this little word) "it is worth having, and valuable. . . . The critic's duty is to inculcate and develop reverence for the beautiful and noble, not to go about finding fault. That is the work of Mephistopheles—and he is a poor creature." Later on the speaker declared that, "Want of reverence is the fault of the age; it debases and debauches all that is noble. Without reverence for the works of the past and productions of the present, a man will never do anything great." Good words these, and worthy of remembrance by our young composers. With pessimism the genial

In one of Mr. Herbert Spencer's works he takes as an illustration a typical person of low æsthetic susceptibility, who listens with impatience to a Sonata, and on its conclusion asks for "Polly put the kettle on," as being "something that people can understand." The philosopher goes on to explain the case: "On contemplating his mental state, you see that along with absence of the ability to grasp complex musical combinations there goes no consciousness of the absence—there is no suspicion that such complex combinations exist, and that other persons have faculties for appreciating them." A still more striking illustration of this tendency to regard one's own powers of comprehension as the only true standard is afforded by a paragraph in a column contributed to the Yorkshire Weekly Post by a well-known journalist, Mr. Joseph Hutton. Mr. Hutton, it seems, had attended a recent Philharmonic Concert when Beethoven's C minor Symphony was played. Berlioz had discovered in this famous work "all Beethoven's secret griefs, his concentrated rages, his reveries, full of sad heavy business" ("pleines d'un accablement si triste" is the original, by the way), "his nocturnal visions and bursts of enthusiasm, the fury of Othello and the dumb sorrow of Romeo." Mr. Hutton, however, could find none of this in Beethoven's music, so he is driven to the conclusion that Berlioz was hypnotised by Beethoven. He proceeds: "I love music, and have a cosmopolitan taste, but the complex orchestration, the strange disconnected passages with their very brief suggestions of melody, gave me no insight into Beethoven's reveries and rages, nor did they expose to my mind anything of his secret griefs. I believe if the Allegro con brio had gradually modulated into a phrase or two of 'Home, sweet home,' or 'The Hunt is up,' or 'The Wedding March' of Wagner or Mendelssohn, that part of the audience which pretends its hypnotic absorption would have awakened up into enthusiasm. Looking around at the patient faces, and noting the Professor had no patience. "My dear sir, pessimism is a habit of thinking or a frame of mind that leads a man to fix his eyes on the accidental faults or disagreeable points of any object or objects relatively to himself, and to infer from them, by a hasty conclusion, that accidental faults are the essence of all things and express the dominant character of the universe. A pessimistic rhymist would write of the rose:—

I hate the flower that wears a thorn,
It frets my dainty nose;
Sooner of smell would I be shorn,
Than smell the thorny rose.

IN another column will be found a letter from an Eastbourne correspondent on the subject of a paper read recently by Mr. Henry Davey before the Sussex section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians. It was entitled "The recent discoveries in Early English Music," and as it included a statement that "polyphony was invented (sic) by the Englishman, John Dunstable," we do not wonder that our correspondent—speaking for the Sussex section of the Society—should write of Mr. Davey as having "quite astonished us all by what he said." For our own part, however, we are even more "astonished" to find that the Sussex section of the Society accepted so preposterous a statement without rising in a body and asking Mr. Davey whether he knew what he was talking about. Everyone possessing even a superficial acquaintance with the history of music during the Middle Ages knows that polyphonic music existed as early as the eleventh century, and that dozens of examples, in two, three, and four parts, dating from the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries, are extant. As Dunstable's career as a composer dates from about the beginning of the fifteenth century, it is obvious that all statements as to his "invention" of a thing which had been in existence for four centuries (at the very least) belong to the myths, not to the facts of musical history. Did no member of the Sussex section of the Society recall the existence of "Sumer is iucumen in" and other pieces of the same date (portions of which are printed in the article "Score" in Grove's Dictionary), which show conclusively that the art of writing music in independent parts was well understood in England at least a hundred and fifty years before Dunstable was born?

BUT is it not sufficiently obvious to any mind with the least pretensions to scientific training that to speak of such a thing as polyphony as being the "invention" of any one man is altogether absurd? As well speak of the "invention" of syntax. In the development of polyphony, as of every other product of nature or art, the laws of evolution have operated. All progress is gradual, and, but for "missing-links," the successive steps of that progress would always be traceable. Naturally, the steps of men of genius are larger than those of their fellow workers, and they hasten progress accordingly. That Dunstable was such a man is evident, not only from his music, but also from the fact that he is the acknowledged head of the school which included Dufay, Binchois, and other composers, and which enormously improved on the methods of writing part-music then in vogue. That improvement can be clearly seen by anyone who will compare the compositions produced by the best masters of the fourteenth century—say Landino or J. Florentinus—with those of Dunstable and Dufay. But there is a slight difference between acknowledging the advance made by these men and saying that they "invented polyphony." Polyphony, even as it existed before Dunstable, was a highly complex thing containing many "inventions"—such as passing-notes, suspensions, contrary motion, imitations, and so on. Each of these things had an "inventor," no doubt (i.e., some one musician was the first to use it), and the "invention" of polyphony must therefore be credited to men whose united lives spread over about six hundred years.

By the premature death of Mr. Corney Grain, the world of music, as well as the world at large, has sustained a very severe loss. For music, though a divine art, has many false worshippers; and Mr. Corney Grain rendered excellent service by his constant exposure of the affectations, the absurdities, and the charlatanries by which incompetent amateurs and incompetent professionals bring that divine art into undeserved disrepute. His satire, if it erred at all, erred on the side of excessive leniency, though it should be remembered that it is almost impossible for a satirist to exaggerate his travesties of the fervid folly of the erotic ballad-monger. Be that as it may, his musical illustrations and "skits" were all the more effective from the fact that they were thoroughly artistic and workmanlike. Mr. Corney Grain was, unlike most of his rivals and imitators, an excellent pianist, and his musical mimicry was often exceedingly subtle, and ingenious. He had not only a really keen appreciation of good music, but a practical acquaintance with it. One of his earliest appearances in public, as we have been informed by a correspondent, was at a Concert given some thirty years ago, at which, together with a well-known amateur, he played an arrangement for four hands of Beethoven's Septet. It is difficult at the moment to measure the full significance of his untimely removal, which, coinciding so closely with that of his esteemed partner, Mr. Alfred Reed, and of the latter's mother, Mrs. German Reed, has seriously imperilled the continuity of an entertainment honourably conspicuous from its commencement for its happy mixture of mirth and refinement.

WE heartily congratulate Melbourne on its addition to the rapidly increasing number of cities possessing a Municipal School of Music. In December last the Senate of Melbourne University, in conjunction with Mr. Marshall-Hall, the Ormond Professor of Music, formulated a scheme, the result of which is that, as we write, Melbourne has a "University Conservatorium of Music"—we should have preferred a less German-sounding title than "Conservatorium"—which, judging from the prospectus, courteously sent us by Mr. G. C. Allan, gives every promise of exerting a healthy and stimulative influence upon the progress of music in this beautiful city. Nothing is of more vital importance to the earnest student of music than a systematic training under competent and experienced teachers, possessing wide views of their art; and the advantages derived from association with congenial minds, and constant life in an artistic atmosphere, can scarcely be over-estimated. Glancing at the list of subjects forming the "complete course," it is satisfactory to notice the importance attached to "Form and Analysis," "History and Aesthetics of Music," and "Interpretation of Works"; for the success of composers and executants will in the future undoubtedly more and more depend upon music being to them a language, and a language of which they have clear historical knowledge and can command its utterance with understanding. Professor Marshall-Hall, who will be the Principal, has in the past shown himself to be a man of much originality of thought and independence of spirit, and his procedures in the important academical position he now holds will be watched with widespread interest.

THE forty-third annual report, now before us, of the Choir Benevolent Fund, shows this valuable society to be in a most prosperous condition. That it should be so is eminently satisfactory. To quote from the preface, "the design of this Fund is to secure a provision for aged or invalid members of the society, to guarantee a fixed sum payable at the decease of members to their widows and children, and also to afford to the said widows and children temporary assistance in time of need or affliction." These objects are the more laudable because they are directed to aid an underpaid class of musicians, the majority of whom have but little means of providing for the future of those dear to them. It is to be regretted that the number of lay-clerks enrolled as members is not larger, for membership practically gives an insurance which increases in value each year; but presumably even the guinea a year subscription is a prohibitory sum to many, or at least an obligation that limited means cause hesitancy to incur. It is satisfactory, therefore, to find the musical public supporting the scheme, for the more rapidly the Fund increases, the sooner will it be possible to give guaranteed pensions to aged members, an object which, remembering how much of the flower of their life has been devoted to rendering our church services impressive, should appeal not in vain to the generosity of all churchmen.

THE appointment of the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck as Precentor of Westminster Abbey is one which cannot fail to give general satisfaction. Dr. Troutbeck has already had experience in a similar capacity in Manchester Cathedral, and his musical and literary attainments are known throughout the world in connection with the numerous translations which for many years he has supplied for Messrs. Novello's editions of oratorios, operas, and cantatas. As editor of the Cathedral Paragraph Psalter and Westminster Abbey Hymn Book, and part-editor of the Cathedral Psalter and the Westminster Abbey Chant Book, he is entitled to speak with authority on the much-vexed question of chanting and on the subject of hymnology. It is unquestionable that no more suitable occupant for so important a post could have been found.

THE fortunate recovery of Purcell's autograph copy of his instrumental Te Deum and Jubilate has enabled Dr. Bridge to prepare a new edition of this interesting work, which Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. are now publishing. It will be found that Dr. Boyce's version is very far from being a true representation of Purcell. Not only is this version about a third longer than the original, but the work is broken up into many movements, alterations are made without any reason, and, worst of all, some of Purcell's most beautiful harmonies are expunged. Dr. Bridge intends to produce the work in its true form at one of his Gresham Lectures, on May 21. Sir Joseph Barnby will provide a large chorus and orchestra and conduct the work. We are glad also to hear that the Purcell commemoration will not impossibly assume the dimensions of a two-days Musical Festival. An attempt to organise the scheme on a large scale is, at any rate, being contemplated, and deserves the fullest support of music-lovers. A performance of "Dido and Æneas" will probably be given by the students of the Royal College of Music.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

MUSIC-TEACHERS in Hampstead appear to be cutting under each other so as very nearly to have reached the bottom. "A Young Lady" offers to take additional pupils at the rate of sixpence a lesson!

A CONTRIBUTOR to the Bury Guardian has furnished that paper with short notices of the "Twelve greatest Composers of all Times." Under each name is a brief list of works, intended, no doubt, to be representative, followed by a paragraph headed "Features," in which the master's characteristics are summarised within the space of eight or ten lines. Appended are a few samples by which to judge all:—

BACH.

Pieces.—Preludes, Fugues, Six Sonatas for Violin and Piano, Grand Mass in B minor, Sacred Cantata, French Suites.

Features.—His counterpoint was unapproachable. He created an entirely new vocal style based on instrumental principles. His melody, harmony, and periods are all of one mould. He has a very wonderful unity of ideas. In his chorales he often makes use of the old church modes, but the harmonic principle is predominant in his works.

BETHOVEN.

Pieces.—The Sonatas, The Opera of Fidelio, Mass in C, Ninth Symphony, Mount of Olives, Thè Concertos.

Features.—Individuality of each piece and each movement. His melodies often consist wholly or mainly of consecutive notes. He used variations to a very great extent. His favourite change in the keys was to the sub-mediant or third below.

MOZART.

Pieces.—Twelfth Mass, Don Giovanni, Rondo in A minor, Figaro, The Zaubergeflöte, Requiem Mass.

Features.—The technique is easy, they contain no mere biavura (sic) writing, the passages being for the most part founded on the scale or on broken chords. In variations he employs for the most part the melismatic style. His themes were taken from well-known pieces.

Comment would hardly improve the effect of these selections upon the reader's mind.

FROM a paper read in North-Western England: "Mrs. B.—, although suffering from a cold, sang the florid air, 'O Mio Femanda' (which brings out Donizetti in his gayest mood) in splendid style, and was even more successful in 'Ciascumlo Dice,' by the same composer."—"The quartettes were exceedingly well sung, that 'ensemble' being obtained which is the 'bête noir' of quartette parties."

MISS E. DYKE, of 34, Bridge Road West, Battersea, has sent me the following poem, the publication of which may be of service to song-composers wanting "words for music":

THE ORGANIST.

(Copyright.)

The worshippers have left the church, yet am I not alone,
For One still listens to the prayer breathed in each organ tone;

Somewhere within the church He stands, in garments long and white,

His gracious eyes on me are bent, His hand is raised to bless,

My rapt soul faints beneath the weight of all His tenderness!
Although my fingers touch the keys, my feet the pedals press,

I play no longer, but, instead, some spirit strong and sweet—
And in a stream the music flows about His shining feet.

FROM a correspondent: "A friend of mine informed me the other day that he was having lessons from a clergyman in the neighbourhood of Crewe for the small sum of a halfpenny a week, the lesson consisting of two hours." This is too absurd. Either the writer's friend has hoaxed him, or the arrangement with the clergyman has been made to avoid the charge of giving and receiving quite gratuitous lessons.

HERE is a poetical tribute to Paderewski, forwarded by "J. J. E.," and entitled—

HUMORESQUE À L'ANTIQUE.

(TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN.)

Sure, the West wind o'er the waves
Holds less sweet despot's sway
Than you o'er the ivory keys,
Paderewski! When you play
Time himself might pause to hear,
Love might lend an envious ear.

Very thunderbolts of Sound
Crash—at your impetuous Will,
Liquid pianissimo,
Limpid as a mountain rill,
Softer than the South wind's breath,
Sweet as Love and Strong as Death!

I have heard your creamy Runs,
Pearled Lightning, magic strung;
I have heard your golden tones,
Sweetest Love songs ever sung,
I have heard—and Memory
Echoes them in Dreams to me.

MRS. T. B. CHURCH (let her name have honourable mention) has been Organist of St. Mark's, Grand Rapids, for fifty years, and although the Jubilee was not a unique event, as the American Churchman believes, it certainly was rare enough to call for special acts of recognition. Besides a "reception," a performance of sacred music was given in St. Mark's. At the reception, Mrs. Church was presented with a cheque for 1,000 dollars, while the vestry set aside a pew for her use in retirement. Other honours were bestowed and there was a general disposition to say in words—also in actions, which speak louder—"Well done, good and faithful servant!"

I REGRET to read that Mr. Riseley, Organist of Bristol Cathedral, again has a cause of difference with the Dean and Chapter. The particulars have not yet appeared, but it seems that Mr. Riseley has appealed to the Bishop, and that the matter is about to be officially investigated. Quarrels are unpleasant, but it is better to bring the dispute to a head, and settle it once for all, than to let a sense of grievance smoulder.

ACCORDING to the Musical Courier, England "can be generous to an artist, even when he is dead." I have long suspected that myself, and quite anticipated that the death of Rubinstein, who did not love England, would be followed by a revival of his music. This having come about, the Courier declares that the unmusical country has taken her revenge on him in a manner which my contemporary proceeds to illustrate by means of a good story: "This reminds us of the dire revenge which Brother Krehbiel, of the Tribune, took on Brother Ben Woolf, of the Boston Herald. Brother Woolf wrote a long diatribe against the New York musical critics and said that they were an insufficiently informed and generally incapable lot. Not very long after that Brother Ben produced an operetta called 'Westward, Ho!' Thereupon, Brother Krehbiel got on a train, went over to Boston, attended the production, and telegraphed three-quarters of a column of favourable criticism to the Tribune. Brother Ben had said Brother Krehbiel did not know anything, and Brother Krehbiel responded by saying that Brother Ben's operetta was good. That left Brother Ben in a quagmire of the worst kind. Now England, having been told by Rubinstein that she has no musical taste, suddenly conceives a great regard for the Russian's music. But Rubinstein is dead, and so he misses the gentle sarcasm of the thing, after all."

WITH reference to Lablache, whose portrait was given in THE MUSICAL TIMES for March, a Cricklewood correspondent writes, as one of those who saw and heard the great artist: "It may be of interest to record that in 'Il Barbiere,' in the Singing-Lesson scene, the favourite basso, unassisted, briskly drove, or ran, a grand piano from the far back of the stage to the front, doing the little piece of 'business' with the utmost ease. In the same opera, he produced another comic and thoroughly at-home-with-his-audience effect, also, by interpolating an aside to us, in broken English, as a criticism on the lover's ardour. 'Full-ish mann!' he cried, sending a light and merry laugh through all the box tiers and from pit to gallery."

JOSEPH BENNETT.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

WITH a guarantee fund larger than ever, and a strong subscription list, the doyen of our musical organisations began its eighty-third season on the 7th ult.—no doubt in a cheerful spirit begotten by full assurance of success. We have now to discuss two Concerts out of the promised seven. At each of these a new work was produced, that heard on the above-mentioned date being an Overture, "From the Scottish Highlands," by Mr. Frederic Lamond; while, on the 20th, Professor Stanford, as both composer and conductor, presented a Symphony entitled "L'Allegro ed il Penseroso." These novelties are not for comparison, but it may be said that the difference between somewhat raw youth and full maturity was strikingly exemplified by them. In the Overture there are the extravagance and crudity of the one; in the Symphony, the artistic restraint and judicious workmanship of the other. But we must not condemn Mr. Lamond's work because it shows the characteristics of his years and inexperience. Time will remove these in all probability, and the important question is whether the young Scottish composer's music gives evidence of capacity for time to develop. We think there is such evidence. The work shows Mr. Lamond's power of melody in a favourable light, and proves also that he is endowed with fancy and imagination in no mean degree. These are precious qualities, possession of which, while laying a young musician under no common responsibility, should encourage him to go forward with confidence. Let Mr. Lamond now seek to discipline himself; to check the too great exuberance of his style, and to avoid becoming the servant instead of the master of the means supplied by the modern orchestra. It is not always necessary to use the heavy batteries of percussion, in the employment of which there is strong temptation to mere noise and proportionate risk of defect in style. "From the Scottish Highlands" evidently has an underlying story, but Mr. Lamond does not reveal it, which is a pity, because of loss of interest, and also because some parts of the work cannot well be understood save as referring to particular events or circumstances. The Overture had a rather cold reception, with which the omission just pointed out may have had something to do. The Symphony at this Concert was Beethoven's Fifth, and the Concerto, Mendelssohn's in G minor for pianoforte. With the last-named was given Weber's "Concertstück," so that Mr. Emil Sauer, the pianist of the evening, had the pleasant task of associating himself with two old favourites. He played both with wonderful facility and correctness, if not, in every part, with depth of expression. Madame Sapiro was the vocalist. We scarcely need add that Sir A. C. Mackenzie resumed his post as Conductor, or that he had a cordial greeting, or that he did his work well.

Professor Stanford's new Symphony is not a thing to be judged off-hand, and while, so to speak, it is flying past the observer. Besides, it would be a poor compliment to speak with an air of authority after one glance at a work upon which an eminent musician has exhausted the resources of his art. "L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso" must be heard again, and studied on paper, if haply that is possible, before such an attitude can safely be assumed by critics, unless, indeed, they wish to pass as mere recorders of impressions. But, while reserving definite opinions regarding the Symphony as a whole, we may say that a large part of it appealed to one's sense of satisfaction, by the charm and propriety of the themes, and their skilful as well as picturesque treatment. Everywhere could be seen the deft hand of the practised musician, going straight to the point and working out results with ease and certainty. Our feeling is that the Symphony will largely improve upon acquaintance and take its place among Mr. Stanford's best works. It had a very cordial reception, and a good performance under the composer's bâton. Other features in the Concert were Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, dashing played by Mr. Dawson; the Overture to "Les Deux Journées" and Chopin's Third Scherzo. The orchestral works were, of course, conducted by Sir A. C. Mackenzie. Madame Sapiro was again the vocalist, in the absence of Madame Ella Russell.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

GOUDON'S "Redemption" is now annually performed at the Albert Hall on Ash Wednesday, and the interpretation on February 27 had many points of excellence. Mr. Andrew Black sang the part of the Redeemer with the fullest measure of expression that could be desired, and in the other solos Miss Esther Paliser, Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Charles Copland were entirely satisfactory. The choruses were rendered in the most forcible manner under the direction of Sir Joseph Barnby, and the most sacred work of the deceased French master has seldom been heard under more favourable conditions.

A disappointment had to be endured by the subscribers in respect to the next Concert, which took place on the 21st ult. Dvorák's picturesque cantata "The Spectre's Bride" was to have been given for the first time in the Albert Hall, but owing to bad attendance at rehearsals, in consequence of the prevailing epidemic, Sir Joseph Barnby wisely decided to postpone the performance, especially having regard to the fact that Mr. Henschel's "Stabat Mater" was also to be presented for the first time to a London audience. This work, it will be remembered, was produced at the Birmingham Festival in October last, and was moderately well received. There is ground for the assertion that at Festival time a certain glamour prevails, so that new works create a more favourable impression than they do subsequently under ordinary Concert-room conditions. But there is something to be said on the other side, for towards the close of a heavy Festival week weariness is apt to set in, and justice can, therefore, scarcely be done to important novelties. This we imagine was the cause of the lukewarm expressions of opinion concerning Mr. Henschel's "Stabat Mater." Certainly those who heard it at Birmingham and again at the Albert Hall were far better pleased with it on the latter occasion. It would be invidious to institute comparisons with this work and the versions of Rossini and Dvorák, for there are no points of resemblance between the three settings of the old Latin hymn. Mr. Henschel's style is his own, and every musician must acknowledge that in the melodious contralto solo and chorus "Eia Mater," the graceful soprano and tenor duet "Fac me vere," the Berlioz-like "Inflamatus," and the lovely passage where the harp streams in at the words "Paradisi Gloria," he has been eminently successful in his treatment of the words. That the audience appreciated the masterly part-writing and general effectiveness of the music was proved by the enthusiastic applause, Mr. Henschel, who took the bass part himself, having to rise and bow his thanks several times in the course of the performance in response to the applause from the audience and the choir. Mrs. Henschel, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Mr. Edward Lloyd completed an admirable quartet of principal vocalists. Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" followed, and, as a matter of course, was well interpreted; soloists, orchestra, and chorus being perfectly familiar with their duties.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

ON February 28 Mr. Henschel gave his eighth Concert, for which a judiciously devised programme had been prepared. "Classical" music was represented by Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Wagner by the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," and two songs; and modern tendencies found expression through Dvorák's latest Symphony, "From the New World," and Goldmark's Overture to "Sappho," which we were given to understand was repeated "by desire." Wagner's songs—"Der Engel" and "Attente"—were interpreted by Mrs. Henschel, who brought to the pleasant task her usual charm of style and perfect appropriateness of expression; and the Scottish Orchestra was responsible for the instrumental pieces already named, and was also heard in the Scherzo from Scharwenka's Concerto in B flat minor, the solo part in which was most artistically played by Madame Augarde. Dvorák's Symphony was received with a heartiness that plainly indicated its growing popularity and was also a well deserved tribute to the orchestra. A finer performance than that of the slow movement of this work on this occasion we cannot hope to hear. As regards phrasing, shading, and indeed every refinement of the conductor's difficult art, it was worthy to rank with the highest achievements in this direction of modern times. It should be said, moreover, that this phenomenal excellence was due mainly to the wind instrument players, who in the exquisitely beautiful movement in question have the lion's share of the work. Of Goldmark's Overture we have already given our opinion. A second hearing served but to deepen the impression made by the first and duly recorded in these columns, and the net result is that we do not wish to be called upon to adjudicate a third time!

The ninth Concert ended the season and introduced a new violinist, of whom it is probable critical pens will have much to write in the near—and perhaps distant—future, and a Symphony which may, or may not, be heard again. Herr Willy Burmester unfortunately detracted largely from the effect his gifts might have made upon competent judges by his choice of pieces, which for such a Concert was most injudicious. He played three compositions (one as an encore) by Paganini, and that was all—parts of the Concerto in D, some variations on "Nel cor più," and an Etude. The appalling difficulties of these works were vanquished with apparent ease, so that Herr Burmester's position as a virtuoso was at once established; for the rest, he has a good tone, plenty of "singing" power, and an intonation that rarely offends; but at present we have no means of knowing whether he possesses artistic intelligence, insight, feeling, or any of the subtle and unnameable qualities that distinguish a great artist from a great juggler. The Symphony, entitled "In Memoriam Ludwig Kossuth," is the composition of Mr. Emanuel Moór, a young Hungarian musician resident in England, who has already won his spurs as a composer of orchestral and other works of serious aim. It reveals, in large measure, qualities that induce respect, such as high intention, reverence for classical form, and adequate knowledge of contrapuntal, harmonic, and orchestral resources. More than this we do not feel able to say, and more than this is imperatively necessary in a Symphony. Genius may (perhaps) dispense with the quality of conscientiousness—but Mr. Moór's lengthy flights were sustained so little by inspiration that they wearied the best disposed listeners. An interesting and spirited scena from Rubinstein's "Die Makkabäer," admirably sung by Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. David Bispham, and two pieces by Wagner, completed a programme the orchestral portions of which were played most artistically by the London Symphony Orchestra, led by Mr. Hollander. We are glad to hear that next season the first part of each Concert will be devoted to works by Beethoven.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

In the absence of Mr. Manns the Concert of February 23 was conducted by Mr. F. H. Cowen, who secured excellent renderings of the C minor Symphony of Beethoven and Gade's sonorous and effective "Ossian" Overture. A decidedly graceful and effective novelty was introduced in Miss E. A. Chamberlayne's "Ariel," a dainty Scherzo for strings, harp, and flute, which was beautifully played and very cordially received. Mr. Frederick Dawson made his début at these Concerts in Scharwenka's Concerto, which he played with remarkable dexterity and fluency, though without much distinction of style. Fräulein Gelber sang an old-fashioned aria from Flotow's "Stradella" with moderate success, and the programme was completed by the beautiful Dream-Pantomime music from "Hänsel und Gretel."

On the following Saturday the bâton was taken by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who introduced a Concert-Overture, "Cridhe an Ghaidhil," or, "The Heart of the Gael," from the pen of his young compatriot, Mr. Charles Macpherson. The Overture is not without an occasional longueur, and the tempi are in the main somewhat leisurely for a work of this description. Still it shows decided poetic feeling and considerable control of orchestral resource. Lady Hallé was very well suited in Bruch's clever Fantasia on Scottish airs, and also gave, with much effect, the Adagio from Spohr's Sixth Concerto. The Symphony was the perennial G minor of Mozart, and the vocal relief was furnished by the Misses Salter, who sang, with considerable success, two charming duets by Schumann, "An den Abendstern" and "Mailed." Miss Florence Salter also gave with neatness and good taste an old-fashioned aria by Nicolo. The Concert concluded with the Overture to "Der Freischütz."

Sir Alexander Mackenzie again conducted the Concert on the 9th ult., when Herr Emil Sauer made his first appearance before the Sydenham audience. He chose for his principal solo Henselt's elegant Concerto, a very judicious choice, and achieved a great success in a work which afforded him ample yet legitimate scope for the display of his remarkable powers of execution. Later on he gave with much effect minor solos by Beethoven, Chopin, and Schumann. The chief orchestral feature of the Concert was Rubinstein's "Russian" Symphony, a work which has some happy moments—though the spirit of the Scherzo is much more in keeping with the ballet than with the symphonic form—and an immense amount of wearisome padding. It was, however, well played under the careful direction of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who also secured a fine rendering of the "Leonora" Overture (No. 3). Mr. Braxton Smith was the vocalist, singing with conscientious accuracy, but a notable lack of dramatic feeling, Lohengrin's "Farewell."

Dr. Hubert Parry was the Conductor at the Concert of the 16th ult., when his fine Oratorio "Job" was heard for the first time at the Crystal Palace. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Plunket Greene, at present in America, the arduous title rôle was undertaken with great success by Mr. David Bispham, who delivered the "Lamentations" in most impressive style. The charming solo for the Shepherd Boy was carefully sung by Miss Thudichum, Mr. Branscombe gave an accurate but colourless rendering of the music of Satan, and Mr. Robert Grice was thoroughly efficient as the Narrator. The chorus acquitted itself with credit, if not with distinction; and the orchestra gave a good account of the powerful instrumentation of Dr. Parry's work, which was very heartily applauded by the audience. The new choral ballad, "Young Lochinvar," by Mr. Davidson Arnott, which was produced for the first time on this occasion, is an early effort of this promising young composer. It possesses the welcome quality of melodiousness, is full of spirit and vigour, and, on the whole, decidedly effective. It was very warmly applauded.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

An interesting feature of the Concert on Saturday, February 23, the first we have to notice this month, was Bach's Partita in C minor, one of six works for the keyboard produced during the master's ripest period, after he had finally settled in Leipzig. Pianists nowadays evince such a peculiar fondness for doctored versions of Bach's organ works that Mr. Leonard Borwick should be thanked for selecting this Partita, which had only been played once previously at these Concerts. That he rendered it ample justice may be taken for granted, and he was recalled four times, firmly declining, however, to play again. The concerted works in the programme were Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74), Mozart's Pianoforte Trio in E (No. 6), and Schubert's favourite Fantasia in C for pianoforte and violin (Op. 159). Madame Hope Glenn contributed songs by Scarlatti, Carissimi, and Rubinstein with fair effect. This was the last Concert at which Lady Hallé officiated as leader for the present season.

On February 25 Mr. Joachim re-appeared and was received with enthusiasm. For once a Beethoven Quartet did not head the programme, the great violinist leading off with Schubert's popular Quartet in D minor, which is far more frequently heard than the companion work in G (Op. 161), though the latter in some respects is more representative of the composer's genius. Mr. Joachim did not play any solo pieces on this occasion, but he was associated with Mr. Leonard Borwick in Brahms's brief but invigorating Sonata in D minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 108) and led Haydn's Quartet in D (Op. 64, No. 1). Miss Kate Cove was the vocalist, and Mr. Borwick gave three of Scarlatti's harpsichord pieces with marked success.

Mozart's Quintet in C for strings (No. 5) was given on Saturday, the 2nd ult., and was magnificently interpreted. Miss Fanny Davies was heard to much advantage in a rarely heard Fantasia and Fugue in D, by Bach, and joined Mr. Joachim in Schumann's three Romances originally written for pianoforte and oboe, and subsequently arranged in several ways, showing that the master cared more for his own music than for the precise method of its interpretation. Mr. Ben Davies gave a finely dramatic rendering of Handel's "Waft her, angels," and the Concert was effectively closed by Beethoven's Sonata in C minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 30, No. 2).

Very brief record of the Concert on the 4th ult. will suffice. The concerted pieces were Beethoven's Quartet in F minor (Op. 95), of which Mendelssohn thought so highly; Bach's Sonata in E for pianoforte and violin, and Brahms's beautiful Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 101). Miss Fanny Davies was again the pianist, her solo being Beethoven's Sonata in A (Op. 101), the first of those which are generally, though somewhat unjustly, regarded as in the composer's "third manner." Madame Hope Glenn was the vocalist, her selections being airs by Haydn, Ries, and Schumann.

On Saturday afternoon, the 9th ult., the concerted works were Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in G, Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1), and Beethoven's Sonata in G, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 95). The pianist, Mr. Leonard Borwick, rendered three of Chopin's Studies with much skill and played a fourth as an encore. Miss Mary Morgan was the vocalist.

More interest attached to the Concert of the following Monday. To begin with, a superb performance was given of Mozart's String Quartet in G minor, and the exquisitely beautiful work aroused an unusual display of enthusiasm. Dr. Joachim is always expected to play Bach's Chaconne during his annual sojourn in London, and his rendering of the famous piece remains as grand as ever. Thunders of applause followed, and eventually the greatest of living violinists granted an encore. The pianist was Mr. Ernest Consolo, who is said to be English by parentage though he has lived in Italy and has studied under Mr. Sgambati. He has good technique, but he played trifling pieces by Mendelssohn, Liszt, and Rubinstein in a somewhat hard and unsympathetic style. Mr. Consolo was more satisfactory in Schumann's Sonata in D minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 121), in which he had Dr. Joachim as a companion artist. Mrs. Helen Truett was charming in songs by Giordani and Miss M. V. White.

There was an unusual mishap on Saturday, 16th ult., Mr. Emil Sauer being compelled to pause in his solo, Chopin's Fantasia in F minor (Op. 49), owing to the obstreperous sound of a muffin-bell in the immediate proximity of St. James's Hall. The artist eventually resumed his performance, and gave as an encore a transcription of Mendelssohn's song "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges." The concerted works were by Beethoven—namely, the Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) and the Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 97). Miss Fillinger was thoroughly acceptable, as usual, in songs by Schumann and Brahms.

On Monday, the 18th ult., Mr. Emil Sauer was again the pianist, his solo being Beethoven's curious and wholly original Sonata in G (Op. 31, No. 1), of which he gave a very effective reading. The Concert opened with Mendelssohn's early Quintet in A (Op. 18) and closed with Rubinstein's effective Pianoforte Quartet in the same key (Op. 66), the repetition performance of which was welcome. Mr. David Bispham made a great success in Schubert's masterly song, "Waldesnacht."

LONDON CHORAL UNION.

A NEW work for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra, a setting of Longfellow's "Ballad of Carmilhan," by Mr. Davidson Arnott, was produced by the above Society, at Queen's Hall, on February 26. It is this promising Scottish composer's Op. 10, and not only his most ambitious and elaborate, but also his best work, and a great step in advance of any of its predecessors. Needless to say, it is not perfect. The composer is still young; his command over the various branches of the technique of his art lacks as yet the easy masterfulness which will come with years and experience, as will also the valuable self-criticism which will teach him to express himself in the shortest and most direct way. Such as it is, however, the Ballad displays some very desirable qualities. The poem offers exceptional opportunities for strong contrasts, the lyric and dramatic elements alternating throughout. Mr. Arnott has not been slow to avail himself of this chance of supplying greatly varied musical effects, and his imagination has proved equal to the difficult task of keeping up the interest and avoiding monotony throughout the long poem, though employing only one soloist. His melodic gift is displayed to much advantage in the lyrical portions, where sentiment is illustrated by many a tuneful and expressive passage, frequently accompanied by charming orchestral figures. The breezy opening theme and most of the quick movements are redolent of the sea and have a healthy British ring about them, while the energy and "go" of the dramatic parts and the stirring climaxes prove exciting and effective. That Mr. Arnott has not come under the influence of Wagner in setting this story of the sea and the spectre ship is not a little remarkable; and yet the one Leitmotif in the cantata, the striking "Carmilhan" theme, is just such a strongly rhythmical nine-note phrase as might have been coined by the composer of the "Ring." On the occasion under notice the Ballad was received with genuine enthusiasm, the composer being repeatedly called to be greeted with the wildest of cheers, and this in spite of a performance which left very much to desire. Mr. Andrew Black was of course excellent in every way in the solo part. A fair performance of "The Golden Legend," with Miss Kate Cove, Madame Marian McKenzie, Messrs. Harper Kearton and Black, completed the programme.

THURSDAY SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

THE programme on the 7th ult., in the Queen's (Small) Hall, was of special interest, inasmuch as the first part consisted entirely of the works of Dr. Hubert Parry, including a manuscript song, "Thine eyes still shine for me." This composition, replete with the grace and expressive force characteristic of the pen from which it proceeded, was admirably interpreted by Mr. William Nicholl, whose artistic method was further manifested in a painstaking rendering of "Shall I compare thee?" The care Miss Elsie Mackenzie bestowed upon those charming vocal pieces, "A Contrast" and "A Spring Song," was duly recognised, and the two Anacreontic odes, "Golden hues of life are fled" and "Away, away, you men of rules," were sung with spirit by Mr. Ben H. Grove. Equally satisfactory was the selection of instrumental productions of the popular English master. The fine Trio in E minor for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello called forth the highest executive powers of Messrs. Septimus Webbe, Otto Peiniger, and Hans Adolf Brouil, the two first-named of whom were also heard to advantage in the attractive Partita in D minor. The second part was, as usual, derived from various sources.

Mendelssohn supplied the chief materials, on the 21st ult. for the final Concert of the season. Again several branches of the composer's art were effectively illustrated. The Trio in C minor (Op. 66) was played with genuine impulse and fervour by Messrs. Webbe, Peiniger, and Brouil, and for solo display there was the Andante and Finale of the Violin Concerto, safely entrusted to Mr. Peiniger. Misses Kate Alston and Minnie Pryce contributed the duets "O wert thou in the cauld blast," "Greeting," and the "Autumn Song," each of which was welcome. Mr. Nicholl gave that lovely song "The Garland" with his accustomed finish, and in the miscellaneous section made much of the melodious romance "Adieu, Mignon," from the best-known of Ambroise Thomas's operas. Miss Mary Carmichael appeared both as accompanist and composer, her ability in the latter capacity obtaining exemplification in the duets "It is the hour" and "Under the thorn-tree," sung by the Misses Alston and Pryce.

INSTRUMENTAL RECITALS.

PROGRAMMES of music for pianoforte or some stringed instrument are given in ever-increasing numbers, artists of ability apparently thinking that they can secure satisfactory audiences with perhaps one vocalist for the sake of relief. Nothing of an extraordinary nature has been offered during the past month, and we shall therefore group together such entertainments of this nature as seem to deserve a few lines of notice. Taking up the record, first mention is required of Mr. Franz Rummel's second Pianoforte Recital in St. James's Hall, on Friday, February 22. The gifted pianist was perhaps scarcely wise to essay two such elaborate works as Beethoven's last Sonata in C minor (Op. 111) and Weber's in A flat (No. 2); but no judge of pianoforte playing could do otherwise than bestow high commendation on the rendering of each Sonata. Minor pieces by Bach, Schubert, Chopin, and Liszt were also played with brilliancy and taste.

A Pianoforte Recital was given by Miss Marie Dubois in St. James's Hall, on Tuesday, February 26. It was not well attended, for Miss Dubois is not as yet well known to English amateurs; but she is a capable and intelligent artist, as was proved by her interpretation of a familiar Sonata by Beethoven and various smaller pieces by Scarlatti, Mozart, Chopin, Raff, Massenet, Liszt, and Schumann. The young executant was at her best in the last-named composer's Romance (Op. 28, No. 2) and the dainty little piece "Vogel als Prophet."

Noonday is a curious time for giving public musical performances, save at provincial Festivals; but this was the hour fixed by Mr. Rubio for his first Violoncello Recital at the Steinway Hall, on Monday, the 4th ult. The performer, who was described in the programme as "the famous violoncellist to Her Majesty the Queen of Spain," is a good executant, though his tone is somewhat thin and hard. He played pieces by Bach, Gluck, Tschaikowsky, and Schumann on the whole effectively, and he was also heard in some of his own compositions, which, however, did not prove very interesting. Miss Grace Simon contributed some trifling pianoforte solos in agreeable fashion.

On the afternoon of the same day the Russian artist, Mr. Siloti, gave an artistically successful Pianoforte Recital in St. James's Hall, his somewhat ambitious programme including Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 110)

Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses, and Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques. These were played in what may be termed a sound and conscientious, but rather frigid style. Some pieces by Russian composers—Tchaikowsky, Glazounoff, Rachmaninoff, Arensky, and Balakireff formed, perhaps, the most interesting feature of the Recital.

Miss Ethel Bauer, whose pianoforte playing we have had occasion to notice in favourable terms on many occasions since she first appeared several years ago as a child "prodigy," gave a Recital, with the valuable assistance of the violinist, M. Achille Rivarde, and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, who took the place of Mr. Douglas Powell as the vocalist, in the Princes' Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 6th ult. Miss Bauer played Schumann's "Carnaval" with earnestness, though perhaps with insufficient warmth of expression. An interesting feature of the programme was a Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in A, by the recently deceased French composer, César Franck, whose sympathies were apparently much in favour of the German school. M. Rivarde gave some violin movements by Bach with noteworthy skill.

That very charming pianist, Miss Ilona Eibenschütz, gave a Recital at St. James's Hall, on Friday afternoon, the 8th ult. The young lady is making rapid progress and was heard to special advantage in Brahms's early though certainly not simple Sonata in F minor (Op. 5), of which she gave a very expressive and brilliant rendering. The feature of next importance was Beethoven's set of Variations in C minor, and various pieces of an unpretentious character by Bach, Rameau, Scarlatti, Schumann, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Grieg, Liszt, Schütt, Brüll, and D'Albert served to fill up a well executed and enjoyable programme.

Mr. Franz Rummel gave the third and last of his present series of Pianoforte Recitals at St. James's Hall, on the 1st ult., the most interesting feature of the programme being Schumann's Sonata in F sharp minor, a work not often heard, probably because Schumann is associated more closely with the romantic than the classical school of composition. But there is much that is effective in the F sharp minor Sonata, and Mr. Rummel rendered ample justice to it. He also played Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 110) in a manner that commanded the attention of thoughtful amateurs, and pieces of lesser magnitude by Weber, Chopin, and Liszt.

There was a fairly large attendance at the so-called grand Concert given by Mr. E. Cavour in St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of the 11th ult., which resolved itself into a Vocal and Pianoforte Recital, the artists who carried through the programme being Madame Elise Inverni and Mr. Emil Sauer. The former is a mezzo-soprano with a powerful voice of good quality. The most interesting of her selections, because unhackneyed, were two airs from "Psyche," a pretty opera by Ambroise Thomas, never performed, so far as we are aware, in this country; "A Toi," by C. M. Widor, words by Victor Hugo; "Printemps qui commence," from Saint-Saëns's "Samson et Dalila"; and an air from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète." Mr. Sauer gave his favourite Beethoven Sonata in A flat (Op. 110), and was admirable in Schumann's Toccata in C (Op. 7) and Chopin's Ballade in A flat (Op. 47).

SIR A. C. MACKENZIE ON NATIONAL MUSIC.

SIR A. C. MACKENZIE'S third Lecture, on "The Traditional and National in Music," was delivered at the Royal Institution, on February 23, when attention was chiefly directed to Irish folk-song, and particularly to the writings of Tom Moore. The lecturer said that while some people declared Irish music to be the most human, poetical, and imaginative in the world, there were others who averred that it did not possess such varied and distinct characteristics as were to be found in the folk-song of other countries. There could be no doubt, however, that the process of obliteration was at work in Ireland as elsewhere—in fact, as it was in all places where the national music was not thought to be worthy of artistic crystallization. It was, therefore, most satisfactory to hear that an Irish National Festival had been proposed to be celebrated at Dublin, the objects of which were—1. The performance of Irish music in strict accordance with the traditional manner. 2. The publication of Irish airs now preserved in manuscript, and the notation of such tunes or fragments of tunes which have not yet been recorded. 3. The use of the Irish language in rendering the songs. 4. To stimulate the creation of an Irish school of composers, who by their work might prove that it was possible for Irish musicians to be as truly national in their art as Dvorák and Grieg—to say that this chiefly concerned Irish people was scarcely true. The art gained universally when its sections drove their roots deep into folk-music. The modernisation of old folk-music was to be deplored, for it deprived it of its very spirit. We were possibly farther on the road to an English school of music than we imagined or recognised. We had witnessed the production in recent years of many orchestral and other works representative of the racial expression of the separate nationalities which went to make up Great Britain, and although we might still be passing through the experimental stage, the initial steps had undoubtedly been taken by our best composers. The accomplishment must obviously be the result of a long succession of efforts by many minds. If we would assist this development we must encourage our composers. Some admirable examples of Irish and Scottish folk-music were given by Miss Kate Cove and Mr. Emile Sauret.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

ANOTHER work from the busy pen of that very promising scholar, Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, was produced at the College Concert of the 13th ult. It was a set of five Fantasiestücke for string quartet, and consisted of a dignified Prelude, an unconventional but expressive Serenade, a Humoreske (full of fun and brightness), an exceptionally charming and quaint Minuet and Trio, and a piquant and fresh Dance. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a rara avis amongst students, for he has something to say that is worth saying, and he does so in his own individual way. Considering the lamentable dearth of good string quartet music by native composers, his Fantasiestücke should be in request; they certainly deserve to become well known, for they are thoroughly charming, remarkably free from reminiscences, and effective. They were excellently played by Miss Ruth Howell, Messrs. Thomas Jeavons and Ernest Tomlinson, and Miss Emma Smith. Miss Katherine Ramsay did a large amount of justice to some numbers from Schumann's "Kreisleriana" (Op. 16), and Brahms's Clarinet Quintet received a worthy interpretation, even to the "divinest melancholy" of the matchless Adagio. The clarinet part was played by Mr. George Anderson, a very able performer on his beautiful instrument.

At the Concert of the 22nd ult. the orchestra, under Professor Stanford, greatly distinguished itself in Mozart's E flat Symphony and Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, of which latter quite a brilliant performance was given. Sir Walter Parratt conducted Nos. 2, 5, and 4 (in the order given) from Brahms's "German" Requiem. In the inspired chorus "Behold, all flesh is as the grass," where the composer suggests, but hardly ever obtains, the employment of "at least two harps," four such instruments were played, whence an exceptionally fine effect was produced. The chorus sang admirably on the whole, the superior quality of the voices and their professional training being of course eminently favourable to a finished rendering of such difficult music. The solo in No. 5, "Ye now are sorrowful," was taken by a young scholar, Miss Agnes Nicholls. We have never heard it interpreted more satisfactorily. She not only sang in tune—no easy feat in this most trying piece—but with just the expressive simplicity and avoidance of all affectation and of striving after effect which the words and the sublime music demand. Miss Nicholls is a pupil from whom much may be expected. Miss Louise K. Lunn gave an appropriately dramatic rendering of the air "Figlio mio," from "Il Profeta," and Miss Ada Walter successfully surmounted the difficulties of the solo part in Goetz's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat (Op. 18), which came with all the charm of an important and beautiful novelty. For beautiful it is, in spite of some "lengths" which an impatient listener might not consider "heavenly."

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A SUCCESSFUL Concert was given by the students of this prosperous Institution, at St. James's Hall, on Monday afternoon, the 4th ult. It commenced with a movement from Mendelssohn's early Octet in E flat (Op. 20), which was fairly well rendered; but a far more favourable impression was made by a very graceful Romance in D for violin by Mr. G. E. Newland Smith, a pupil in the Academy, artistically played by the composer. Another student's effort worthy of mention was a song by Miss Edith Pratt, sung by Miss Katie Thomas, the title being "The lark and the nightingale," words by Hartley Coleridge. The choir, under the direction of Mr. H. R. Eyers, was commendable in Mendelssohn's unaccompanied setting of the Psalm "Why rage fiercely the heathen," which (in common with the companion works, the versions of the 22nd and the 43rd Psalms) is not heard so frequently as it deserves.

On the 15th ult. the fine organ in the Queen's Hall was utilised by some very promising organ students of the Institution, who gave a Concert of considerable musical interest. Miss Claiborne Dixon gave a creditable rendering of the solo part of Handel's Concerto in F for organ and strings; Mr. William Beazley contributed a neat performance of Bach's Trio in D minor and one of this master's Fugues in G minor; and Miss Kate Field showed remarkable skill in her management of the huge instrument in an effective interpretation of Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata in B flat. The most noteworthy feature of the afternoon was the performance of the last two movements of Rheinberger's Concerto in F (Op. 137) for organ, strings, and horns. This work is one of the finest and most effective of modern compositions for the kind of instruments. It consists of three movements—a Maestoso, an Andante, and a vigorous Finale—all of which are conceived in a spirit most happily in sympathy with the genius of the solo instrument. It was excellently played, Mr. Walter S. Vale being the soloist. Miss Winifred Peake, Mr. Chambers Coleman, and several other vocalists imparted agreeable variety to the Concert, which was concluded by a brilliant rendering by Mr. George B. Aitken of Widor's showy Toccata from his Fifth Organ Symphony. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted.

Two important scholarships in connection with the Royal Academy of Music will, for the first time, be competed for on May 1. The Goring Thomas Scholarship, founded in memory of the talented musician who died three years ago, will be awarded to the composer of the best work for the operatic stage. The competition is for British-born subjects of either sex who shall have attained the age of eighteen before the day of contest, and the successful candidate will be entitled to three years' musical education at the Academy. The Erard Centenary Harp Scholarship, given by Messrs. S. and P. Erard, is for British-born subjects of either sex between fourteen and twenty-one years, and three years' tuition at the Academy is the reward awaiting the winner. Candidates are required to prepare Parish Alvars's study, "In Imitation of the Mandoline," and to play one piece selected by themselves and another piece, at first sight, chosen by the examiners. For both competitions entrance fees and birth certificates should be sent to the secretary of the Academy on or before the 16th inst. Competitions for various prizes have taken place as follows: The Goldberg Prize on the 11th ult. The prize was awarded to Beatrice Stanley Lucas, and the Examiners highly commended Evelyn Langdon. The Llewellyn Thomas Prize on the 16th ult. The prize was awarded to Jane Spicer and the Examiners highly commended Cornelia Beckmann. The Evil Prize on the same day. The prize was awarded to Bertram H. Wallis, and the Examiners highly commended F. B. Ranalow and David Jones. The Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize on the 18th ult. The prize was awarded to Sybil Palliser, and the Examiners highly commended Lily West. The Robert Cocks and Co. Prize to male students on the 21st ult. The prize was awarded to George Aitken, and the Examiners highly commended Christopher Wilson. The Sterndale Bennett Prize on the 23rd ult. The prize was awarded to Gertrude Peppercorn, and the Examiners highly commended Edith O. Greenhill, Edith Pratt, Alicia A. Needham, and Ida C. Betts.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—LECTURES.

THE Lectures delivered at the Royal Academy of Music during the last month were of unusual interest. Mr. C. F. Abby Williams, by a mastery of his subject and by the help of a number of remarkable musical illustrations, conveyed to his listeners in two Lectures, the last of which was delivered on the 6th ult., an admirable idea of the music of the ancient Greeks; and Mr. Francis Korbay began, on the 13th ult., a series of discourses on the Music of Liszt.

Mr. Williams began by describing the great importance attached by the Greeks to music as an educational medium. The Greek drama was entirely musical, and the author of the words was the composer of the music. Hence the Greek plays we possessed were in reality the libretti of Greek operas, the music of which had disappeared, with the exception of a small portion of "Orestes" by Euripides, which would be found in THE MUSICAL TIMES for May last. The Greek drama owed its origin to a religious rite, in which a chorus sang and danced round the altar of Dionysus, the God of Wine. The music of the Greek theatre consisted of three kinds of melody. The first was called the spoken melos, in which the voice of the actor moved up and down without settling on any definite musical intervals, the rise and fall of the voice being indicated to some extent by the verbal accents. In the second class of melos the voice moved by regular intervals, which could be defined by mathematical ratios. This was called singing melos. The third description of melos was used in tragedy. It consisted of reciting the verses in measure, to the accompaniment of the lyre, and corresponded to some extent to those passages in modern opera in which the actor speaks while the orchestra plays. Although the Greek drama was always musical, it must not be supposed that the music absorbed the chief interest. The instrumental accompaniment was of the most meagre description, and the chorus sang only in unison or octaves. The Greeks, in their theatre, seemed to have sought for an artistic balance, in which no one of the arts preponderated over another. Passing over the mythical times of Orpheus and Apollo, Greek music might be said to have begun with the foundation of a school of music in Sparta under Terpander. This school lasted until the end of the sixth century, and may be called the archaic epoch. The second, or classical period, had its chief centre at Athens, and, beginning with Lasos, the master of Pindar, lasted until the conquest of Greece by Philip of Macedon, in 338 B.C. After this, the period of decadence set in, and continued until the first or second century of our era, when the early Christians, taking the Greek scales in the condition in which they found them, adopted them for the music in their churches. Greek theorists considered that music consisted of two elements—melody and rhythm. Melody was founded on the intervals of the scale, rhythm on intervals of time. A scale was called a harmony—i.e., a harmonious combination of melodic sounds, not simultaneous sounds. The scale was founded upon the interval of the perfect fourth, and all sounds were connected with the strings of the lyre. The word "chord" meant a string made of gut, and a tetrachord was a combination of four such strings tuned in certain ways. The number of strings was gradually increased, but the Greeks always rejected in their classical music the principle of shortening the strings by a finger-board. The whole of the Greek musical system was founded on a tetrachord, the sounds of which might be represented by E F G A. Developments followed, until the form known as the diatonic genus was evolved, concerning which Aristoxenus was at great pains to explain that all the tones and semitones were to be made by ear respectively equal to one another, the result of course being equal temperament. This, however, was not satisfactory to mathematicians, and hence we had several treatises which went at great length into fractions and proportions, and these enormous calculations were looked upon by many as the essence of Greek music. There were, however, several important variations from the diatonic scale. These variations consisted of alterations of the two inner notes of the tetrachord, the extreme notes, a perfect fourth, being always left untouched. All these varieties of tuning, the enharmonic, chromatic, and diatonic genera, seemed to have been in regular practice during the classical period of Greek music, but they gradually fell out of use during the period of decadence and the old simple diatonic scale re-asserted its supremacy and formed the foundation of the Gregorian system and of our own to-day. Evidences of the occasional use of the quarter-tone during the first and second centuries of the Christian era were forthcoming. Thus one of the flutes discovered at Pompeii produced this interval, in addition to a complete octave of semitones, and Claudius Ptolemy told us that a scale formed of the mixture of the diatonic and enharmonic intervals was a favourite with the lyre players of his day—about 200 A.D. The lecturer also gave a brief but clear description of the two notations used by the Greeks, one, the oldest by about 200 years, for instrumental and the other for vocal music. Much interesting information was given concerning rhythm and form, to which the Greeks attached almost as much importance as to melody, doubtless owing to the absence of harmony. The rhythm of Greek music chiefly depended on the words to which it was allied, but contrasting rhythms, such as alternate bars of three and four time, were apparently always aimed at. Great use was made of five-time bars, which Aristoxenus told us were divided into two portions of three and two respectively, and which measure was specially connected with the Pæan or hymn of praise to Apollo. Although the Greeks had no conception of harmony or vocal counterpoint in the modern sense, there was evidence that the lyre was not always played in unison with the voices. Thus Plato required that "boys should be taught to play the lyre in unison with the voice, rather than to play an independent melody, as did the professionals."

The peculiar effects arising from the various tunings of the Greek scales were impressed in a most graphic manner on the audience by three pianofortes which had been tuned by Mr. Hipkins in accordance with the principal ancient Greek scales. Scraps of Greek melody played on these instruments formed a unique if not altogether agreeable experience. Mr. Williams also gave some illustrations on a Spanish guitar-lyre and the recently discovered Hymn to Apollo was sung by Mr. Wing.

From the music of the Ancient Greeks to that of Liszt is a far cry, but Mr. Francis Korbay, who began a series of Lectures, on the 13th ult., by his treatment of his subject, showed, perhaps unwittingly, that there was much in common between the writers of classic times and the Hungarian composer. Probably few modern musicians have been more misunderstood than Liszt, and the opinions on this master of one who has shown such remarkable sympathy with the spirit of Hungarian music is of peculiar interest. Liszt, being a genius in his childhood, the lecturer appropriately began by reference to prodigies, in the course of which he said, "It is my theory that the human ear is yet very far from having accomplished its evolution. We all know that it contains a minute instrument resembling the harp, provided with a number of strings, which, according to their regularity and proportions, cause a more or less musical ear and understanding. . . . The perfect ear discerns pitch as distinctly as the normal eye distinguishes colour. Colour-blind people are rare and few, but most people's ears are colour-blind. That proves that only in very few phenomenal cases is the ear properly developed and that the infinite majority are yet on their way of evolution. . . . When the ear has attained a universal perfection similar to the eye, then music may become the real language of the world." Consequent upon this was predicted that the mysterious and vague meanings in music would be rendered clear and comprehensible, and the art "would develop into the language of a poetry as sublime and beautiful as some of our greatest tone-poets in their happiest moments had dreamed of." Music to-day was only a faint allusion to what it would be. Dark-skinned races, such as the Hebrews, Negroes, Gipsies, and Arabs, seemed to have the most musically developed ears. It was probable, therefore, that the evolution of the musical ear might have started among such races, and that its further development might proceed amongst them with greater facility and speed than where over-civilisation claimed so much vitality that little surplus was left for nature's own free action. Music to-day was in its infancy, its powers and prospects were as unlimited and great as they were unimagined, "for its essence was spirit; its model—if any, intangible—an immediate manifestation of the Divine; and its realm was the Universe." The composer composed, but the tone-poet poetised. There were many of the former, but few of the latter. One of the few was Liszt, to whom music was a language, and whose language was music. When he played he spoke to you with all the eloquence of the all-powerful and all-absorbing individuality of his noble genius. There were three distinctly detached periods in Liszt's life as a tone-poet. To the first belonged his pianoforte compositions, remarkable for innovations and inventions. His Hungarian Rhapsodies presented an entirely new pianoforte form. Liszt, in fact, reformed the literature of the pianoforte, and even influenced the construction of the instrument by his suggestions to Messrs. Erard. In his second period he became a reformer of form, making it subservient to the idea in the creation of the symphonic poem. No musician had penetrated into harmony and unearthed greater wealth than Liszt. In his knowledge and mastery of the ancient church modes he stood alone. The enormous variety of his rhythmical combinations, allied with his Hungarian accentuation, were the prime factors in the formation of his melodies, the strange intervals in some of which were due to their underlying weird harmonies. Melody, since the time of Beethoven, had gradually grown more and more out of harmony, and notably from the chord. Liszt's melodies in particular had their basis in the chord, which went through many transformations and experiences in diatonic, chromatic, and enharmonic regions. The lecturer then passed on to a masterly analysis of Liszt's music to Goethe's "Faust," which consists of four movements severally devoted to the hero, Gretchen, Mephisto, and the Apotheosis. At the second Lecture, delivered on the 20th ult., Liszt's masterly treatment of Plain Song and innovations in Oratorio were dwelt upon, and his use of the fugue form explained. This form was shown to be able to give best expression to the sentiment of an assemblage of people agitated by a dominant idea, but, from its self-imposed restrictions, to fail to poetically portray the climax of the agitation. By abandoning these restrictions towards the end of his vocal fugues, Liszt obtained expressive effects of great power, and the listener's attention was diverted from the consideration of the form to the meaning of the music. Passing to Liszt's songs, the lecturer pointed out the difference of Liszt's conceptions to those of other composers in setting well-known lyrics, and concluded his remarks by an analysis of "Ich Möchte ihn gehn" and "Am Rhein."

MUSICAL GUILD.

AN exceptionally interesting programme was provided for the second of this Society's twelfth series of Concerts, given at Kensington Town Hall on the 5th ult. A Quartet in E flat by Mozart, Brahms's Sextet in G, and Bach's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in A (the latter performed by Miss Donkersley and Miss Annie Grimson) were the chief numbers in a lengthy list, which also contained Schumann's Humoreske for pianoforte, superbly played by Mr. Leonard Borwick, Schubert's song "Waldensnacht," sung by Mr. Bispham in his usual masterly style, and a novelty of an interesting because unusual type. This was a setting of Mr. William Morris's poem "From the Upland to the Sea," for baritone voice, with accompaniment of string quartet and pianoforte. The composer, Mr. Ernest Walker, has hardly justified this innovation by anything wonderful resulting from the unconventional combination, for the strings seemed to add but little to the general effect. Apart from this, however, there is much to admire in his scena. The voice part is in the style of Wagner's melodious declamation, of which Mr. Bispham is one of the best exponents. Mr. Walker has written well for the voice, his music is ever distinguished and frequently impressive and beautiful. The elaborate and effective pianoforte part was played by the composer, with whom we hope to meet again. The third Concert, on the 19th ult., opened with Schumann's hackneyed String Quartet in A minor, which was well played by Messrs. Bent, Sutcliffe, Kreuz, and P. Ludwig. The first-named gentleman joined Miss Maggie Moore in a capital performance of the same composer's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 105), while Brahms's great Clarinet Quintet, ably led by Miss Holiday, gave the clarinetist, Mr. C. Draper, the best of opportunities for displaying his very beautiful tone and fluent execution. Miss Fillunger sang two musicianly songs by Mr. E. Kreuz and three lovely Volkslieder from Brahms's latest collection.

MR. DOLMETSCH'S RECITALS.

THE recent particularly interesting and instructive series of four Concerts of ancient music, given by Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, was concluded, on February 25, in the Queen's (Small) Hall, when the evening was devoted to the writings of French composers of the last two centuries. First in regal array on the programme came three quaint little ditties, respectively attributed, "on very good authority," said Mr. Dolmetsch, to Francis I., Henry IV., and Charles IX. Following these songs were heard two pieces for harpsichord, an Allemande by Du Mont, and a Sarabande by J. C. Chambonnières, who held a Court appointment under Louis XIV., and may be said to have founded the school of harpsichord playing which preceded that of Rameau. The most noteworthy instrumental performance on this occasion was given by Miss Hélène Dolmetsch, who played thirty-two Variations on a popular air for the viola da gamba, by Marin Marais, one of the most celebrated teachers and performers of this instrument in the early part of the eighteenth century. Much interest was also attached to four pieces from the "Neuvième Ordre" for the harpsichord, by François Couperin, whose style and method exerted so remarkable an influence on Sebastian Bach. "A Concert" for harpsichord, violin, and viola da gamba, by J. P. Rameau, was characterised by a quaint humour that made the work peculiarly attractive. It comprised three movements, respectively entitled "La Pantomime," "L'Indiscrette," and "La Rameau," titles happily suggestive of the spirit of the music. Miss Harding being indisposed, it fell to Mr. Douglas Powell to execute the vocal examples. In addition to those already mentioned, this gentleman sang a song, entitled "A mille soins jaloux, Tircis abandonné," by C. R. du Fresnoy, that pleased the listeners so much that they insisted on hearing it again. The Concert concluded with the exhibition of a remarkable pianoforte made by Messrs. Erard for Napoleon I., which has an extra pedal acting upon a drum and triangle. To the martial accompaniment of this instrument Mr. Powell sang, with the irony of fate, "La Marseillaise."

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND CONCERT.

THE efficiency this band has attained under the bâton of Cavalière L. Zaverthal in the performance of compositions possessing none of the ordinary attributes of military music has often been demonstrated, but never more convincingly than on the afternoon of the 22nd ult., in Queen's Hall. By the spirit, closeness, and unanimity of expression with which Professor Stanford's Fourth Symphony, constituting the first part of the programme, was interpreted, the band must have surprised those among the large audience not previously conversant with its high claims to consideration as an artistic body, and the favourable estimate of ability thus formed was not subsequently imperilled. At the commencement of the second part came Mr. Edward German's exceedingly melodious "Gipsy Suite." To this series of effectively contrasted and engaging pieces full justice was done. The delicately plaintive sentiment of the Valse Mélancolique ("Lonely Life") was admirably reproduced, and there was no lack of piquancy in the rendering of the Allegro di Bravura ("The Dance") or the Menuetto ("Love Duet"), whilst the animated execution of the impulsive Tarantella ("The Revel")—infectious in its reckless gaiety—did not fail to evoke the loud approval due to both the work and its performers. Col. Hime's "Homage to Mozart," Burnett's pizzicato movement, "La Mandoline," the sparkling Saltarello from the Ballet Music of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's "Colomba," and Allan Macbeth's Intermezzo "Forget me not" were also played with the point demanded; and a fine rendering of Sullivan's noble "In Memoriam" Overture brought the Concert to an impressive termination. Cavalière Zaverthal conducted throughout with unfluctuating zeal and decision.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

THE leading associations of amateur orchestral players are still showing vigorous life, and on the 6th ult. there were two performances, one being given by the Strolling Players' Society in the Queen's Hall. Mr. Norfolk Megone's spirited players started with Wagner's fiery Overture to "Rienzi," and followed on with a portion of Goldmark's Symphony "A Rustic Wedding"; a not very interesting Suite by the Polish pianist, M. Stojowski; Grieg's two Melodies for strings; a pleasing Idyl, entitled "Dawn," by Mr. Albert E. Matt, a member of the orchestra (being composed as a companion piece to his "Sunset," which obtained favourable attention last season); and the Hungarian March from Berlioz's "Faust." Miss Kate Cove and Mr. van Rensselaer Wheeler, the latter a talented baritone, were very acceptable as the vocalists; and Mr. Edward Cutler's artistic organ playing between the parts secured more attention than is usually given to entr'acte performances.

The same estimable Society gave a special performance in the Queen's Hall, on the 13th ult., in aid of the Metropolitan Hospital in the Kingsland Road.

On the 6th ult. an excellent Concert was given by the Westminster Orchestral Society, a very interesting feature being Spohr's Symphony in D minor (No. 2). Two numbers from Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Incidental Music to "Ravenswood" were also well given under Mr. Stewart Macpherson's direction, as were Gounod's Overture to "Mireille" and Mr. Edward German's to "Richard III." Miss Alice Elieson played a Violoncello Concerto in A minor, by Saint-Saëns (Op. 33), with fair effect, and the vocalists were Miss Clorinda Thurtle and Mr. Griffiths Percy.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

DR. MACLEAN read, on the 12th ult., before the Musical Association, an instructive paper, entitled "Some causes of the development of tone-colour in the modern orchestra." The lecturer divided his discourse into three portions, in which he dealt with the improvements effected in orchestral instruments, the demands of modern audiences, and the conceptions of composers. To the strengthening of the lower registers of the flute and to richer tone was attributed the constant use of these instruments in modern scores. Clarinets were shown to be exerting a powerful influence on tone-colour. More use was being made of the contra-fagotto and the upper registers of bassoons. The invention and effect of valves in horns were gone into at some length, and the use of the cornet-à-piston in place of the trumpet condemned. The bass tuba had forced up the part-writing for the bass trombone and threatened to cause the latter to be neglected. Modern string parts were characterised by greater figuration and the frequent employment of double stopping. The treatment of the violas was suggestive of their being written with first and second parts in future scores; a method that would exert a marked effect on tone-colour. No little of the new orchestral colouring noticeable in the scores of Halévy, Berlioz, Meyerbeer, and Wagner's earlier works was attributable to the military spirit which prevailed in France from 1830 to 1848. Larger concert-rooms called for broader effects, and the application of the valve to brass instruments by Adolphe Sax provided the means of satisfying the craving of the time. The practice of modern composers was to treat the orchestra as an instrument of equal temperament, to indulge in rapid transitions to extreme keys, and to write more polyphonically for each family of instruments. The lecturer concluded by pointing out the tone-colour which distinguished the works of Berlioz, Wagner, Liszt, Verdi, and Brahms. The paper was followed by some remarks from Sir John Stainer (who occupied the chair) and a few of the members.

REVIEWS.

Musicians and Music-Lovers, and other Essays. By William Foster Apthorp.

[New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.]

READERS of the Atlantic Monthly will already be familiar with several of the chapters of this interesting volume, in which Mr. Apthorp has collected in a revised and enlarged form his principal contributions to contemporary periodicals on musical subjects. With Mr. Apthorp's criticisms and comments it is not always possible to agree, but he has at least the sovereign merit of an animated and entertaining style and a great fund of hearty enthusiasm. The chapter on Bach is, in particular, admirable reading, and we cannot refrain from quoting the following passage in which the writer discusses the influence of Bach on the public. "Bach's works," writes Mr. Apthorp, "both during his own lifetime and since his death, have, as a rule, appealed only to the especially cultured few. There is hardly another great composer who has had so small a public as he. And yet no composer that ever lived is held in profounder and more loving reverence by those that do know him. It may be said of Bach, as Lowell said of Dante, that 'his readers turn students, his students zealots, and what was a taste becomes a religion.' . . . So irresistible is the spell he casts over those who come within the range of his influence, that once you have crossed the threshold of his temple you are his heart and soul for ever. The love of Bach is the most enduring of musical passions. I know that I can hardly open a volume of Bach without a certain feeling of superstitious terror; I feel as if the perusal of each page would be but a nail in the coffin of all my other loves." And yet Mr. Apthorp is fully alive to his unpopularity with the great mass of musical people. He points out, however, that he is not a man whose popularity is extinct, but that he never at any time enjoyed any marked popularity; and he continues: "No doubt the Bach-cult one finds in some quarters is not wholly free from cant; I never knew any cult that was. But I must say that I have found less sham love for Bach in people that I have met than I have for most of the other great composers. On the contrary, I have usually found Bach made the theme of the most up-and-down plain speaking. It is but another proof of the immense distance which separates him from the popular modes of musical thought. Many people who have to keep up a reputation for musical taste will bear the infliction of a Schumann quartet or a Brahms symphony quite smilingly; they will grin and bear it, and try to think they like it. But Bach marks the point when the worm will turn; he is the last straw that breaks the back of musical endurance, and people admit quite frankly that they find him intolerable." Another excellent chapter is devoted to "Two Modern Classicists," Robert Franz and Otto Dresel, and derives special importance from a number of interesting excerpts from the correspondence which passed between the former and Mr. Apthorp. Of Franz's creative genius as a song-writer he writes in the following terms of generous but intelligent eulogy: "Franz's songs have just that unforced felicity of cadence and expression, that wholesome out-of-door freshness, that refinement without priggishness, warmth without feverishness, above all—that hative reverence for purity and beauty that we find in the English love poems of Elizabeth's day. No lover can be too passionate to sing them, no maid too pure to hear them." Mr. Apthorp's "Thoughts on Musical Criticism" seem to us a trifle commonplace, but there are some excellent things in his chapter on "Music and Science." He contends with considerable force that "there should be no question (for the musical scientist) of what Music ought, or ought not, to be; the only questions that interest the Science of Music are what Music is and has been, and how and why it has become what it is." And he illustrates the dangers of adopting a different procedure by the case of Fétis and Beethoven's symphonies, adding, "For Fétis to disapprove of a progression in a Beethoven symphony was very like what Professor Huxley would be guilty of if he should cry out to Nature: 'Ho! stop there! you have made a mistake in this horse.'" In fine, Mr. Apthorp's book is a really suggestive contribution to the literature of musical criticism. It is the outcome of an exceedingly thoughtful and sympathetic study of composers of a variety of schools, expressed with a vigour and trenchancy which seldom fails to arrest the reader's attention.

The Parish Choir Book, Nos. 162-173.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

NOTHING could testify more distinctly to the increasing efficiency of choirs in ordinary churches, as distinct from cathedrals and other places of worship where professional singers are employed, than the success of the above-named publication, with the rapid issue of which it is difficult to keep pace. Of the dozen numbers which we propose to notice at present, the first is a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in A, by T. W. Hanforth, organist of the Parish Church in Sheffield. This setting of the Evening Canticles shows a modern spirit in the chromatic progressions and the independent accompaniments, but the voice parts are not difficult, though fugal writing is employed in the "Gloria Patri." No. 163 is a Te Deum in C, by Alfred S. Baker, of considerable elaboration and requiring solo voices. It is remarkable for chromatic and unexpected harmonic progressions, and the vocal parts are divided into as many as eight. The Te Deum is eminently suitable for Festival use. Very different is No. 164, a chant setting of the same canticle by G. Wilson Macpherson, of Sidmouth. Double and quadruple chants are given in this, but the chant rhythm is adhered to with strictness. The next number is a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis by G. C. Martin, rather more free in form than the preceding, but quite simple and savouring rather of Gregorian phraseology. No. 166 is an easy but expressive setting in F of the Nunc dimittis, by W. D. Armstrong, and No. 167 consists merely of accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed as monotoned on G. The writer is J. Varley Roberts of Magdalen College, Oxford, and he has rendered good service to those organists—a numerous body—who possess no gifts of extemporisation. The same able musician's accompaniments to the Nicene Creed (No. 168) are worthy of precisely the same measure of commendation. No. 169 is a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat, by A. Herbert Brewer, rather restless in tonality, but certainly effective in the organ accompaniment and not very elaborate in the voice parts. The next number (170) is another setting of the Evening Canticles, in E flat, by T. Tallis Trimmell, very easy, but not ineffective, though the voice parts are, to a considerable extent, written in unison or octaves. No. 171 is yet one more version of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, this bearing the honoured name of J. Stainer. It is at once solid, church-like, and spirited, the close of the Gloria, where there is a momentary transition to the key of F (the main body of the Service being in E), showing that the composer is not only an excellent musician, but an original thinker in the department of church music. The Prayer Book Canticles for Evening Service, "Cantate Domino" and "Deus Misereatur," have fallen into some neglect of late, but it is not easy to perceive why they should not be used, and the setting in F, by W. Bayley, may prove welcome to many organists and choirmasters. There is some florid work for the organ pedals at the words "Let the sea make a noise," but, speaking generally, the Service is pleasing and unpretentious. The last on our list for the present is a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F, by Edward J. Hopkins. This, however, is virtually only a chant setting, though some of the verses are written in four-part harmony. It is noteworthy, as showing a reversion to antique methods, that in most of the foregoing the minim and not the crotchet is employed as the unit of time measurement.

English Lyrics (Third Set). By C. H. H. Parry.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

In a recent Lecture on "Hänsel und Gretel," delivered at the Royal Institution, Sir A. C. Mackenzie remarked that on every page of that work was stamped "Made in Germany"; and of most of the songs now under notice it may be said that they are "made in England." By this we do not mean that there are no traces of foreign influence. With Dr. Parry's highly cultivated, well-stored mind this would be impossible; but, throughout, the music reveals qualities of directness and homeliness which may fairly be styled English. Dr. Parry is rendering good service in choosing good words. In this Album there are two poems by the "Cavalier Lyrist," Richard Lovelace; one by Thomas Lovell Beddoes, nephew of Maria Edgeworth; one by Sir J. Suckling, the easy, graceful ballad writer of the seventeenth century, who is said to have divided his time betwixt gallantry and verse-making; and one by William Walsh, a poet praised by both Dryden and Pope. Was William, by the way, a brother of John Walsh, the father of Handel's publisher? And from among modern poets our composer has selected Mr. Julian Sturgis, who is represented by his "Through the ivory gate." This choice of poems deserves to be emphasized; how much, only those will understand whose task it is to read through the sentimental, silly, and sometimes vulgar words of many modern songs. Dr. Parry seems, indeed, determined to raise the standard of English song. In his first set of English Lyrics were to be found the names of Sir Philip Sidney, Scott, and Shelley, while for the second set Shakespeare was laid under contribution. Of this third set, No. 1, "To Lucrecia, on going to the wars" (Lovelace), has a flowing melody; and though the structure of the song be simple, there are many touches which reveal ars celare artem. No. 2, "If thou wouldst ease thine heart" (Beddoes), opens with a short symphony, in which a plaintive little phrase seems to tell "of love and all its smart." The middle section is worked up to a fine climax, which renders the quiet close still more effective. No. 3, "To Althea from prison" (Lovelace), is exceedingly attractive; the melody has national character, and the accompaniment is clever, yet quite unlaboured. No. 4, "Why so pale and wan" (Suckling), is a little gem; it seems, indeed, a trifle that could have been written down without an effort. Sometimes composers have moments of inspiration, and a song appears with Minerva-like suddenness; frequently, however, the simpler the music the greater the effort which it has cost. No. 5 is an expressive setting of "Through the ivory gate" (Sturgis); and No. 6, "Of all the torments" (Walsh), is a good sturdy song, though, perhaps, not the best of the set.

Marche Solennelle. Pianoforte Solo and Duet. Marche Militaire. Pianoforte Solo and Duet. Valse Scherzo. Pianoforte Solo. By P. Tschaikowsky.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Of making of marches there is no end; but of the many, few achieve popularity. Certain marches seem to enjoy peculiar favour; it will suffice to name Mendelssohn's "Wedding," Beethoven's "Eroica," and Chopin's "Funeral" March. For this, of course, there are good reasons; in spite of Punch's advice, people still continue to marry, and death is still "the quiet haven" of great men; the pieces named, therefore, are in continual demand. Rhythm and form are, to a certain extent, conventional, and to write a march of striking originality is by no means easy. Without deciding on the exact degree of inspiration in the two marches under notice, we can venture to say that they show breadth, dignity, and skill. It must be remembered that in their present form, (the first was originally written for full orchestra, the second for military band), although the transcriptions in both cases are effective, the music is not heard to the fullest advantage; talent manifests itself in colouring as well as thought. The "Marche Solennelle" opens in the key of D with a few introductory bars foreshadowing the principal theme of the piece. This theme is solemn, yet not sad; the dotted and even doubly dotted notes carry with them, indeed, an air of defiance. The middle section, in the key of the flattened submediant, is of quiet character, and the opening phrase of the principal theme is the germ from which it is evolved. A vigorous thematic Coda brings the duet to a close. The "Marche Militaire" is in the key of B flat. The opening section, clear and decided in rhythm, is imposing; the soft middle section, as in the case of the previous piece, is based on the principal theme. The simplicity which pervades these two marches is noteworthy. Tschaikowsky, when he chose, could gird himself with the armour of counterpoint. The "Valse Scherzo" for pianoforte is a dainty little piece, and interesting both in the matter of rhythm and harmony. The technical difficulties are not great, but the music demands neat playing and careful phrasing.

A Garland of Country Song. English Folk-songs, with their Traditional Melodies. Edited and arranged by S. Baring Gould and H. Fleetwood Sheppard.
[Methuen and Co.]

WHEN, about eight years ago, the two gentlemen responsible for this volume associated themselves with Mr. Russell, for the purpose of collecting the folk-songs of the West of England, the store of examples their industry enabled them to accumulate included many songs that, while found in Devon and Cornwall, could not be said to belong exclusively to those counties. All such were therefore excluded from the collection published a few years ago by the authors of the present volume, under the title of "Songs of the West." The collection now under consideration contains fifty of the examples thus "held over," and includes songs belonging to all parts of England, with the exception of Yorkshire, Northumberland, and Sussex—those counties having already been dealt with by Mr. Kidson, Mr. Stokoe, Miss L. E. Broadwood, and others. The book is welcome, as are all such—the results of an enthusiasm that shirks no difficulties in the attainment of its object. How much patience, how much persistence, such a volume represents may only, perhaps, be realised by those who have themselves attempted the task of noting down songs from the lips of the peasantry. Some idea, however, of the praise deserved by such workers may be gained by a perusal of Mr. Baring Gould's introductory remarks, which give, at considerable length, a number of interesting details concerning those from whom the songs were obtained, and also contain valuable comments on the origin, growth, and neglect of folk-song in general. With regard to the accompaniments to the songs praise must be qualified. Some are admirably simple and appropriate—others tricked out with common-place arpeggios or overloaded with "fill-up" passages of the cheapest kind. That the last-named are in a minority is something to be thankful for, but in such a volume they should have had no place at all.

Santley's Singing Master. Part I. [Chappell and Co.]

The title of this tutor will assuredly in itself be a sufficient recommendation to many aspiring students and probably not a few teachers, for no vocalist has won more widespread esteem and popularity by a finer vocal production and more legitimate method than Mr. Charles Santley. The manly style of the gifted artist's declamation is reflected in the prefaces respectively addressed "To the student" and "To the teacher." That to the former contains advice that every pupil would do well to engrave on the tablets of his memory; especially the remarks having reference to the cultivation of the sense of rhythm, which all vocalists are inclined to more or less treat slightly. In a book, too, on a subject which has not always been marked by a superabundance of Christian charity it is refreshing to read as follows: "A prevailing idea among students, especially of the female sex, is that their particular master is the only one who can teach. Dismiss that idea. It is true there are few good teachers, but those have the same end in view; each has his own road by which to arrive at that end. Each road may be equally good, but one student will find this more convenient; another, that." Mr. Santley speaks with equal plainness to music teachers. Commenting upon the difficulty which sometimes exists to decide whether a voice is soprano or mezzo, tenor or baritone, he says: "We are all liable to mistakes, a teacher of singing not the least so. . . . Mario's first attempt was the bass part in the Trio for three men from 'William Tell'; Reeves, in the beginning of his career, sang baritone songs; Jean de Reszké was a baritone at the Italian Opera for some seasons. I was forced to sing tenor for three or four years after my voice broke." It is unnecessary to express an opinion on the exercises. They bear evidence of having been carefully designed by Mr. Santley. That is enough.

German Folk-Songs. With pianoforte accompaniment by Johannes Brahms. English version by Albert B. Bach. [Berlin : Simrock.]

THESE songs are forty-nine in number, divided into seven books, the first six of which are for solo and the seventh for solo with small chorus. The melodies have been taken from various sources, some of them dating as far back as the sixteenth century, and have been selected, as one would naturally expect, with rare insight and sympathy, and with an evident desire to exhibit the wide range of expression that characterises the folk-songs of Germany. Though all have more or less distinction and merit, some stand out by reason of exceptional beauty or pathos—such, for instance, as No. 42, "In silent night," or No. 20, "Dearest heart," which are most exquisite songs. The student of folk-song will find here many interesting points of rhythm and form, which he may profitably compare with similar features in the folk-songs of Great Britain. No one who knows anything of the music of Brahms will need telling that the accompaniments to these songs are distinguished by great harmonic richness and dignity, but they will be glad to know that, in nearly every case, he has avoided that complexity which is often a far from satisfactory feature of his pianoforte writing. The difficult task of translation has been performed with a fair measure of success by Mr. Bach, who has also furnished a preface in which he draws attention to several features worthy of note. The collection is issued in two editions—one for high, the other for low voices.

Menuet (Vieux style), Polka de Concert, Valse Impromptu. For pianoforte solo. By Emile Sauer. [Weekes and Co.]

PIANISTS who can lay claim to the possession of a certain amount of "style" and whose appreciation of the decorative element in instrumental works has not been blunted by the modern fad that only music with a "meaning" has the right to exist, will find plenty in these pieces to charm and interest the ear, and to repay the trouble of learning them. The Menuet is the easiest of the three—the Polka the most difficult. This last is full of daring harmonies and modulations, and is planned on a large scale. The leading theme is tossed about in the most masterly way, and the whole piece needs to be, as it were, "shaken out" from the player's fingers as though it were a mere trifle. The Valse is distinguished by much grace and finish.

Living Pictures (Tableaux Vivants). Words of Songs and Stage Directions by May Gillington. The music composed by Arthur E. Godfrey. [Robert Cocks and Co.]

"THESE pictures," says the preface, "are designed to be carried out by children of from eight to twelve years of age, with such inexpensive accessories in the way of dresses, scenery, and 'properties' as can be easily procured, made, and arranged by themselves, with a little help." Illustrations are given of all the tableaux, which are accompanied by descriptive songs of melodious and simple character, intended to be sung by those not taking part in the pictures. The idea is a good one, is well carried out, and undoubtedly provides our little folks with a means of amusement calculated to cultivate artistic taste.

Pensées Intimes. Pour Violon et Piano. Par Emile Sauer. Six Nos. (Op. 39). [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE number of compositions for violin and pianoforte is ever on the increase. Performers on the pianoforte have never been scarce, while the number of students for the violin is growing larger every day: hence the supply of music must be equal to the demand. These six pieces have been written by one who is master of his instrument, and the violin part, merely from a technical point of view, is, therefore, sure to be thoroughly good and, moreover, effective. But M. Sauer has also bestowed care on the pianoforte part; the writing for this instrument shows both taste and skill. No. 1 is a smooth, flowing Aria. No. 2 is a graceful Gondoliera. The principal theme has both simplicity and charm, and the passage in which the opening phrase, or rather a free version of it, is repeated several times by the violin and echoed by the pianoforte, is attractive. No. 3, consisting of a quiet Melodie, with soft, light accompaniment, is altogether simpler than the first two numbers. No. 4 has for title "Capricciotto," and the music is becomingly light and fanciful; the middle piu tranquillo section contrasts well with the spirited first part. No. 5, "Tristesse," is an adagio movement which, with its wandering violin part and chromatic progression, sounds somewhat after the manner of a rhapsody. The title of No. 6, Valse Gracieuse, sufficiently describes the character of the music.

A concise and simple plan for Fingering the Scales in double thirds and double sixths. By Walter Fitton. [Edwin Ashdown.]

MR. FITTON has made a laudable attempt to classify the fingering of the scales when played in double thirds and sixths, and those students, especially such as meditate going up for examination in technique, who find a difficulty in remembering the fingering of the respective scales in these positions will do well to master this system. It is contained on two cards, and may be said to be a model of conciseness. Perhaps a little more explanation might have been vouchsafed with advantage, but the author evidently has faith in the intelligence of musical students, and doubtless many will find valuable aid from his ingenious arrangement.

FOREIGN NOTES.

BAYREUTH.—Herr Siegfried Wagner has just completed the composition, in the form of a cantata, of one of Schiller's poems, which it is expected will be first performed in London in June next.

BERLIN.—Wagner's "Rienzi" has just been revived at the Royal Opera, after many years' neglect, Frau Cosima Wagner having personally superintended the various departments. Capellmeister Muck conducted.

BRUNSWICK.—The annual meeting of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein will take place this year in this town, from June 12 to 16 inclusive. The occasion is generally one of rendezvous by musicians from all parts of the world, to whom important Concert performances are to be offered on every one of the five days, the principal choral work contemplated being Berlioz's Requiem. Amongst the artists whose active assistance is anticipated are Madame Lilli Lehmann, Professor Heermann, Eugen d'Albert, and Paderewski.

COLOGNE.—The annual Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine is to be held in this town next Whitsuntide. The programme, which has not yet been completely arranged, will include Haydn's "The Seasons," a Te Deum by Dr. Wüllner, Handel's Overture to "Agrippina," scenes from "Guntram," by Richard Strauss; and "Die Wallfahrt nach Kevlaar," for soli, chorus, and orchestra, by Humperdinck. Madame Sembrich will be amongst the vocalists.

—Professor G. Holländer, so long a greatly esteemed member of the musical profession here, has taken up his residence at Berlin, as director of the well known Sternsche Conservatorium, which he has acquired by purchase.

COPENHAGEN.—An interesting celebration is being organised just now in this capital—viz., that of the ninetieth anniversary of the birth of Johan Peter Emil Hartmann, the composer of a number of more or less successful operas and other musical works and a most highly esteemed member of the profession. The veteran artist was born in Copenhagen on May 14, 1805, and since 1840 has been the director of the Conservatoire, and more recently private capellmeister to the King. His first symphony, dedicated to Louis Spohr, was produced at the Leipzig Gewandhaus in 1838.

DARMSTADT.—At a Concert recently given by the Grand-ducal Orchestra a young violoncellist, Mr. C. Fuchs, late pupil of the Royal Manchester College, met with a most enthusiastic reception in his interpretation of Schumann's Concerto in A minor and pieces by Saint-Saëns and Popper.

EISENACH.—The question of the disposal of Herr Oesterlein's Richard Wagner Museum has been finally settled. The unique collection (comprising some twenty-five thousand numbers) is to be transferred from Vienna to this town, the requisite purchase-money having been for the greater part already subscribed for. The Eisenachers are justly proud of the achievement.

FLORENCE.—A special meeting of the Royal Institution of Music was held recently in somewhat tardy commemoration of the tercentenary of the birth of opera—viz., the first production, in 1594, at Florence, of Peri's "Dafne." An interesting and valuable paper, "Sull' opera in Musica," was read on the occasion by Professor Gandolfi, illustrated by the following excerpts—viz., Madrigale for four voices, by Luca Marenzio (1589); Canzone di Tirsi, from Peri's "Euridice" (1600); and the Rispetto from the opera giocosa "La Tancia," by Jacopo Melani (1657). A volume, including Professor Gandolfi's paper and other contributions on the subject of the tercentenary, is about to be published by the Institution.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAINE.—A new one-act opera, "Enoch Arden," the libretto written upon the lines of Tennyson's poem by Vittorio di Dio, has just been produced at the Stadt Theater with marked success. The composer is Herr Robert Erben, the second Capellmeister of the theatre.

HALLE.—A committee has been formed with a view to the erection here of a monument to the late Robert Franz. A commemorative tablet is also to be unveiled at the house, "Bruno's Warte," where the great Lieder composer first saw the light. The ceremony is to take place on June 28 next, the eightieth anniversary of Franz's birth.

HAMBURG.—A new opera, entitled "Kenilworth," the libretto founded upon Sir Walter Scott's novel, the music by Bruno Oscar Klein, was brought out recently at the Stadt Theater, and met with a favourable reception, a verdict which has been more than confirmed by subsequent performances. The young composer is a native of America.

LISBON.—Massenet's "Manon" was the principal novelty at the San Carlos Theatre during last month and met with a very good reception. The Revista Theatral contains a very able critical analysis of the work, but characterises the performance as "less than mediocre."

MAYENCE.—The Mainzer Liedertafel und Damen-Gesangverein is preparing for this summer two special performances of Handel's Oratorios "Hercules" and "Deborah," at which Dr. Chrysander's ideas will be carried into practical execution. The Empress Frederick has promised her personal assistance.

MEININGEN.—At the instigation and under the special patronage of the Duke, a Musical Festival, extending over three days, is to be held here in September next. As principal numbers in the programme of works to be produced may be instanced Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," and Brahms's "Triumphlied." The chorists will be furnished by the choirs of Meiningen, Hildburghausen, Sonneberg, Saalfeld, and Salzungen. The Joachim Quartet is likewise to take part in the proceedings.—A life-size bust of the late Hans von Bülow, the work of Herr Berwald, of Schwerin, has just been placed in the Grand Saloon of the Court Theatre.

MILAN.—A new opera entitled "Silvano," by Mascagni, was announced to be brought out at La Scala last month. This work employs no chorus, and has only three characters, for which Signori De Lucia and Pucini and Madame Stehle have been cast. The same composer's "Guglielmo Ratcliff" has continued to attract large audiences during the past month under Mascagni's direction.—MM. Gailhard, Hansen, and Paul Vidal's ballet "Maladetta" was produced at La Scala, last month, with great success. The work has been most superbly mounted.

MONTE CARLO.—The first performance on any stage took place here, on the 8th ult., of a posthumous opera in four acts, entitled "La Jacquerie," by the late M. Lalo, the composer of "Le Roi d'Ys." The work, which was left in a very unfinished state, has been completed by M. Coquard, to the extent indeed of three entire acts. The libretto has for its subject the revolt of the people against their feudal oppressors in the middle of the fourteenth century, and is the joint-production of M. Blau and Madame Simone Arnaud. The interesting novelty, which had been well-mounted under the able management of

M. Gunsbourg, was received with every sign of favour. The orchestration of the score is said to be throughout very effective, while a prayer to the Virgin, which occurs in the second act, is signalised as one of the most impressive passages in the opera. Mlle. Lowentz, Madame Deschamps, MM. Gerôme and Bouvet were the principal executants. High praise is bestowed upon the performance of the chorus, both vocally and histrionically.

MOSCOW.—A season of French opera is about to take place here for the first time, the operatic field having hitherto been occupied exclusively by Italian companies. The fact is the more singular as applying to a city where French is practically the language of society. The undertaking is under the direction of M. Devoyod, who has provided an efficient company and a fairly representative répertoire.

MUNICH.—An interesting performance of Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" has just been given at the Royal Opera House, under the direction of Capellmeister Levi. On the occasion referred to the exquisite and most valuable Louis XV. furniture and bric-à-brac in the rococo style, which the late King Louis had acquired for the famous special performances at which he formed the solitary audience, were employed in the mise-en-scène for the first time publicly. The effect was truly charming.—An opera, "Herzog Reginald," by the first baritone of the opera, Herr Otto Brucks, has been accepted by the directors for performance at an early date.

PRAGUE.—An opera, "Ratcliff," by the Hungarian composer, M. Vavrinetz, has just been brought out at the German Theatre of this capital. The book, like that of Mascagni's opera, is an operatic version of Heine's drama of that title.—A new ballet, entitled "A Wedding in Bohemia," is proving a great attraction just now at the National Theatre. The composer is Herr Bendl, who has availed himself with much effect of a number of the characteristic popular dance tunes of the country, while the reproduction of the picturesque and time-honoured costumes of the Bohemian peasantry serves to complete the national character of the piece.

ROME.—A new opera, "A basso Porto," has just been brought out with very considerable success at the Costanzi Theatre. The composer is Signor Ettore Spinelli, whose opera, "Labilia," obtained a prize in one of the Sonzogno competitions.

ST. PETERSBURG.—Madame Marcella Sembrich is meeting with a series of triumphs in her favourite parts at the Italian Opera here. Her expected assumption of the character of Tamara, in Rubinstein's "Il Demonio," is looked forward to with keen interest.

STOCKHOLM.—A posthumous Mass for solo, chorus, and orchestra, by the late Swedish composer, J. A. Södermann, has just been successfully performed here under the conductorship of M. Franz Néruda.

STUTTGART.—A one-act opera, "Der Meermann," by Dr. Hans Sommer, of Weimar, has been accepted for performance shortly at the Royal Opera House. The libretto, founded upon a popular Scandinavian legend, is from the pen of Herr Hans von Wolzogen.

THE HAGUE.—A very successful first performance (the second on any stage) was recorded at the Royal Theatre last month of the opera "Hulda," by the late César Franck.

TURIN.—A new opera in four acts, entitled "Tarass Bulba," by the Maestro A. Berutti, was brought out last month at the Teatro Regio with considerable success. The book of the new work is founded upon a novel by Nicolas Gogol, and has Signor Godio for its author.

VIENNA.—The much-coveted distinction of honorary membership has just been conferred by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde upon the following eminent musicians and musical authors—viz., Ambroise Thomas, A. Gevaert, Antonin Dvorák, Ed. Grieg, Franz Wüllner, Carl Reinecke, F. Chrysander, and Ed. Hanslick.—Dr. Guido Adler, of Prague, has been appointed to the chair of musical history at the University here, in the room of Dr. Hanslick, retired.—Carl Goldmark has put the final touches to a new opera, "Das Heimchen am Heerde," the libretto being a dramatised version of Dickens's "The Cricket on the Hearth."—The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra will give three Symphony Concerts here in the first week of this month, under direction, respectively, of Ed. Grieg, Felix Mottl, and Siegfried Wagner.—A permanent home for the performance of comic opera and operetta is at last to be established in this capital. Herr Pollini, of Hamburg, and Herr Jauner, of Vienna, two shrewd and experienced impresarios, have, it appears, jointly taken the historical Carl-Theater for the purpose, which is to be entirely renovated, and to be opened in the coming autumn by Herr Pollini's highly efficient Hamburg personnel, which will divide its time between the two musical centres.

WEIMAR.—Eugen d'Albert's fairy opera "Der Rubin" was performed here, for the first time, on February 24, under the composer's direction, and was very favourably received. During his stay here the pianist-composer gave a Concert for the benefit of the projected Liszt Memorial, at which he played, with sensational success, the last five Beethoven Sonatas.

ZURICH.—A special performance of "Tannhäuser" was given, on February 22, at the Municipal Theatre, in commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the historical so-called "last" production of the work here, under the personal direction of the master—viz., on February 23, 1855, and in which a number of local amateurs took an active part.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON February 21 the Irish Branch of the Railway Benevolent Institution gave a miscellaneous Concert in aid of its funds. Needless to add, the Ulster Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. The artists engaged were Madame Medora Henson, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Henry Stockwell, and Mr. Andrew Black as vocalists; while the instrumentalists were represented by Mons. Achille Rivarde (violinist) and Mr. John Lemmoné (the Australian flautist). Mrs. Andrew Black and Mr. Waddington Cooke acted as accompanists. The band of the 1st Battalion King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry also took part.

On February 22 Dr. Collisson gave the fourth of his Subscription Concerts, in the Ulster Hall, assisted by Mdlle. Marie Titiens, Miss Grace Damian, Miss Katie O'Flaherty, and Mr. Charles Magrath, with Mons. Doulou as solo violinist. The Concert was well attended. Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," which has not been heard in Belfast for a considerable time, was given in the Grosvenor Hall by the Belfast Choral Union, which has now entered upon its third season. The soloists were Madame Emily Parkinson, Miss McKisack, Mr. T. R. Tarleton, and Mr. John Hemingway; with Mrs. D. F. Kelly at the pianoforte and Mr. Allan F. Parker at the organ, Mr. J. G. Laughlan acting as Conductor.

The performance of A. R. Gaul's "Holy City" in the same hall, on the 1st ult., was a great success, and it is to be repeated early in April. The principal soloists in the cantata were Miss Isa Moore, Miss McKisack, Mr. W. Thomas, and Mr. H. Galloway. The chorus and orchestra (led by Mr. T. J. Lindsay) numbered some seventy performers, under the conductorship of Mr. A. E. J. McCreary. In the second part, which was miscellaneous, the artists already named took part, together with Mr. James Dean, Mr. T. Blair Boyd, and the Misses Stelfox and Moody.

Dr. Collisson brought his popular Concert season to a close on the 8th ult. A distinguished party of artists, including Signor Campanini, Miss Lindo, and Signor Novara as vocalists; with Miss Janotha (solo pianist), Mr. Edward de Jong (solo flautist), and Mons. Max Mossel (solo violinist) took part. There was a very large attendance. In making his announcement regarding next year's engagements, Dr. Collisson intimated that an additional attraction at his Concerts would be the appearance of the Belfast Select Choir, under the direction of Mr. Louis Mantell.

The Belfast Philharmonic Society produced on Friday, the 15th ult., Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with Mr. Andrew Black in the title rôle, Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Marie Hooton, and Mr. Charles Chillely. The members mustered in full force, and the orchestra, which was augmented from Sir Charles Hallé's band, gave on the whole a very fine performance, which was much appreciated. Needless to say, Mr. Andrew Black realised the composer's ideas to the full, while the other soloists gave creditable account of themselves. Mr. F. Koeller acted as Conductor, and Mr. Louis Werner presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BOTH enjoyable and successful was the annual Concert of the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society, which took place in Colston Hall on February 21. The list of pieces included the famous glee "Strike the lyre," of Tom Cooke; "Ave Maria" (C. A. Attenhofer), "At the dread hour" (Dr. S. S. Wesley), "The cloud-capt towers" (R. J. Stevens), "The Ivy" and "The Pedlar" (C. Lee Williams), "The Tyrol" (Ambrose Thomas), "Comrades in Arms" (Adolphe Adam), "I know an eye" (F. X. Chwatal), "Ave Maria" (F. Abt), "Ossian's Hymn to the Sun" (Sir John Goss), "How dear to me the hour" (C. Pinsuti), "Thou art my dream" (Metzger), "Thinking of home" (Millard), "What care I" (J. Blumenthal), "The Retreat" (L. de Rille), "Hymn to Night" (Beethoven), and "Hail, smiling morn" (R. Spofforth). Several of these compositions, including those of Dr. Wesley, Ambrose Thomas, and the first-named of Mr. Williams were now brought forward for the first time by the Society. Under the inspiring direction of Mr. George Riseley everything was sung with delightful precision and finish, Mr. Harper Kearton and Mr. W. Thomas, the soloists, contributing their share to the success of the Concert.

At the second Chamber Concert of Miss Lock, on February 25, Schubert's posthumous String Quartet in D minor, Mozart's String Quartet in F (No. 8), and Scharwenka's Sonata in D minor (Op. 2) for pianoforte and violin were brought forward. The Sonata, now introduced to Bristolians for the first time, afforded especial enjoyment. The customary executants took part in the Concert, and Mr. W. Ernest Young was the vocalist.

The efforts of Holy Trinity Choral Society, Clifton, a small body, it is true, deserve recognition. Its interpretation of Van Bree's cantata "St. Cecilia's Day," on February 22, under Mr. Fawn's direction, was such as to win commendation.

The usual weekly musical gatherings at the Clifton Spa have taken place during the month. Madame Albani and party gave a Concert at the Victoria Rooms, on the 11th ult. There have been many other musical performances of a minor character.

An exceedingly pleasing and successful performance of Gaul's sacred cantata "The Holy City" was given on February 22, by the Fortishead Choral Society. The work had been evidently studied with care under the direction of Mr. Hamilton Clarke, judging from the standard of excellence that marked its rendering. The choruses were sung with precision, intelligence, and expression; and the soloists—Miss Gath, Miss Aldersley, Misses Warry Smith, Chaffey, Glyde, and Uncles—did their work with commendable results.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE series of Wednesday Concerts, undertaken by the University Musical Society, have been so far successful that their continuance for another year is announced. During the term now at an end three Concerts have been given. On January 23 Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Bispham (in the absence of Mr. Plunket Greene) gave a Pianoforte and Vocal Recital. The programme of the second Concert, on February 13, included Bennett's "Naiads" Overture, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, and the "Siegfried" Idyll, with Mrs. Hutchinson as vocalist. At the Chamber Concert, on February 20, Mr. Frangon-Davies sang, and Mr. Gompertz's party gave Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 127) and Smetana's now well-known work in E minor.

The performance, by the Cambridge University Musical Society, in Trinity Chapel, last November, deserves some notice (though late) on account of the interesting character of the programme. A splendid chorus, unearthed by Mr. Sedley Taylor from the ponderous tomes of the German Handel Society, was given for the first time in England. This work, on the opening verses of Psalm cx., "Dixit Dominus," is of such a bright and vigorous character that it cannot fail to win wide acceptance. Bach's chorus "O Ewigkeit" was also performed (probably for the first time in England), and the programme further included a new anthem by Dr. Chas. Wood, a Motet, "Tristis est anima," by Orlando di Lasso, and Mackenzie's Benedictus. Mr. T. T. Noble, of Ely, was the organist, and Dr. Gray conducted. This term the Society has given a Choral and Orchestral Concert, on the 6th ult., at which local talent exclusively was represented. Dr. Joachim paid his annual visit on the 12th ult., and, assisted by Messrs. Inwards, Kreuz, and Ould, gave Quartets by Beethoven and Schumann. The great violinist met with his usual hearty reception. Miss Fillinger was the vocalist. Other events of the term have been Recitals by Messrs. Paderewski and Sauer. The former, curiously enough, gave Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 111), which had been selected also by Mr. Borwick only a week earlier, and the Cambridge public had an opportunity of comparing the different readings of the work by two great artists. The Cambridge University Musical Club and the Oxford Musical Union have made their usual interchange of visits. The Concert of madrigals by Dr. Mann's choir has been postponed until next term.

For next term the University Musical Society announces Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," and Dr. Mann's choir will take in hand Bridge's "Rock of Ages" and the "Hymn of Praise."

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

ST. MATTHIAS'S Choral Union performed Haydn's "Spring," with a miscellaneous selection, including the vocal march from "Tannhäuser," at the Adelaide Rooms, on February 26. In addition to the accompaniments, the band also played Sullivan's "Graceful" Dance from the "Henry VIII." music. Mr. Ernest Drury conducted, and Miss Amy Craig was principal vocalist.

On the same evening the Central Choral Association gave a Concert in the Gregg Memorial Hall, under the direction of Mr. G. S. Watts.

Herr Werner's eleventh Violin Recital took place on the same afternoon, in the Lecture Hall, Molesworth Street, and included Stanford's "Irish" Fantasias (No. 1, Boat Song; No. 2, Reel). Paganini, Raff, and Gade were also represented on the programme, which was interpreted with Herr Werner's well-known skill.

Professor Ebenezer Prout lectured at Trinity College on the same morning on "Forms of the Sonata," as illustrated in the later Sonatas of Beethoven. The public was admitted, and followed the Professor's illustrations with much interest. During Dr. Prout's visit to Dublin some important changes were made by the Senate of Dublin University in the curriculum for musical degrees, which will have the effect of defining more clearly than hitherto the exact scope of the examinations, and should meet with general approval.

The Society of Past Chorists of St. Patrick's gave a good performance of "The Messiah," in aid of the Coal Fund, on the 5th ult., at the Antient Concert Rooms, under the direction of Mr. Raymond Revell. The band and chorus numbered 150; the soloists were Misses Florence Hewson and Alex. Elsner, Messrs. Evan Cox and Aylmer Kelly; and Herr Werner led the orchestra.

The Glenageary Choral Society gave its second Concert (in aid of Sir Patrick Dun's Hospital) at Kingstown, on the 7th ult., Handel's "Acis and Galatea," with band and chorus of eighty performers, and a miscellaneous second part, made up the programme. Miss Elsie Connolly, Messrs. Dan Jones, R. G. Matthews, and T. F. Marchant were the principal soloists. Mr. Levenston led the band, and Mr. Frederick Welsh conducted.

Dr. W. H. Collisson's ninety-sixth Popular Concert took place at the Leinster Hall, on the 9th ult. The principal vocalists were Mdlles. Lindo and Beata Francis, Signori Campanini and Novara; and the instrumentalists were

Mr. de Jong (flute), Mdlle. Janotha (pianoforte), M. Max Mossell (violin), Mr. Spencer Lorraine and Dr. Collisson (accompanists). For his Benefit Concert, on the 23rd ult., Dr. Collisson announced an original Tennysonian operetta, entitled "Midsummer Madness," Hamilton Aidé and Virginia Gabriel's operetta "Widows Bewitched," and other attractive pieces.

A Benefit Concert given at the Antient Concert Rooms, on the 9th ult., by Miss Daisy Koe, brought a number of distinguished musicians together. Dr. T. R. G. Jozé and Miss Caroline Percival were the Conductors.

The series of Monday afternoon Chamber Music Recitals at the Royal Dublin Society is drawing to a close. On the 18th ult. the programme was made up of Beethoven's String Quartet in A major (Op. 18), Mendelssohn's Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello, and Brahms's Quartet in A (Op. 26) for pianoforte and strings. For the final Recital, on the 25th ult., the announcements were Mendelssohn's String Quartet in D (Op. 44), Beethoven's Violin Sonata in G (Op. 96), and Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44) for pianoforte and strings. The executants were Messrs. Papini, Delany, Grisard, Bast, and Esposito.

The second Concert of the Sackville Hall Musical Society took place on the 19th ult., under the direction of Dr. T. R. G. Jozé, and included Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and a miscellaneous selection. The principals were Misses Anne Irwin, Hilda Wilson, and Marie Jones.

Mr. Gordon Cleather, of the Royal College of Music, has been appointed to a vocal professorship at the Royal Irish Academy of Music.

Among the prospective announcements are the Dublin Musical Society's April Concert, at which Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" and a new "Fest-Messe," composed by the Conductor, Dr. Joseph Smith, will be performed; a performance of Mozart's Twelfth Mass with orchestra, on Palm Sunday, under the direction of Mr. Gleeson; a performance of Haydn's "Creation," on May 15, under the direction of Mr. P. Goodman; and a "Stewart" Concert in June, by the Dublin University Choral Society, under Mr. C. Marchant.

The movement for the revival of Irish music is making progress in the hands of the "Feis" committee. Dr. C. Villiers Stanford has accepted the presidency, and many influential names have been added to the executive.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE veteran Norwich Philharmonic Society gave its eighty-eighth Concert, in Noverre's Rooms, on February 21. The band, which now numbers forty performers, well sustained the reputation it has gained during the past few years, which is not a little due to the painstaking care of Dr. Horace Hill, who conducts the Society, and to Mr. F. W. B. Noverre, who, in addition to leading the band, is indefatigable in discharging the duties of honorary secretary. The two symphonic works chosen were Haydn's in F (the "Clock") and the first two movements from Beethoven's No. 8. Like most amateur orchestral bodies, the Philharmonic is not fully represented in several wind parts, but with the exception of a professional oboe, bassoon, and horn from London, the members are all residents in Norwich or the immediate neighbourhood, and the excellence of their work on this occasion was the theme of general remark among the audience. The effects in the graceful but trying Scherzando of Beethoven's work were capitally brought out. An Overture from the pen of the Conductor, written last year as a prelude to a short operetta, "The Sleeping Beauty," but now scored for a full orchestra, was played for the first time on this occasion. Its themes are attractive and freely treated, and the Overture deserves to be better known. The programme included Massenet's "Le dernier Soufflé de la Vierge," Ellenberg's March "The Mountain Gnomes," and Mozart's Horn Quintet in E flat, the principal part being in the safe hands of Mr. A. Borsdorf, ably supported in the string parts by Messrs. F. W. B. Noverre, H. Thouless, F. P. Pratt, and R. Price. Songs were contributed by Miss Beatrice Semence, a local artist rapidly coming to the front, and Mr. W. D. Tomkins.

The voluntary choir who assist at the special services held in the Nave of Norwich Cathedral on Sunday evenings, most laudably formed themselves into a Glee Club about twelve months since, under the conductorship of Mr. H. J. Brookes, and as a result of their practice gave a Concert on February 19, in Noverre's Rooms. With the assistance of several local amateurs a very enjoyable programme was submitted.

A special Lenten Musical Service was held in Norwich Cathedral, on the 7th ult., consisting of the first and second parts of Gounod's "Redemption," the executants being the Cathedral Choir, assisted by the choir of St. Mary Coslany Church, with Dr. Bates, the Cathedral Organist, at the organ. Possibly the choice of such a work without any band was hardly wise, but with that exception a careful rendering of the music was listened to with rapt attention by the very large congregation assembled. Between the parts of the Oratorio the Dean (Dr. Lefroy) gave a brief but eloquent address based upon the subject of the work.

Mr. H. Stonex, for many years organist of St. Nicholas Church, Great Yarmouth, as well as conductor of the local Musical Society, having been compelled, through failing health, to resign both those positions, his fellow townsmen determined to raise a testimonial fund as an expression of their respect, and to help forward this object a Concert was organised, which duly came off on the 7th ult., at the Royal Aquarium. Miss Anna Williams, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. R. Hilton, Dr. Bunnett (an old friend and fellow pupil), Mr. W. E. Tuddenham, Mr. A. Windle, and Master Percy Green were the principal performers; their services being generally gratuitous. The Great Yarmouth Musical Society also lent its aid in several vocal and instrumental pieces, conducted by Dr. Horace Hill. Both musically and peculiarly the Concert was a marked success.

We are glad to record the first Concert of the Attleborough Choral Society, because it marks the increased interest taken in music by small communities, which all lovers of the art desire to see spread. The Society has only been established a few months, but under the conductorship of Dr. Horace Hill it has attained considerable proficiency, and without attempting anything beyond its powers, the choir, numbering about fifty voices, made a satisfactory first appearance on February 26. Songs were contributed by Miss May Seiber, Miss R. Wordingham, Mr. Sawford Dye, and Mr. W. N. Ladell; and violin solos by Master Percy Green, of Yarmouth.

An Orchestral Society has recently been formed in Beccles, with the happy idea of ultimately working in conjunction with the local choral society. The members gave their first Concert, on February 26, under the bâton of Mr. W. Harvey. Sufficiently wise not to try anything beyond their strength, a highly satisfactory result was obtained. Vocal excerpts by Mrs. Percy Warwick, Miss Marion Tilney, and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. P. Wyatt were included in the programme, as were also two violoncello solos capably played by Mr. R. Price.

The new organ recently built by Messrs. Wordsworth & Co., of Leeds, in St. Margaret's Church, King's Lynn, was opened on February 25. In the afternoon a Recital was given by Sir Walter Parratt, interspersed with vocal solos by Mr. A. H. Cross and Mr. Herbert Hilton, while in the evening a fully choral service was rendered by the united choirs of St. Margaret, St. Nicholas, and All Saints. An appropriate sermon on the power of music was preached by the Lord Bishop of Thetford, followed by a Recital by Mr. A. W. Wilson.

The Ipswich Nonconformist Choir Union made its first appearance, in any large work, in the Public Hall of that town on February 27, the work chosen being "The Messiah." The band and chorus, numbering about 200, consist of ladies and gentlemen connected with the various Nonconformist places of worship in the borough, Mr. J. Hayward being the Conductor. With the assistance of Miss Etta Wright (soprano), Miss Louise Auther (contralto), Mr. Allan C. Orriss (tenor), and Mr. Musgrove Tufnall (bass), a very creditable performance was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. It should be said that the tenor soloist is a member of one of the local Nonconformist choirs. The profits were devoted to the East Suffolk Hospital.

Stainer's "Crucifixion" was performed at Christ Church, Eaton, on the 15th ult., and was to be repeated on the 20th. The solos were sung by members of the choir. Mr. D. Underhill, Organist and Choirmaster, presided at the organ, and Mr. C. H. Duffield, Assistant-Organist of Norwich Cathedral, conducted. The "Crucifixion" was also announced for performance on the 22nd ult. and Good Friday, at St. Peter Permountergate, under Mr. Duffield's direction.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MR. HENSCHEL'S last appearance among us as the Conductor of the Scottish Orchestra was the occasion of a large and extremely enthusiastic audience at Messrs. Paterson's tenth and last Concert of the series on the 6th ult. The demonstration which greeted him was a slight acknowledgment of our indebtedness to him for splendid programmes and ever improving performances, and the storm of applause at the close of the Concert sought to convey to him our regret at losing such a vivifying artistic influence as he has proved. Mr. Paterson's annual statement to his subscribers intimated the gratifying success of the spirited scheme which is now in its tenth year of prosperity, and it also disclosed the fact that Mr. Henschel's successor would be Mr. Kes. The programme included Brahms's "Tragic" Overture (magnificently played), Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Lady Hallé), Mozart's ever-fresh E flat Symphony, Saint-Saëns's tuneful Serenade, for cor anglais, viola, and orchestra; a Romanza by Bruch, and Weber's "Jubilee" Overture. The illustrated programme books, edited by Mr. Dibdin, have shown a distinct advance in the splendour of their get-up, and pictures, tail pieces, and musical quotations have been lavishly introduced in the praiseworthy desire to increase the interest of the audience in the composers and compositions.

In the Music Hall, on February 25, the choir of St. George's Church, under Mr. Hartley's skilful bâton, repeated the Palestrina Mass, "Pape Marcelli," which gave such pleasure last year. The choir sang with great taste and very evident appreciation of the wonderful music. The ravages of influenza and prevalent catarrh were rather evident, but the intonation was remarkably exact, and the general impression left was one of elevated æsthetic pleasure and of sincere gratitude to the earnestness of a society which had taken such pains with such a work. Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" constituted the second part of the programme.

The intention to refer to Professor Niecks's interesting scheme of Historical Concerts as a whole must be broken in order to mention one of the most thoroughly enjoyable choral performances ever heard in Edinburgh. A choir of about sixty voices had been gathered together to study under the Professor's careful direction, and at the performance on February 27, the serious intention, the minute care in detail, the familiarity with the music, and the earnestness felt all the more strongly in the academic atmosphere, made an audience, which might have been larger, feel that they had taken advantage of a rare opportunity. The deepest impression was made by Durante's noble Magnificat—perhaps because its beauty and its interest came as a surprise to the great majority of those present. Palestrina was represented by a Motet and a selection from the Mass "Iste Confessor"; and Bach's "I wrestle and pray," and the "Glory to God," from the "Christmas" Oratorio, served to show one of the thousand beauties of the great master. Organ works by Buxtehude and others were played by Mr. A. Scott Jupp.

The programmes of the Edinburgh Bach Society, now in its seventh session, have been of unusual interest. At the fifth meeting, on the 18th ult., in the Freemasons' Hall, the choir of St. George's Church, under Mr. Hartley, sang a selection from the B minor Mass; Mr. Sons, the leader of the Scottish Orchestra, played the Chaconne and the E major Sonata (No. 6); and pianoforte and vocal solos were contributed by Miss Dundas (C minor Prelude and Fugue and C minor Fantasia) and Miss Mary Black ("Rejoice, ye souls, elect and holy"). There was a very good audience.

This Part-Song may also be had arranged for Male Voices (A.T.T.B.), No. 264, THE ORPHEUS, price 2d.

Additional interest was lent to the annual Service of the Young Men's Guild, in St. Cuthbert's Church, on the 17th ult., by the performance of a new Jubilate for men's voices, by Mr. R. F. McEwen, one of the most earnest and enthusiastic of those in Edinburgh whose lives are devoted to other subjects, but who love music for music's sake.

On the 20th ult. the interest in the annual Philosophical Institution Concert was accentuated by the absence, for the first time, of the veteran artist and established favourite, Signor Piatti. His place was taken by Mr. Ould. Dr. Joachim played Tartini's "Trillo del Diavolo"; Miss Fanny Davies contributed solos by D'Albert and Chopin, and joined Dr. Joachim and Mr. Ould in trios by Kahn and Mendelssohn (Op. 49). Dr. Joachim has not been in such brilliant form for some years. His rendering of the "Trillo" was rewarded with a triple recall, to which he responded with a movement of a Bach Sonata. Mrs. Helen Truist was the vocalist.

Miss Bertha Martini, assisted by Mr. Tramm and Mr. Willy Benda, gave a Recital in the Freemasons' Hall on the 11th ult. The audience was small but enthusiastic. Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello was the most successful effort in the interesting programme.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MR. WILLEM KES, the new Conductor of the Scottish Orchestra, comes to Glasgow with excellent credentials. The appointment is, indeed, regarded with general satisfaction, and the Dutch musician may take it that a hearty welcome awaits him on the shores of the Clyde, as also in the various Scotch cities where the band will be heard during next season. As Conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Amsterdam, Mr. Kes, who is, we believe, in his thirty-ninth year, has won a foremost position, and he is also an accomplished violinist and pianist. Our season here will last, it is understood, for sixteen weeks, and, as before, no expense will be spared in maintaining the efficiency of the orchestra over which Mr. Henschel so worthily presided during the last two winters. Just before his departure from Glasgow, Mr. Henschel received a letter of thanks for his artistic co-operation in the work of the orchestra, and regretting his inability to accept a re-engagement. The letter was signed by the Lord Provost of Glasgow, Chairman of the Choral and Orchestral Union; Mr. James Summers, President of the Glasgow Choral Union; and Mr. James A. Allan, Chairman, Scottish Orchestra Co., Ltd.

The brief record which space can afford of last month's work at both the Classical and Popular Concerts begins with the 2nd ult., when the programme included three of the pieces heard before the Queen at Windsor Castle on the previous evening. As might have been expected, Mr. Henschel and his men had a cordial reception, in recognition of the honours paid them by royalty. Miss Evangeline Florence sang to admiration, and Miss Inga Schumann made a promising appearance as a violinist. On the 5th ult. Lady Hallé once more enjoyed the high favour of what was the largest audience of the season. St. Andrew's Hall was nearly filled, and as novelty in the programme was conspicuous by its absence, there can be little doubt that the charm of the soloist's appearance in Beethoven's Violin Concerto was the attraction of the evening. The Symphony was Brahms's No. 3, which had, of course, been heard here before. On the 9th ult. the orchestra made its last appearance for the season, the programme was laid out on popular lines, and at the close of the performances Mr. Henschel was again and again called in response to the enthusiasm of a very large audience. At the Chamber Concert in connection with the choral and orchestral series, on the 21st ult., Dr. Joachim, Mr. C. Ould, and Miss Fanny Davies appeared in an excellent programme, and Mrs. Helen Truist sang.

Mr. Siloti's Pianoforte Recital, on the 6th ult., was poorly attended, and we are afraid that the accomplished young Russian was not altogether at his best. Mr. Emil Sauer had devised an attractive programme for the evening of the 20th ult., and later on Mr. Sivinski was announced to again appear before his Glasgow friends. Mr. Sauer's date collided, unfortunately, with the Messrs. Harrison's Concert, at which Madame Albani and other distinguished artists appeared. Numerous miscellaneous concerts took place in Glasgow and neighbourhood during last month, and, amongst others, a very creditable performance of Sullivan's "The Prodigal Son," under the auspices of the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society. On the same evening (14th ult.) Kinning Park Free Church Musical Association essayed "The Messiah," and did ample justice to Handel's work in the absence of the needful orchestral accompaniment. The Orpheus Club, a spirited local organisation, arranged for a series of four performances of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Princess Ida," each of which spoke much for the artistic abilities of the members; and on the 22nd ult. the fifth annual Concert in connection with the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music took place. Mr. Allan Macbeth's programme was, as usual, in excellent taste. Few, at any rate, would cavil at selections from Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater," Grieg's Orchestral Suite (Op. 46), the "Leonore" Overture (No. 3), and many other equally good things.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two Concerts given during March by the Philharmonic Society have brought its fifty-sixth session to a close. The final performance, consisting of Edgar Tinel's Oratorio "St. Francis," occurred on the 26th ult., and too late for extensive notice at present; but the penultimate evening, on the 5th ult., is deserving of special recognition for one reason—that it introduced to a Liverpool audience the composer himself as well as the Symphony in A minor by Edward German. Both received a most cordial welcome, the work itself proving ample justification of the good things that have been said and the greater things that have been expected of the writer who first claimed acceptance at the hands of the general public through the medium of his now familiar "Henry VIII." music. Another notable feature of the Concert in question was the re-entrance of Dr. Joachim in company with Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the beauties of which work the veteran violinist last made us so intimately familiar with more years ago than the younger generation of music-lovers can count in their own experience.

As before stated, Liverpool is decidedly orchestral in its predilections, and, on the 2nd ult., the fourth Smoking Concert of Mr. Rodewald's Orchestral Society took place. The founder of this now firmly established organisation had gracefully enlisted the services of Mr. E. Goossens to conduct the first part of the programme, the leading feature of which was Beethoven's Eighth Symphony in F, and the late musical director of the Royal Carl Rosa Company left a distinct mark on the work of the fine band which has been recruited by his gifted amateur host. In regard to the latter it may truthfully be said that but few men of the present age in the kingdom have done more to fuse the often widely separated ranks of instrumentalists—who either live solely by their art or who study it for the pure love thereof—than the gentleman who has placed himself in the van of the army of musicians, subsidised or otherwise, in this city. In the same direction, Mr. Rodewald has now lent his presence and aid as a committeeman and simple member of the orchestra to that venerable institution, the Società Armonica, of which Mr. W. Cafferata still retains the conductorship, and which seems to have become rejuvenated and to have entered upon a new lease of life.

The only important local choral events of the month have been Gounod's "Redemption," given on the 12th ult. by the Musical Society, with most gratifying results, under Mr. D. O. Parry; and Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at the last of the Sunday Concerts, at St. George's Hall, under Mr. Argent. The same Oratorio, under the same conductorship, was given at Liscard on the 18th ult., when Mr. Gibson, a resident amateur, scored a success in the titular music. The Post Office Choral Society gave its second Concert of the season at the Picton Hall, and devoted the programme to miscellaneous matter, in regard to which the singing of part-songs, under Mr. J. C. Clarke, calls for special commendation. On the 4th ult. Rossini's "Messe Solennelle" was given at Rock Ferry by the Musical Society, whose record, under Mr. Pemberton, still proves a gratifying factor in our suburban musical life; and at Runcorn, Spohr's "Last Judgment" was announced for the final effort of the subscription series of the Musical Society, under Mr. F. H. Crossley.

The opera season closed on the 2nd ult., and with it has unfortunately ended that long succession of pleasant evenings at the Court Theatre, to which those who preferred something better than pantomime have looked forward at the opening of each new year ever since the late Carl Rosa first made Liverpool his headquarters. Gossip had been rife for some time past that such was to be the case, but it was hardly credited, till definitely announced from the stage by Mr. H. Bruce, that in January, 1896, clown and pantaloons would take the place of Humperdinck and Mozart—and all the host of composers coming between the periods of each—whose music we have been for so long accustomed to expect with each new year. A season of opera was promised later on next year, but the echo of the kindly cries of "No, No," which greeted the statement previously made by the managing director may possibly yet give him cause to reconsider his decision; and if this be the case, the re-appearance of the national operatic organisation in the city which has been not unfaithful to its late chief will be again welcomed; but more heartily, perhaps, than ever before.

At the Pro-Cathedral, on the 21st ult., Spohr's "Calvary" was given as the Lenten Oratorio. Mr. F. H. Burstall presided at the organ, and Mr. C. Collins conducted. The resident choir was, as usual, considerably augmented for the occasion. On the 18th ult. the local Welsh Wesleyans held a Festival of Sacred Song, under Mr. R. W. Jones; a feature of the performance, upon which all concerned may be congratulated, being the employment of orchestral assistance.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WE are so quickly hastening to the close of our winter enjoyments that very soon our Concert-rooms will be wholly devoted to non-musical meetings. To the conclusion, on the 7th ult., of Sir Charles Hallé's series of Subscription Concerts, the annual visit of Herr Joachim, the co-operation of Lady Hallé, together with the local interest naturally felt in the welfare and progress of Miss Sarah Berry served to attract an audience probably never surpassed in the Free Trade Hall; and the unstinted applause testified the satisfaction of the crowded audience at the undiminished excellence of the provision so carefully made during thirty-seven seasons for the delectation of all lovers of orchestral music. That no vital change may, for many years, interfere with the continuity of our Thursday evening gatherings was evidently the sincere and earnest hope of the thousands present.

Although the Concerto in D (Op. 77) of Brahms, which was selected by the now venerable violinist—who is always received here with a loyalty due to his high talent and to his unswerving adherence to what is worthy in Art—may not be calculated to sustain, without some flagging, the interest of an audience largely composed of those to whom scholastic development and novelties of construction make but faint appeal, still throughout the work there are sprinkled many charming passages, delightful changes, and carefully contrived effects. But the exquisite unity of purpose which moved Lady Hallé and Herr Joachim to an absolutely perfect performance of Spohr's unaccompanied Duet in D, ministered to the intense delight of every listener. Miss Berry's even, melodious voice is ever soothing and pleasant, and Arthur Somervell's little "Shepherd's Cradle Song" (so beautifully scored) is specially adapted to a style of singing which is chaste rather than demonstrative. The repetition in the previous week of Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" calls for no special remark, except that Mr. Bantock Pierpoint took the part which Mr. Santley had previously essayed. The rendering of the work was even better than at its first presentation. Everybody felt more confident. The choral portions, so well prepared by Mr. R. H. Wilson, were given with yet higher spirit, vigorously as they had been interpreted a month previous, and the orchestral interweavings of the themes were more delicately unfolded. But the estimate originally formed of the whole composition remains unchanged. The beauty of the opera lies almost entirely in the second act, and even that portion might, with advantage, be curtailed. It was impossible in due order of time to make adequate report of the last Concert of the previous month; but to pass over, without fitting acknowledgment, the services which Mr. Willy Hess has rendered here as a soloist, as a teacher, and especially as a leader would be equally impossible. During his stay among us the increased vigour and confidence of attack of the first violins have been very remarkable; and the gratitude and goodwill of the audience were, after the cheers for the Conductor had been given, duly shown by a loud recall and enthusiastic applause.

There was more life than usual about the Orchestral Concert of the Gentlemen's Society, and many interesting associations were stirred; but even in the "Italian" Symphony, and still more in a Suite by Saint-Saëns and in the "Slav Air" (varied) of Delibes, the unsuitability of the room for a band was evident. Under Dr. Watson's direction an afternoon rendering of Dr. J. F. Bridge's "Cradle of Christ" and a selection from Purcell's works were given on the 6th ult., and an attractive programme of chamber music, including Beethoven's Septet, is announced.

At his second Recital, in the Free Trade Hall, Mr. Emil Sauer more than confirmed the favourable opinions gained at his first appearance here; and he need not doubt but that a warm welcome would always greet him in this city.

That the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company is stronger in vocal or in dramatic talent than at any previous time could scarcely be averred; but that wise attention to all-round completeness which has always characterised the management has in no respect relaxed, and an increased activity in providing fresh attraction is meeting with due reward. By the revival of that strangely neglected lyric drama, "Der Freischütz," the production of "Hansel and Gretel," of MacCunn's "Jeanie Deans," and of several smaller works, many are drawn to the Theatre Royal who would certainly not be lured thither by the repetition of the stock pieces of the old repertoire.

For his annual benefit Concert, Mr. G. W. Lane brought down Miss Ella Russell, Miss Sarah Berry, and other popular artists, who, together with the large choir of the Manchester Philharmonic Society, ministered to the delight of a crowded gathering.

The monthly open practice-meeting of the students of the Royal Manchester College of Music, on the 14th ult., was honoured by the presence and encouraging words of Dr. Joachim.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of "Elijah," by the North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society, on February 28, may be recorded as the best effort of the season. Band, chorus, and soloists vied with each other in giving artistic renderings of the various numbers; Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap conducted with judgment; Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Marie Hooten, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. Dan Price were the soloists; and the band was led by Mr. F. Ward. Several members of the chorus (notably Miss Powell, of Hanley) assisted in the trios and quartets, and Mr. Sherratt presided at the organ.

The Meakin Concert, on Tuesday, the 5th ult., brought together the largest audience of the season. This being the last of the present series, the Mayor of Hanley (Alderman R. Hammersley) thanked the audience for their support and assured them that the committee would endeavour to maintain the same high standard in the future. The programme was supplied by the Royal Hungarian Band (conductor, Fehér Lajos), and Miss Kate Drew, Miss Florence Hoskins, and Mr. Thorndyke.

On the 7th ult., at the Assembly Room of the Newcastle Municipal Buildings, a Concert, promoted by the local authorities, was well attended. Mrs. A. M. Lee, Miss Scott, Mr. R. Cheesman, and an orchestral party (Dr. R. M.

Winn, Messrs. T. M. Abbott, J. Camanzind, T. R. Abbott, and J. Abbott) contributed to the programme. Mr. J. Alcock acted as accompanist.

The Florence Choir held its annual Concert in the Longton Town Hall on the 7th ult. A crowded audience greeted the youthful singers, and the performance of the dramatic cantata "William Tell" was an unqualified success. At the Hanley Higher Grade School Concert several operatic selections (by Mr. D'Oyly Carte's permission) were included and attracted considerable attention. The Head-master (Mr. F. B. Gill) announced that, as the result of the Concert, a substantial sum would be available for the Scholarship Fund.

At the monthly meeting of the Hanwell Town Council the Concert committee announced that the Meakin Fund had a balance of £220 in hand, being £20 over the sum originally invested. The Duchess of Sutherland contributed to the programme of a very successful Concert, held on the 19th ult., at her county seat, Trentham. Miss Woolley, Mr. B. B. Barlow, Mrs. Mellor, and Miss Godfrey also assisted.

The Sir Smith Chit Society performed "Jephtha," on the 21st ult., at Tunstall. The choir of 140 voices gave evidence of careful training.

The Annual Wesleyan Choirs Festival was held at the Victoria Hall, on the 25th ult. A selected choir of 400 voices rendered part-songs under the direction of Mr. Butler, of Hanley.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," by the Gateshead Choral Society, alluded to last month, duly came off in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on February 26. For the occasion a very capable orchestra of sixty performers was engaged, the best available local talent being supplemented by a contingent selected from Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra. The chorus, numbering about 250 excellent voices, proved to be in every respect equal to the demands which the work makes upon them, and the soloists—Miss Emily Davies, Madame Marie Bellas, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. John Sandbrook—fully realised all that was expected of them. It follows, therefore, that the work was heard under advantageous circumstances, and the impression it produced was most favourable in every respect. Mr. James M. Preston conducted, and to him is due the chief credit of bringing to a first hearing in Newcastle the most important and successful cantata of recent date. It is very remarkable that "The Golden Legend" has had to wait nine years for an introduction to the people of Newcastle. In this fact is to be found probably the strongest proof that could be adduced of the unsatisfactory condition of matters musical which has prevailed in this important centre of commercial life for many years past. There has been a decided improvement this season, and it is to be hoped that the change for the better may prove to be permanent. The performance of "The Golden Legend" here alluded to was preceded by a Wagner selection, which was greatly appreciated by a very large audience.

The Seaham Harbour Musical Society, which was formed last season, with Mr. Oscar Cohen, of Sunderland, as Conductor, is making progress in the right direction. On February 27 the members of the Society gave their annual Concert in the Londonderry Drill Hall, Seaham Harbour, producing on the occasion Professor Prout's cantata "Alfred," with Madame Shepherd (of Glasgow), Mr. H. Parratt (of Ripon Cathedral), and Mr. Morgan Wilkinson as soloists, and an orchestra led by Mr. W. W. Lax (of Sunderland). The chorus and orchestra together numbered about 130, and the performance gave great satisfaction, Mr. Oscar Cohen being warmly congratulated upon the success of the Concert.

On the 5th ult. Mr. J. H. Beers gave his third Concert of Chamber Music of the present season, in the Grand Assembly Rooms, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The programme included Goetz's Quartet for pianoforte and strings in E (Op. 6) and Schubert's Quintet for pianoforte and strings in A (Op. 114). The performers were Mr. J. H. Beers (violin),

Mr. J. S. Tucker (viola), Mr. S. H. Beers (violinello), Mr. W. G. Lawson (contrabass), and Mr. S. Wiggins (pianoforte). Madame Marie Bellas was the vocalist, and sang with much acceptance.

For its first Concert of the present season the Sunderland Philharmonic Society gave, on the 6th ult., the first two parts of Haydn's "Creation," Dr. Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," and other pieces. The soloists were Miss Maggie Davies, Mr. John Child, and Mr. Andrew Black, all of whom were eminently successful. The band and chorus numbered 200 performers, with Mr. W. W. Lax as leader and Mr. Kilburn as Conductor. Amongst the other pieces upon the programme may be mentioned a Choral Fantasia on National Airs by Mr. G. F. Vincent, a local musician. The Concert was entirely successful and reflected credit upon all concerned. It is worthy of remark that this Concert closed the thirty-fifth season of the Sunderland Philharmonic Society. During the period of its existence the Society has been instrumental in introducing to the people of Sunderland a very large number of important works for voices and orchestra, and in other ways has conferred inestimable benefits upon the town. Never in its lengthy career, however, has it been more successful, or accomplished better artistic results, than under the direction of its present Conductor, Mr. Kilburn.

During the past month the Jarrow Philharmonic Society, of which Mr. J. M. Preston is the Conductor, gave a very creditable performance of Handel's "Judas Maccabæus." The soloists were Madame Adelaide Mullen, Miss Cecilia Armitage, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. C. H. Ditchburn.

On the 19th ult. the Newcastle Chamber Music Society gave its final Concert of the season, the artists being Dr. Joachim, Mr. C. Ould (who replaced Signor Piatti), Miss Fanny Davies, Miss Louise Phillips (vocalist), and Mr. J. M. Preston (accompanist). The programme included Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101) for pianoforte and strings, Schumann's Carnival (Op. 9), admirably played by Miss Fanny Davies; Max Bruch's Concerto for violin in G minor (No. 1), played by Dr. Joachim; and Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor (Op. 49). Some disappointment was felt at the non-appearance of Signor Piatti owing to illness, but the Concert was in every respect enjoyable and successful.

On the 20th ult. the South Shields Choral Society gave a performance of Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. John Sandbrook. The chorus and orchestra numbered 200 performers, with Mr. J. H. Beers as leader, Miss A. Smith at the pianoforte, and Mr. M. Fairs as Conductor. The programme also included other pieces, chief among which may be mentioned the March Hongroise from Berlioz's "Faust." This Society has done much for music in South Shields during the past eleven years, and has still much useful work before it.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MESSRS. ELLENBERGER and Thorpe's Chamber Concerts always excite genuine interest in local musical circles, because of the absence of hackneyed pieces from the programme and the high artistic results attained in performance. The Concert on February 26 was no exception. The instrumentalists were Messrs. Ellenberger (violin), G. A. Mohr (viola), and E. Thorpe (violinello), with Miss Ellenberger at the pianoforte. For the first time a vocalist was engaged, and Mrs. Varvill made the innovation a welcome one by her artistic singing of Caldara's "Come raggio di sol," Salviator Rosa's "Star Vicino," Goring Thomas's "Wind in the trees," and Chaminade's "Ritornello." Mr. Ellenberger's fine performance of Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor brought him a hearty recall.

Mr. William Allen's Classical Concert, on the 6th ult., was doubly interesting; firstly, because the programme included Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E flat (Op. 12), Beethoven's Sonata in A (Op. 69) for violinello and pianoforte, Tartini's "Trillo del Diavolo," and finally Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet; and because Dr. Joachim was to head the party of artists engaged. An attack of influenza unfortunately prevented Mr. Whitehouse from appearing; but an able substitute was found in Herr Carl Fuchs. Miss Cantelo again delighted her audience by her thoroughly artistic pianoforte playing. Dr. Joachim's incomparable playing of Tartini's Sonata brought him a determined recall, in response to which he played two movements from a Violin Sonata by J. S. Bach. Herr Carl Fuchs' playing of the Beethoven Sonata was expressive and thoroughly sympathetic with the great master in one of his most alluring moods.

The subscribers to the drawing-room Concerts had a disappointment in the postponement of their last Concert (announced for the 12th ult.), owing to the illness of Herr Wilhelmj. We trust that it is only a pleasure deferred, and that the great violinist will soon be restored to health.

The Sacred Harmonic Society closed its season, on the 21st ult., with a fine performance of "Samson," under the direction of Mr. John Adcock. No pains or expense were spared to make the revival of this interesting work one that might do something to keep alive the somewhat flagging zeal for Handel's undeservingly lesser known works. Dr. Prout's additional accompaniments were used. The principal vocalists were Miss Emily Squire, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. Andrew Black took the place of Mr. Norman Salmond at short notice—in consequence of the latter's illness. The soloists were all loudly applauded for their efforts, but the parts of Samson and Harapha contain the most telling passages, and naturally brought to Mr. Piercy and Mr. Black the greatest honours. The chorus and band were in good form, and the public interest in the performance was a gratifying result of the revival of this fine work.

The St. Cecilia Society's Concerts always attract, because of personal interest in the only chorus limited to ladies' voices and the exceptionally recherché programmes. Gernsheim's lovely "Salve Regina" was especially admired at the last Concert, on the 18th ult. Mr. Ellenberger's orchestra appeared and contributed to the excellence of the Concert. Mrs. Woodcock, Mrs. Dunstan, Miss Chalcraft, and Mrs. Gow gave solos very acceptably. The Concert was under the direction of Mrs. Gow, to whom credit and thanks are unmistakably due for her successful organisation and selection.

The Mansfield Harmonic Society gave its final Concert of this season on the 19th ult., when Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" was performed. This beautiful work thoroughly pleased the large audience which assembled, and the singing of the choruses by the Society, under the direction of Mr. Marshall-Ward, left little to be desired. The solo parts were sustained by Mr. F. S. Gilbert, Miss Gosnell, and Mr. Vallance, who surmounted the difficulties of the music with success. A short miscellaneous selection concluded the programme.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

CONCERT-GIVING in Oxford has been pursued of late years with an ardour quite disproportionate to the size and wealth of the city, and the Lent term of the present year marks a culminating point in this enthusiasm. It is hardly too much to say that nearly every singer of note, commencing with Madame Albani, and every instrumentalist of note, from Dr. Joachim and Mr. Paderewski downwards, has been announced to take part in performances here during the eight weeks of term. Strange to say, the influenza only interfered in the case of Madame Albani, so that the music of the term has left nothing to be desired either for quantity or quality. But it has become more apparent than ever that the supply is far in excess of the demand, and that the inhabitants have neither the time nor the money to furnish audiences for so great a number of entertainments.

The musical events which have been specially connected with the place have been the Choral and Philharmonic Society's performance of "The Messiah," the professorial lectures, and the music written for the "Merchant of Venice" by Mr. Bussell, of Brasenose College. Handel's Oratorio proved true to its traditions by attracting the largest audience of the term, who were rewarded by a decidedly good performance. "The Messiah" was also the subject of Sir John Stainer's Lecture, and a most interesting Lecture it was. Probably few of the audience were previously aware how much of the familiar Oratorio was drawn from music that Handel had originally written for very different words. Mr. Birkbeck's Lecture on "The Music of the Russian Church" suffered much from the prevailing epidemic, which reduced the chorus for his illustrations to the most slender proportions. Probably much of the service music thus sung would be impressive if rendered by a large body of voices, but the effect with such meagre resources as were available was only that of a rather monotonous and melancholy wailing. The other Lectures for the term consisted of discussions on Form and on Madrigals, by Mr. Hadow and Dr. Roberts respectively.

The music written for the performance of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," by the University Dramatic Society, was composed by Mr. Bussell, an amateur well known here for the variety of his accomplishments. It proved to be clever, but not very interesting. Probably the composer has had little experience in stage music; at any rate, the music seemed to lack distinction, in spite of the fact that much of it was full of charming ideas. The Overture and the first entr'acte were the most successful portions, though a Nocturne might prove very effective under more favourable circumstances.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Sheffield Musical Union gave a Concert on February 28, at which the principal work performed was Dr. Bridge's "Rock of Ages." In this, as in Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," which followed, the admirable singing of the chorus calls for mention. A miscellaneous programme followed. Dr. Coward conducted.

On the same evening Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" was performed by the St. Matthias' Vocal Society, aided by the church choir. The rendering of the work reflected much credit on Mr. J. Ibbotson, who conducted.

The Amateur Instrumental Society, an enterprising organisation conducted by Dr. Coward, gave its second Subscription Concert on the 5th ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," a selection from "Dinorah," an Intermezzo by Hamm, and Overtures by Rossini, Flotow, and Auber. Miss A. Webster and Mr. A. Dawes were the vocalists.

The Brincliffe Musical Society gave a successful Concert, on the 8th ult., under the direction of Mr. W. H. Peasegood. The programme, which opened with Thomas's "Raymond" Overture, included pieces by Mendelssohn, Ganne, and Caryl.

On the 9th ult. Dr. Coward lectured at Firth College, on "The rise and development of Opera." The learned doctor treated his subject thoroughly, tracing the development of the form during the last 300 years, and paying high tribute to the genius of Purcell, Gluck, and Wagner. At intervals musical illustrations were given which added considerably to the interest of the Lecture.

On the 18th ult. the fourth Harrison Concert was given in the Albert Hall. The party included the Meister Glee Singers.

On the 4th ult. the Stockbridge Tonic Sol-fa Association performed Coward's "King's Error," the composer conducting. The musical development of Stockbridge has been rapid and marked, and the town possesses considerable musical enterprise. On the occasion under notice the singing of the chorus, trained by Mr. J. W. Fawcett, was excellent, and the Society is to be congratulated on its success.

The thirteenth annual Concert of the Chapeltown and District Sacred Harmonic Society took place on the 12th ult., when a fine performance of Benedict's "St. Peter" was given. The principals were Miss Blanche Powell, Mrs. Creser, Mr. T. Child, and Mr. W. Riley. Mr. J. Peck led the band, Mr. F. Senior was organist, and Mr. Bool conducted. There was a crowded audience, and the Concert was the most successful given by the Society.

The Conisbro' Musical Society, an excellent organisation worthy of cordial support and encouragement, gave a Concert on the 14th ult. The first part consisted of Hutchinson's cantata "The Story of Elaine," which, under Mr. H. J. Sharp, was admirably performed by the members. The second part was made up of miscellaneous pieces.

The Ilkeston Harmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Cowen's "Rose Maiden," in the Town Hall, on the 18th ult. Mr. W. G. Taylor was the Conductor.

The Ashbourne Orchestral Society gave the second Concert of its ninth season in the Town Hall, on the 19th ult. The programme included Beethoven's Symphony in C (No. 1), and Overtures by Mozart, Wagner, and Suppé. Mr. F. Ward, of Birmingham, played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in admirable style. Miss Greta Williams was the vocalist. Mr. W. H. Tatt conducted.

The Mansfield Harmonic Society performed Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" in the Town Hall, on the 19th ult. The principals were Miss Nellie Gosnell, Mr. F. S. Gilbert, and Mr. A. C. Vallance. Mr. F. Marshall Ward conducted.

Mr. Paderewski was announced to give a Recital in the Albert Hall, Sheffield, on the 29th ult.

MUSIC IN WILTS AND HANTS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE local records for the past month are, by reason of the penitential season of Lent, meagre in the extreme.

An interesting Concert was given in the Council Chamber, Salisbury, on the 7th ult., by the Salisbury Orpheus Society, under the conductorship of Mr. T. E. Spinney, assisted by the Countess of Radnor. The public appearances of the Society—the only Society of its kind in Wiltshire—are few and somewhat far between, a fact which those who listened to the admirable part-singing on the occasion in question could not fail to regret.

Lady Radnor, Miss Lever, Miss Nightingale, Mr. Del Val, and Mr. Mountford sang songs, and some effective pianoforte and violoncello solos were played by Miss A. G. Smith and Mr. Leonard Sly respectively. Three recitations by Miss Ella W. Taunton also met with warm appreciation. The accompaniments were played by Miss Curzon, Mrs. Sly, and Mr. Spinney. The proceeds of the Concert, a substantial sum, were devoted to the local distress fund.

The three days' Festival, under the auspices of the Wilts Oratorio Society, which was to have taken place at Devizes this spring, has been abandoned for the present. The Society will, however, make one more appearance this season, under its indefatigable Conductor, Mr. Edwin Nunn, when an important choral work will be performed with full orchestral accompaniment.

The eighteenth season of the Trowbridge Musical Union was inaugurated, on the 12th ult., by a miscellaneous Concert in the Town Hall. The chief feature of the programme was a selection from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," the principal vocalists being Miss Ethel Winn, Miss Fanny Evans, Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Thomas. A small orchestra, led by Mr. W. Millington, assisted, and Mr. H. Millington was the Conductor. A performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" is announced for the latter part of this month.

At Bournemouth, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé's Recital, always a popular event, was attended by a very large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. Charles Fletcher's annual Concert was announced to take place at the Shaftesbury Hall on the 30th ult., and on the same day Madame Belle Cole, supported by a strong company, was to appear at the Winter Gardens.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE past month has been a busy one, busy with the winding-up of a season of fully average interest. In Leeds the last Subscription Concert of the season took place on the 13th ult. A thoroughly sympathetic performance of Brahms's Sextet in E flat was given by Dr. Joachim and Messrs. Rawdon Briggs, Gibson, Hobday, Ould, and Paul Ludwig; and Mendelssohn's fine Quintet in the same key formed an agreeable pendant to Brahms's more virile music. In Beethoven's Violin Sonata in G (Op. 96), Dr. Joachim was associated with Mr. Frederick Dawson, who also played several Chopin pieces brilliantly if hardly convincingly. Miss Butt was the vocalist, and the beauty of her voice went far to make up for a choice of songs that was perhaps not quite the best suited to such an occasion. On the 20th ult. the Leeds Philharmonic Society, under Mr. Alfred Broughton's able conductorship, gave Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The principals were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. Henry Piercy and Andrew Black, whose singing of such familiar music needs no description. It is sufficient to say that the performance was one of all-round excellence, the chorus-singing being distinguished by much refinement. Of other Leeds Concerts, one of the most interesting was that given by a Leeds baritone, Mr. Gordon Heller, on February 23. Mr. Heller sang a varied and unhackneyed series of songs, by Handel, Haydn, Schubert, Brahms, Bungert, Raff, Tschaiikowsky, and Maude V. White, in thoroughly artistic fashion. Miss Katie Brigstocke played Chopin's Ballade in A flat with genuine warmth of expression, and Miss Ethel Heap showed considerable powers of execution in several violin solos. On February 26 Mr. Sauer visited Leeds, and made an excellent impression by the beauty and variety of his touch and his masterly playing. Two days later he gave a Recital in Huddersfield, where a draughty platform interfered with his comfort sufficiently to make a perceptible difference in his playing. In Beethoven his effects seemed calculated, though perfectly artistic and effective; in Chopin's Ballade in A flat, on the other hand, he was thoroughly at home, and his reading was splendid in colour and spontaneity. On the 4th ult. Mr. Christensen gave a Chamber Concert at Leeds, the chief things in the programme being Pianoforte Trios by Schubert (in B flat) and Haydn (in C), in which the Concert-giver was assisted by two able young local musicians, Messrs. E. Elliott and A. Bolton. Miss Ethel Stather was the vocalist. On the 16th ult. Sir Arthur Sullivan came to Leeds, the various contingents of the Festival chorus, which hail from Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, Dewsbury, and Batley, meeting together for the first time to go through portions of "The Messiah" and Beethoven's Mass in D. The last of the Messrs. Haddocks' Musical Evenings took place on the 19th, when Miss Evangeline Florence, Madame Van der Veer-Green, and Messrs. Mockridge and Douglas Powell were the vocalists. Miss Marianne Eissler's pure tone and executive ability were shown in violin solos, her sister, Miss Clara Eissler, was the harpist, and Madame Else Mathis was a refined pianist.

The series of Subscription Concerts at Bradford ended on the 15th ult., with a programme of orchestral music of more than average interest. Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, the Overtures to "Coriolan," "Hänsel und Gretel," and "Abu Hassan," with Brahms's masterly set of Variations on the Haydn Choral, were the orchestral pieces. Dr. Joachim played Spohr's E minor Concerto (No. 7), achieving his greatest success in the Adagio, which he played with remarkable distinction of style; and Madame Sapio proved a most accomplished artist in several vocal solos. On the 1st ult. the Bradford Old Choral Society gave a most creditable performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." Madame Henrietta Tomlinson, though a substitute engaged at the last moment, sang the soprano solos in a most finished and musicianly manner. Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. William Green, and Mr. William Thornton completed an efficient quartet. The chorus was fresh and powerful and the band fairly good. Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw was the Conductor. On the same evening Mr. Frederick Dawson gave a Pianoforte Recital, and on the 4th ult. Mr. Oppenheim, a pianist recently settled in the neighbourhood, gave a Concert chiefly of violin and pianoforte music. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra ended a very successful season on the 9th ult., when they succeeded in securing the presence of Dr. C. H. H. Parry, who conducted some of his "Hypatia" music, the superb Ode, "Blest Pair of Sirens," and the Pianoforte Concerto in F sharp. In the last of these Mr. Frederick Dawson played the solo with excellent brilliance and dash. The Ode was sung by the chorus of the Bradford Festival Choral Society with good expression and taste. In the second part of the programme a Liszt Rhapsody and Berlioz's version of the "Rackoczy" March were the most striking things. The final chorus from the "Lobgesang" made a suitable ending to the Concert. Mr. W. H. Garland conducted the choral pieces, Mr. W. B. Sewell the orchestral, and a crowded hall testified to the interest felt by the public on the occasion. On the 19th ult. Mr. J. Müller, a local violinist, gave a Concert in Bradford, the chief feature being his performance of Brahms's Violin Concerto.

At Huddersfield two more Subscription Concerts have to be chronicled. On February 26 a Concert-party, consisting of Miss Trebelli, Miss F. Hoskins, Messrs. Chilley and Brockbank (the last as a substitute for Mr. Santley), with Mr. F. Weist-Hill as violinist and Mr. E. Delafosse as pianist, gave a moderately interesting programme of the usual miscellaneous type. The Concert of the 12th ult., though of the same kind, had more distinction. Miss Evangeline Florence and Miss Clara Butt were a well-contrasted pair, Mr. Hirwen Jones sang some tenor songs passably, and Mr. David Bispham supplied the chief interest of the Concert by his thoroughly artistic singing of Löwe's "Archibald Douglas," a traditional Somersetshire ballad from the "County Songs," and Schubert's "Who is Sylvia?" Miss Ethel Bauer proved a conscientious pianist, and Mr. Sauret's highly finished violin playing completed a thoroughly enjoyable Concert. On the 8th ult. the Huddersfield Choral Society gave Haydn's "Creation." Madame Clara Leighton, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Robert Grice were the principal vocalists. Haydn's choruses were almost as child's play to the powerful choir, which, therefore, cannot be said to have added to its reputation, excellent as the performance was in all respects. On the other hand, the band, which is not the strongest feature of the Huddersfield Society, did better than usual, though the wood-wind seemed coarse in tone. Mr. John Bowling conducted.

The Halifax Choral Society, on the 7th ult., gave a performance of Barnett's "Building of the Ship." Miss Neile Matthews, Miss Dorothy W. Jackson, Mr. Verney Binns, and Mr. David Hughes formed a competent rather than brilliant quartet of soloists. The chorus sang most intelligently, and the band gave a performance of the "Ruy Blas" Overture that was remarkable for precision and finish. Mr. W. H. Garland conducted. The Batley Choral Society chose a popular opera for its Concert on February 26. The principal vocalists in Gounod's "Faust" were Miss Alice Esty, Miss M. Hunt, Messrs. McGuckin, Alec Marsh, and Wilson Sheffield, who, as members of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, showed the familiarity with the music that might be expected from them. Mr. T. J. Thompson, a local singer, was the Wagner, and Mr. John Bowling conducted. On the 12th ult. the Morley Choral Society, under Mr. Alfred Benton's direction, gave Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," followed by a miscellaneous second part. Miss de Bouffiers, Miss Marie Rhodes, Mr. Blagbro, and Mr. Thornton formed an efficient quartet, and the chorus sang with much enthusiasm.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Opera the public has shown a more friendly disposition than the critics towards "La Montagne Noire" of Mlle. Holmès, whose work is still being performed. A revival of Reyer's "Sigurd" took place at the beginning of the month. At the Opéra Comique, on February 19, the first representation of "Ninon de Lenclos," a lyrical episode in four acts and five tableaux, by MM. Lenéka and Bernède, the music by M. Missa, was given. As the subject of the piece might belong to any period, it is probable that the authors have simply taken the name of the celebrated courtesan to give the composer every facility for the use of gavottes, madrigals, &c. M. Missa possesses a certain amount of dramatic feeling, but his music is wanting in originality and variety. This opera has brought into prominence Mlle. F. Dubois, whose success has been most marked and deserved. It is thought that Godard's "Vivandière" will make its appearance towards the end of the month.

At the Lamoureux Concerts, on February 24, was first heard a Symphony in F major (Op. 24) by M. Boellmann. This young composer is a pupil of the Niedermeyer school, which also produced Fauré, Messager, and others. His Symphony is the work of a good musician, but it seemed a little lacking in warmth and invention. It is drawn almost entirely from a "germ" motive—an interesting process for the writer, but less so for the audience.

On February 28 a Concert was given in aid of the subscription for the monument which is to be erected at Weimar to the memory of Liszt. It was an exceptional Concert, at which no less than four Concertos for piano-forte and three great pianists were heard. M. Pugno's success was indisputable. M. Diémer's executive skill, in his rendering of Saint-Saëns's Concerto in A minor, was warmly applauded, as was also the assertive virtuosity of Madame Jaëll in Liszt's Concerto in E flat. The three pianists were also heard together in Bach's Concerto for three pianofortes. Pleyel supplied the instruments for this Pianoforte Festival.

At the Concert which took place on the 10th ult., Paderewski played his Fantaisie Polonaise for pianoforte and orchestra. This was the first time that the work had been heard in Paris.

At the Concerts Colonne, on the 3rd ult., first performances of Fauré's "Shylock" and G. Charpentier's "Fausses impressions" were given. M. Harancourt has written an adaptation of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," for which M. Fauré has composed incidental music, "La chanson" and "Le Madrigal," sung by M. Warmbrodt, possess the characteristics peculiar to M. Fauré, who knows how to please with little. These two charming pieces were very warmly applauded. "L'Ent racte" and "l'Epithalame" for orchestra seemed to lack variety. The "Impressions fausses" of M. G. Charpentier, taken from Verlaine's poems, have an excessive pretension to originality as regards the scheme of the work, and the music, although very well written, presents nothing very remarkable. The No. 1, "La veillée rouge," in spite of philosophical complications, was not without attractiveness. No. 2, "La ronde de compagnons," is intended to convey to us the Anarchist's state of soul, by an eccentric process which had no interest for anyone.

At the Concerts d'Harcourt, Schumann's "Faust" still attracts the public, who are interested in comparing the great difference of style shown in the settings of the German and French masters. The last performance took place on the 10th ult.

The Société Nationale gave, on February 24, another Concert with orchestra. This Society was founded twenty years ago, with the object of making known the works of M. Saint-Saëns, who then directed it; but it is now conducted by M. d'Indy. Wagner and Franck are the idols of this Society, and the public find that its members do not throw off sufficiently the weight of their influence. Among many useless or already known works we may mention a suite d'orchestra, by M. Hùe, "La Belle au bois-dormant," a work which proves him a musician of great talent.

The singers of St. Gervais, who sing a capella, under the direction of M. Bordes, the most celebrated works in sacred music, also give Concerts with orchestra. That which took place on February 28 was particularly interesting. Two of Bach's cantatas (Nos. 78 and 140 of the Breikopf and Härtel collection) and a "Symphonia Sacra" for two voices, by Heinrich Schütz, a precursor of Bach, were given. On Thursday, the 14th ult., another performance of Heinrich Schütz's works was given.

At the Tarantelle, on the 14th ult., a young German violinist, M. Flesch, in Russian airs of Wieniawski and an Adagio of René Lenormand, had a remarkable success. This young violinist, an old pupil of M. Marsick, and winner of the first prize at the Paris Conservatoire, plays with remarkable dexterity.

Recent publications are M. Oscar Comettant's "La musique de la garde Républicaine en Amérique"; a new treatise on harmony ("L'harmonie rendue claire") by M. Loquin; and "Nos artistes," a little volume containing 400 portraits and biographies, by M. Jules Martin.

An "opéra buffa" in two acts, written by Bizet during his sojourn, at the age of about nineteen, at Rome, as a stipendiary of the Grand Prix of the Conservatoire, has just been brought to light by M. Weckerlin, the librarian of that Institution. Signor Sonzogno, the well known Milan impresario, has lost no time in treating for the acquisition of the interesting find, with a view to its production at La Scala.

Another "Hymn to Apollo" has been discovered by M. Homolle, principal of the École Française at Athens, and submitted to the Institut de France.

A Society, to be known as "Société de Musique Nouvelle," has just constituted itself here under the directorship of M. Widor. The members are a number of young composers, who will give a Concert performance once a month at the Salle Erard.

Preparations having been all but completed, the much-looked-forward-to production of "Tannhäuser," at the Opéra, according to the Bayreuth model, is announced to take place in the first week of the present month. M. Van Dyck will sing the titular part, and Mdlle. Zucchi superintends the ballet.

On the 30th ult. the Société de Musique d'Ensemble, directed by Mr. René Lenormand, gave its sixty-seventh Concert at the Institut Rudy, when a number of important compositions, including several by the Conductor, were performed. Mdlle. Adèle Rémy (of the Opéra Comique), MM. Flesch, Godebski, Paysan, Dressen, and Hendrick assisted.

M. Alexandre Guilmant announces four Concerts with orchestra and organ. At one of these, one of Bach's cantatas will be given with the assistance of the singers of St. Gervais, conducted by M. Bordes; the Orchestral Concerts will be conducted by M. Gabriel Marie.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE late season of opera, under the management of Messrs. Abbey and Grau, has no doubt been a brilliant success financially, and, in some ways, artistically, though there were occasions when single representations fell considerably below what might have been expected of such a strong array of talent as had been assembled. There were 101 performances given by the company (or portions of it), including some Sunday night Concerts and an occasional run to Brooklyn or Philadelphia, in ninety days. Twenty operas in all were given—not a surprisingly large number, when the strength of the company is considered. It seems to be the general opinion that had the managers not attempted such an unusual number of presentations within such a short time, there would have been a greater variety of operas heard, and the artistic merit of some of the performances would have been considerably raised.

Mr. Damrosch's season of Wagnerian opera is now upon us. We have had "Tristan," "Siegfried," "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," "Götterdämmerung," and, at the moment of writing, are midway in the throes of the Trilogy. The chief artists have been Madame Rosa Sucher, Mr. Alvary, and Herr Rothmühl, who deserves special mention for his beautiful singing. Mr. Damrosch suffered a loss by the death of Adolf Baumann, who was one of the victims of the Elbe disaster. The Opera Company and the Symphony Society have arranged a Benefit Concert on a grand scale for Baumann's family, who are said to be left in straitened circumstances.

On the concert platform there has not been much of especial importance to record. Mr. Plunket Greene is confirming all the good opinions previously formed of him. M. Ysaÿe has perhaps been the most prominent figure on the artistic horizon since last writing. Both the Philharmonic and the Seidl Society of Brooklyn have been somewhat interfered with by the illness of Herr Seidl, which, while not alarming, has been sufficient to disable him from duty for some little time. The American Symphony Orchestra is a young organisation, which plays under the bâton of Mr. Samuel Franks. It is doing good work, sufficiently so, one may hope, to encourage it to adopt some other local habitation than Chickering Hall, which is "down town" nowadays. Mr. Anton Hegner, the violoncellist, is giving Concerts with success; and Mr. E. A. Macdowell has given a set of Pianoforte Recitals at the Concert Hall of the Madison Square Gardens, in which he has demonstrated most distinctly his very high ability as a performer and his powers as a composer, bringing forward several of his own works, which have made an unusual impression.

Among the churches there is little of interest to record. Many are cutting down expenses, and this is throwing a good many singers into the market; but among organists it seems as though the prediction of few changes made last month would probably be fulfilled. The most important church, at the moment of writing, to change its organist, is the Madison Avenue Reformed, where Mr. Frank Taft, a brilliant concert-player, but who has yet to win his spurs as a choir-master, is to succeed Mr. William R. Chapman.

Organ Recitals are at a discount. They have never been successful in New York for any long period of time. With a few exceptions, organists giving them have had only glory with which to console themselves for small and rather mystified audiences. For years the Recitals of Mr. Samuel P. Warren, at Grace Church, were among the most enjoyable and valuable of the season's opportunities for students of the instrument, marked as they were by the most extensive reading in the literature of the organ and by the most consummate technical skill. Since Mr. Warren's retirement from his post the great double electric organ of the church has been silent for Recital purposes, and other performers have only essayed short and spasmodic efforts at concert playing. Just now Mr. Richard T. Percy, at the Marble Collegiate Church, and Mr. Robert J. Winterbottom, at St. Michael's, are occupying the field.

THAT Norwich, in which music has so long flourished, should have its school of music in common with other capital cities, seems to be but a natural course of musical development. But even the natural order of events is frequently delayed by adverse circumstances and opposing influences; and it is therefore with much satisfaction that we note that an Institution styling itself the Norfolk and Norwich School of Music was formally opened on the 4th ult., in this historical city. The speeches of the Mayor, who presided at the opening, and of Mr. C. R. Gilman, the Chairman, showed that both these gentlemen are fully alive to the artistic benefits which should accrue from this Institution, and doubtless the county will be quick to avail itself of the many advantages thus offered to all who desire instruction in the art. It should be noted that the school, although promoted by private enterprise, is not established as a pecuniary speculation for the benefit of a few, but that any profits that may be made will be devoted to assist musical progress in the locality. This is the more satisfactory, because it not only affords a proof of the artistic basis of the scheme, but also because the enterprise thus promises to exert a stimulating influence throughout East Anglia. The Norwich School of Music has, therefore, our heartiest good wishes that it may achieve the praiseworthy aims of its enthusiastic and devoted supporters.

A MEMORIAL window to the late Sir George Elvey has recently been erected in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, by his four elder children. The design, which has been most artistically carried out by Messrs. Clayton and Bell, consists of four angelic figures, which are represented with musical instruments in their hands and singing from a scroll, on which is inscribed the Vulgate rendering of Rev. xix. 6, the well known words of the "Hallelujah" Chorus. These words, besides being most suitable to the general design of the window, will remind Sir George's many friends of his great admiration for Handel and of the enthusiastic renderings of the works of the great master, as Sir George loved to call him, which he was wont to give at St. George's Chapel. Sir George's record at Windsor is preserved in the following inscription placed beneath the window: "Georgio Job Elvey Equiti Mus. Doc. nato anno domini MDCCCXVI. mortuo MDCCCXCIII. qui ab anno MDCCCXXXV. usque ad annum MDCCCXXXVII. organistæ officio in hac capella functus est hoc monumentum liberi ejus et Isabellæ uxoris Edwardus Robertus Helena Carolus in piam memoriam mœrentes posuerunt MDCCCXCIV."

THE authorities of the St. Petersburg Conservatoire announce the second International Competition for the Rubinstein Prize (five thousand francs each for composition and pianoforte playing), to take place this year, from September 1 to 17, at Berlin. Candidates—young men between the ages of twenty and twenty-six—are required to send in the following unpublished compositions (if competing for the composition prize)—viz., a Concertstück for pianoforte solo and orchestra; a Sonata for pianoforte solo or in combination with one or more stringed instruments; and several small pieces for the pianoforte, the pianoforte part in every instance having to be interpreted by the composer. As regards competitors for pianoforte playing, the following compositions will have to be rendered—viz., a Concerto by Rubinstein; a Prelude with four-part fugue by Sebastian Bach; an Andante or Adagio by either Haydn or Mozart; one of the Beethoven Sonatas (Op. 78, 81, 90, 101, 106, 109, 110, and 111); a Mazurka, Nocturne, or Ballade by Chopin; one or two numbers from Schumann's "Phantasie-stücke" or "Kreisleriana," and an Etude by Liszt. Notice of intended participation in this competition, accompanied by certificates as to identity and date of birth, to be sent, not later than August 22, to the Comptoir des St. Petersburg Conservatoriums, Theater Strasse No. 3, Berlin.

THE final examination for twelve open free scholarships, at the Royal College of Music, took place towards the end of February. The total number of candidates throughout the United Kingdom applying to attend the preliminary examination was 456. These were examined by the honorary local examiners at seventy-six centres on January 30, and reduced to 136. Seven competitors subsequently withdrew, and the remaining 129 were brought up for final examination at the College. The following are the names of the successful candidates:—Pianoforte: George H. Fryer, Brondesbury; William A. Scott, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Singing: Frank E. Cooter, Worthing; Harry Dearth, Chelsea; Gwilym T. Evans, Swansea. Organ: Herbert F. Ellingsford, Poplar. Violin: Samuel Grimson, Ealing. Violoncello: Robert A. Grimson, Ealing. Flute: Eli R. Hudson, Skegness. Clarinet: Frederic Moss, Manchester. French Horn: Stanley E. S. Watson, Halifax. Composition: Gustavus T. von Holst, Cheltenham.

MISS ROSA LEO commenced a series of Vocal Recitals at Steinway Hall on the 5th ult., with a number of songs contrasted in style, interspersed by the finished violin playing of M. Johannes Wolff and the recitation, by herself, of Maeterlinck's dramatic episode "L'Intérieur," with incidental music by Miss Frances Allitsen. The expressive style and rare intelligence of Miss Leo were apparent in each of her efforts. The new songs she introduced were a "Lullaby," by A. E. Horrocks; a setting by Mackenzie of Kingsley's "I cannot tell what you say, green leaves"; and three pieces by E. Meyer-Helmund. At her second Recital, on the 10th ult., Miss Leo sang with unflinching judgment airs in English, German, and French, the latter selection including two morceaux by Massenet. She also successfully joined Mr. David Bispham in some duets, among them the "Night Hymn at Sea," of Goring Thomas. Miss Mabel Chaplin contributed violoncello solos to the satisfaction of a large audience.

MR. J. T. HUTCHINSON at his Concert at Queen's (Small) Hall, on the 13th ult., offered an attractive programme, to which a select choir contributed Mr. Edward German's setting of "Orpheus with his lute," Stevens's glee "Blow, blow, thou winter wind," Smart's "Rest thee on this mossy pillow," Mendelssohn's "Farewell to the Forest," and Attwood's "Hark, the Curfew's solemn sound," each being tastefully rendered. Mr. Hutchinson was heard to advantage in Schubert's "Who is Sylvia?" Sullivan's "I would I were a king," and Gounod's "Médjé." The other solo vocalists were Mrs. Alice Dunn and Miss Bertha Ackworth. Mr. Brain (horn) and Mr. H. S. Webster were the instrumentalists. Mr. Charles Fry recited a scene from "As you like it" and Cooper's "The Reciter's Dilemma," with "The Village Choir" and Gilbert's "Ode to the Terrestrial Globe" as compulsory encores after the second-named.

THE Cardiff Triennial Musical Festival will take place on September 18 to 21 inclusive, and the works for performance include "The Messiah," "St. Paul," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Berlioz's "Faust," Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Light of the World" (in, it is hoped, a revised form), Edgar Tinel's "Franciscus," Verdi's "Requiem," Dr. Stanford's new work "The Bard," "The Choral Symphony," Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," Mr. David Jenkins's new work "The Psalm of Life," Mr. Edward German's orchestral suite "The Tempter," a Mozart Symphony, and a Wagner selection. The chorus rehearsals are proceeding very satisfactorily, and Sir Joseph Barnby has arranged to come to Cardiff and take his first rehearsal on Easter Tuesday. Sir Arthur Sullivan, Professor Stanford, Mr. Edgar Tinel, Mr. Edward German, and Mr. David Jenkins have each promised to attend the Festival and conduct their respective works.

M. MARSICK, who gained much esteem as a violinist some eight years ago in London, and M. Breitner, a pianist pleasantly remembered by his association with the Trio Parisien, gave two excellent performances of chamber music on February 25 and 28 respectively, at the Steinway Hall. The programmes of each Concert consisted of three important works for violin and pianoforte, and at the first performance was produced a new Suite (Op. 44) by Eduard Schütt. This comprises four movements—Allegro risoluto, Scherzo vivace, Canzonetta con variazione, and Rondo à la Russe—all of which are distinguished by vigour and vitality and effective writing for the instruments. The first and third numbers are the most attractive to the musician, but interest is well sustained throughout the work. The Suite had a cordial reception, thanks in no small degree to the brilliant rendering it received from its accomplished executants.

AT the People's Palace, Mile End Road, on the 16th ult., Sir Arthur Sullivan's "The Golden Legend" was performed with the utmost success. The vast hall was crowded, and the manifold beauties of the popular cantata could not have been more warmly appreciated. Mr. C. H. Allen Gill, the energetic Conductor of the orchestral and choral societies associated with the Palace, may be congratulated on the great advance both bodies have made under his direction. The delivery of the choruses was throughout marked by refinement, spirit, and precision. The dramatic points of the opening storm scene were firmly seized, and the "Evening Hymn" was given with all the requisite delicacy and evenness. Miss Medora Henson, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Edward Branscombe, Mr. Arthur Barlow (Lucifer), and Mr. Arthur Barry did justice to the solos.

THE Welsh Festival Service in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the eve of St. David's Day, proved as great a success as either of its predecessors. Nearly 8,000 persons were present, and the hymns—particularly those to old Welsh tunes—were taken up with the utmost heartiness. There was a mixed choir of 300, conducted by Mr. Edward Owen, Organist of St. Benet's Welsh Church, and the organist was Mr. David J. Thomas, of All Saints' Welsh services. The effective setting in F of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis of the last-named was again used, and the anthem (beginning "Sing unto the Lord a new song") was by Eos Llechyd. The entire service, including the sermon (preacher, the Rev. David Richards, of Blaenau Ffestiniog) and the hymns, was in the language of the Principality.

THE West Hampstead Choral and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Gaul's "Una" at its Concert on the 20th ult., at the West Hampstead Town Hall. The soloists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Louise Auther, Mr. F. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Percy L. Webster, all of whom were exceedingly successful. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included the Presto and Adagio from Haydn's "Farewell" Symphony; Mattei's "Bianca," sung by Miss Maud Barker (a pupil of Mr. Edward G. Croager); "The Venetian Revenge," recited by Miss Adela Drayton; and Myles Foster's "Cradle Song," admirably sung by the ladies of the chorus. Mr. Edward G. Croager conducted, and also performed some of his own pianoforte compositions. Mr. C. W. Evans was the accompanist.

THE Misses Josephine and Ida Agabeg at their Concert at Steinway Hall, on the 18th ult., received valuable assistance from Mr. William Nicholl (who gave several songs in his most expressive manner), Mr. Wilfred Cunliffe, Mr. Henri Seiffert, Herr Alfred Gallrein, and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz. With the latter, Miss Josephine Agabeg played a Minuet and Gavotte (for two pianofortes) by Saint-Saëns, with such success that it had to be repeated. This young lady also displayed refinement and judgment in pieces by Brassin, Chopin, and Chaminade, besides joining in Beethoven's C minor Trio. Songs by Gounod and Chaminade were very tastefully rendered by Miss Ida Agabeg, who in three Tuscan folk-songs, arranged as duets by Caracciolo, was for companion her pupil, Miss Peterson.

At St. Anne's, Soho, the customary Lenten performances of Bach's setting of the Passion according to the text of St. John began on the 1st ult., under the direction of the organist, Mr. E. H. Thorne. The reflective beauties of this truly devotional masterpiece, as well as the more dramatic choral passages, such as "Not this man, but Barabbas," "Crucify," and "We have a law," were adequately brought out by a vocal force numbering about sixty, whilst the accompaniments of strings and wood-wind were supplied by nearly twenty competent executants. The more prominent solos were ably given by Mr. Sweeney (Christ), Mr. Habbijam (Pilate), and Messrs. Pinnington and Horncastle (Narrators). In the interspersed chorales of the noble work the congregation joined with impressive effect.

On Wednesday, the 13th ult., at St. Bride's, Fleet Street, the Kyrie Choir gave a most excellent rendering of a selection from Bach's Passion Music ("St. John"), followed by Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Mr. F. A. W. Docker conducted and Dr. Turpin presided at the organ, the Choir numbering about ninety performers. The principal soloists were Miss Ada Loaring, Mr. John Probert, Miss Cecilia Gray, Miss Rina Robinson, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, Mr. Arthur Walenn, and Mr. Swabey Russell. A performance of "Elijah" was also given by the Choir, on the 20th ult., at St. Luke's, Bermondsey. The soloists were Miss Cecilia Gray, Miss Rina Robinson, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Arthur Appleby. Dr. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

A HIGHLY interesting publication is to commence shortly, under the auspices of the Dutch Musical Historical Society, consisting in the complete works of Johann Peter Sweelinck, one of the great masters of the great period of Netherlandish musicians, between the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, amongst whose pupils was Heinrich Schütz. The edition will comprise twelve volumes, containing Sweelinck's compositions for the organ, his four books of Psalms, his Cantiones Sacrae, as well as his madrigals, songs, and other minor productions. The fact of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig, having undertaken the publication is a sufficient guarantee of the work being done in a thoroughly critical and artistically satisfactory manner.

THE Hampstead Choral Society gave its annual Concert, on February 25, at the Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill, under the able conductorship of Mr. Willem Coenen, with Mrs. Helen Trust, Mrs. Dodgson, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Reynolds Wood, and Mr. C. H. Harben as soloists. The programme consisted of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's "The Dream of Jubal," Mr. Coenen's setting of "Lead, kindly Light," and Stanford's "The Revenge." The recitation portion of the first-named was excellently delivered by Miss E. M. Churchill, and the choruses were throughout sung with commendable firmness and point. Miss Mabel Coenen was at the pianoforte and Mr. Higgs at the harmonium.

A CONCERT on behalf of the London Orphan Asylum at Watford took place in Queen's Hall, on the 5th ult., when the most important feature of the programme was Professor Bridge's sacred cantata "The Cradle of Christ," first heard at the Hereford Festival last year. The solo portions of this eminently sympathetic setting of the ancient Latin Hymn, "Stabat Mater Speciosa," were ably rendered by Madame Amy Sherwin and Mr. Daniel Price. The Clarence Orchestra did well under the baton of the composer, but the choral execution left much to be desired. Mr. Lennox Clayton conducted the remainder of the Concert, which included the services of M. Johannes Wolff, the violinist.

MISS EDITH DRAKE's Concert at Princes' Hall, on the 1st ult., was chiefly noteworthy for the mastery of the æola exhibited by this young lady, an instrument superior to the concertina in tone though resembling it in shape. In a Concerto by Bach for two violins she played the second part on the æola, whilst the first violin part was given by Mr. T. J. Milne, and Miss Dora Drake executed the pianoforte accompaniment. Miss Edith Drake was heard in several other pieces, including Vieuxtemps's "Reverie" and a MS. Trio by Mr. J. C. Ward (of whom she is a pupil) for the violoncello, æola, and bass concertina. In the latter she was associated with Signor Paggi and the composer. Madame Belle Cole was the principal vocalist.

THE London Sunday School Choir assembled in force at the Albert Hall, on February 23, for its annual Concert. The selected singers, numbering over a thousand, gave with creditable precision, attention to light and shade, and sustained tone, choruses, anthems, and hymns. Among the more meritorious performances were Sir Joseph Barnby's "It is high time to awake," "Blessed are the men," ("Elijah"), Clarke Whitfield's "I will lift up mine eyes," and Gaul's "No shadows yonder." Mr. Luther Hinton conducted with his usual ability. Madame Antoinette Sterling and Madame Alice Gomez sang solos, the Coward Kempton Vocal Quartet lent assistance, and the London Sunday School Orchestra played several pieces.

MISS ETHEL HIRSCHBEIN, an English girl, aged fourteen, and a pupil of Mr. B. Hollander at the Guildhall School of Music, exhibited more than ordinary promise as a violinist at her Concert at the Queen's (Small) Hall on the 5th ult. The most telling of her essays was De Bériot's so-called Concerto in A, with the leading features of which she courageously grappled. With continued study and unremitting perseverance this youthful player should distinguish herself when, two years hence, she becomes eligible to compete for a scholarship at the school. Misses Florence Oliver, Annie Albu, and Kate Augusta Davies were among those who appeared.

AN Eisteddfod was held at the Holborn Town Hall, on the 7th ult., in aid of the Stratford Welsh Chapel Building Fund. There were over twenty choral, solo, and instrumental competitions, several of which were well contested. The prize for ladies' choirs (Smart's "Hail to thee, child of the earth") was divided between Gwalia and Excelsior; whilst that for children's choirs was awarded to the Falmouth Road body. In the course of an address during the largely attended evening meeting, Sir John Puleston pointed out the advantage of such an assemblage in demonstrating that the reputation of the Welsh as a music-loving people was increasing.

MISS ALICE LIEBMAN's programme at St. James's Hall, on the 5th ult., was subjected to important alterations in consequence of the indisposition of several artists. The youthful Concert-giver's talent as a violinist was specially manifested in the first movement of Mendelssohn's Concerto, which she played from memory with spirit and a regard for delicate detail deserving the recognition obtained. She also executed with fluency and vigour one of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, her sister, Bertha, rendering the pianoforte accompaniment. The vocalists included Miss Jessie King, Mr. Franklin Clive, and Signor Maggi.

THE Clapton Philharmonic Society gave its second Concert this season, at Clapton Park Congregational Church, on the 20th ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and Gounod's "Gallia." The solo vocalists were Madame Isabel George, Miss Florence Monk, and Miss Ethel Bevans, the illustrative verses in "Athalie" being recited by Mr. Charles Fry. The accompaniments were played by a capable orchestra, led by Mr. George Palmer, with Mr. Charles E. Smith at the organ, and the choir sang with precision and effect, the performance being ably directed by Mr. John Jefferys.

MISS FELICIA HOWARD gave a Song Recital, on the 21st ult., at Queen's (Small) Hall, when her skill and versatility were well shown in vocal pieces by Grieg, Frances Allitsen, Liszt ("Lorelei" and "The King of Thule"), Godard, Massenet, Tchaikowsky, and Gounod. Miss Howard is a refined and intelligent singer, whom we shall hear again with pleasure. Mr. Wm. Nicholl contributed two songs with customary charm and finish, and pieces for violin and pianoforte were contributed respectively by Messrs. Siegfried Jacoby and Septimus Webbe. The accompanists were Mr. Louis N. Parker, Mr. Algernon Lindo, and Miss Allitsen.

THE prospectus of the Brighton and Hove Choral and Orchestral Society announces the usual three Concerts during the year. The first, which took place on the 21st ult. and is noticed elsewhere, was a "Parry" Concert and included that composer's "Job," the English Symphony, and "Blest Pair of Sirens"; the second Concert, on June 13, will be in commemoration of Purcell; the final Concert, in December, will be a "Stanford" Night, including the "Voyage of Maeldune" and "The Revenge." An extra Concert will be given in October as a "benefit" to Dr. F. J. Sawyer, the talented Conductor of the Society.

MR. FOUNTAIN MEEN gave an interesting Organ Recital at Union Chapel, Islington, on the 12th ult., with the valuable assistance of Miss Alice Simons, Mr. Henry Lewis (violin), and Mr. Walter Morrow (trumpet). The programme included Dr. Warwick Jordan's fine Duo Concertante for organ and trumpet, an Andante and Rondo for organ and violin by Sir G. A. Macfarren, and an Adagio by Merkel for the same instrument. Mr. Meen's solos were "Allegro moderato" by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, "Allegro cantabile" from Widor's Fifth Symphony, and "Concert Fantasia" by the late Sir R. P. Stewart.

SIR JOSEPH BARNBY was the recipient, on the 23rd ult., of a silver salver and autograph album from the Professors of the Guildhall School of Music, in token of their appreciation of his work as Principal of the School, and also as an expression of their satisfaction at his complete recovery from his recent severe illness. The album, which contains the signatures of the Professors, is illustrated by etchings of the scenes of Sir Joseph's most successful work—York, Eton, the Albert Hall, and Guildhall School of Music.

THE Denmark Place Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and Niels Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" on the 1st ult., at the Lecture Hall, Denmark Place Chapel, Camberwell. Miss Emma Fenn, Miss Ella Thomson, Mr. Fredk. Williams, and Mr. Frank Swinford sang the solos with due effect, and Mr. W. E. Curtis conducted with his usual skill. Mr. Frank Grant and Mr. H. C. Warrington, at the harmonium and pianoforte respectively, rendered the accompaniments in an effective manner.

THE City Bohemians, another of the associations rapidly increasing in number that find in the exercise of music a bond of fellowship, gave their first "Ladies' Night" on February 25, in the Council Chamber of the Holborn Restaurant. The programme was of a miscellaneous character and calls for little comment beyond that it admirably fulfilled its purpose, thanks in great measure to the artistic singing of Miss Edith Hands, and Mr. Charles Copland, and the diverting recitations of Mr. A. Newark and Mr. H. Goring.

THE last for the present season of the Popular Chamber Concerts given by Mr. Joseph Ivimey, at the Assembly Rooms, Surbiton, took place on the 9th ult. The programme included Brahms's Trio (Op. 40), for horn, violin, and pianoforte, and Beethoven's Septet (Op. 20), for wind and strings. The performers were Mr. Joseph Ivimey (violin), Mr. Alfred Hobday (viola), Mr. A. Blagrove (violinello), Mr. C. Hobday (bass), Mr. E. Hall (clarinet), Mr. W. H. Hall (bassoon), Mr. A. Borsdorf (horn), and the vocalist was Madame Alice Gomez.

MISS ANNIE WATKINS gave her second annual Concert, at the Camden Athenæum, on the 8th ult. The Concert-giver, who sang Roeckel's "Green Isle of Erin," Cowen's "Promise of Life," and "O mio Fernando," was heartily applauded. She was assisted by Miss Emily Davies, Mr. Miles Mole, Mr. F. St. John, Mr. A. Miatt (violin), and Mr. Gustave Markt (pianoforte). Mr. Charles Fry gave several recitations, notably "The story of a faithful soul," with Mr. Stanley Hawley's music, in which he was ably accompanied by Mr. Gilbert R. Betjemann.

MR. JOHN MATTHEW ENNIS recently passed his examination for the degree of Doctor in Music, at the University of London, and on February 23 his exercise was performed in the Lecture Theatre of the University. The subject chosen was the 46th Psalm, "God is our hope and strength," which the composer has written for contralto solo, chorus, and orchestra. There was an orchestra of about fifty performers, led by Mr. G. H. Betjemann and a large chorus, the solos being sung by Miss Gertrude Bevan. The work was received with much favour.

A CONCERT was given by pupils of Mr. Arthur O'Leary at the Queen's (Small) Hall on the 9th ult. Those who took part were the Misses Harlow, Stibbs, C. Coe, Elsie Cane, Beatrice Shaw, E. Wilson, Mrs. A. A. Needham, and Mr. C. W. Cole. A prominent feature was the excellent performance of Sterndale Bennett's charming Trio in A major, by Miss L. Haselden, assisted by Miss Katherine O'Leary (violin) and Mr. F. A. Williams (violinello). Miss Frederica Taylor and Miss Lucie Johnstone contributed songs, and Mr. Stanley Hawley accompanied.

AT the weekly Lenten Services at St. Mark's, Kennington, selections from Gounod's "Mors et Vita" have been given, with organ and full orchestra, on the 6th and 20th ult. Mr. Hamilton Robinson presided at the organ; Miss Georgina Tear, Master Wilson, and Messrs. Jemmett and John Davis were the principal soloists. On the 13th ult. Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given, when Mr. F. M. Taylor presided at the organ and Mr. Warren Tear conducted.

SIGNOR RANDEGGER gave, on Ash Wednesday, another excellent proof of the capabilities of the instrumental force over which he rules at the Imperial Institute. Bizet's engaging suite "Jeux d'Enfants," a Haydn Symphony, and other pieces were meritoriously played and greatly appreciated by a large audience. The effective singing of Madame Sapio and the brilliant pianoforte playing of Mr. Septimus Webbe were also enjoyable features of the evening.

MISS EDITH PURVIS gave a successful Pianoforte Recital at St. Peter's Hall, Brockley, on February 28. The programme included selections from Dvorák, Schumann, Chamade, Grieg, Chopin, Raff, Liszt, Godard, and Beethoven. Miss Purvis was repeatedly applauded, and was, perhaps, heard at her best in two pieces by Godard and Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 81). Miss Gertrude Wood and Mr. Arthur Wilson were the vocalists, and Miss Edith Peppercorn accompanied.

AT Messrs. Gilbert King and Alexander-Louis's Concert, at Balham, selections from "Maritana" were well rendered by Messrs. Gilbert King and Beaumont, Miss Jessie Browning, and Madame Eugénie Morgan, who sang the part of Maritana at a moment's notice, through the illness of Madame Adelaide Mullen. The duet from "Cavalleria Rusticana," sung by Mdlle. Vera and Mr. Alexander-Louis, was much applauded. Mdlle. Schlesinger has a fine voice and shows great promise.

THE lady vocal pupils of Mrs. Carlisle-Carr gave a Concert, on the 21st ult., at the Salle Erard. A number of young singers, more or less gifted with voices worthy of cultivation, gave pleasing testimony of the good method pursued by Mrs. Carlisle-Carr, and the rendering of some part-songs showed her skill as a Conductor. Some flute solos, contributed by Mr. J. Lemmoné, provided agreeable variety.

THE adjudicators in Messrs. Curwen's Musical Competition have now awarded the prizes as follows: £50 for the best sacred cantata to Mr. J. Allanson Benson, of Harrogate, for his cantata entitled "Christ at Nain." £25 for the best Sunday School sacred cantata to Miss Eva M. Lennox, of Canada. £15 for the best chorus-glee or part-song to Mr. Joseph Seymour, of Dublin, for his glee "Lodore."

THE reception organised in honour of Mr. August Manns on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, and as a mark of appreciation for the services he has rendered to music in this country, has been deferred until after Easter, in consequence of his indisposition. The committee, formed under the presidency of Sir Arthur Sullivan, contains the name of every leading musician in the country, and Mr. Hermann Klein is acting as secretary.

MR. EDWIN H. LEMARE'S Organ Recitals on Saturday afternoons, at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, continue to meet with well deserved appreciation. The programmes are well arranged and contain specimens of all styles of organ music. It is needless to add that in Mr. Lemare's skilful hands the capabilities of the instrument are fully revealed.

THE chief of our suburban societies, the Highbury Philharmonic, gave an admirably artistic performance of Goring Thomas's posthumous cantata "The Swan and the Skylark," on the 19th ult., with Madame Ella Russell, Miss Rose Daforne, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. R. E. Miles as soloists. Mr. Gilbert H. Betjemann conducted as usual.

THE recent Bournemouth Musical Festival was sufficiently successful to warrant a repetition next year, when Sir Alexander Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal" will be the chief feature of interest. We understand that the composer has consented to conduct the work if circumstances permit.

MISS EMILY UPTON, an accomplished pianist, gave an attractive Chamber Concert on the 20th ult., in the Queen's (Small) Hall. The Concert-giver's playing afforded her numerous audience manifest enjoyment, and the programme also contained the names of Mr. Pattison Parker and Mr. Otto Dene.

A VERY successful Invitation Concert was given at St. John's Wood, on the 3rd ult., by the choral society of the Abbey Road High School for Girls. The principal feature in the programme was Edmund Rogers's cantata "The Forest Flower," which was very favourably received. The composer conducted.

DR. CHURCHILL SIBLEY, on his retirement from the position of head of the music section at the Goldsmiths' Institute, has been presented by the members of the Institute staff with a handsome piece of plate. He was also the recipient of a gold watch from the choir and students. Both presents bear suitable inscriptions.

MR. HENRY SUCH, a young English violinist, son of Mr. Edwin Such, is to be congratulated upon the success of his playing during the past month in Leipzig, where, judging from the press criticisms, he may in future count upon always receiving a cordial welcome.

THE choir of St. Matthias's Church, Earl's Court, held its Annual Dinner at the Holborn Restaurant, on February 25. The chair was taken by Mr. Frank Braine, who proposed the health of the choir in very happy terms. A very enjoyable programme of music was performed.

THE Bonavia Hunt Musical History Prize, offered by the Academical Board of Trinity College, London, has been awarded to Mr. B. Mansell Ramsey, Bournemouth (Miss Katherine Swain, proxime accessit). The subject of the essay was "English Music in the reign of Elizabeth."

THE usually impressive performances of "The Redemption" have been given at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, during the Lenten season, under the direction of Mr. W. de Manby Sergison.

THE Sarasate Concerts, one of which will be orchestral, will take place at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoons, June 1, 8, 15, and 22.

WE are glad to hear that considerably over £1,000 was realized at the Benefit Concert on behalf of the widow and orphan children of Eugène Oudin.

THE Royal Italian Opera season will open on Monday, May 13.

MR. KES, the Amsterdam chef d'orchestre, has been appointed Conductor of the Scottish Orchestra.

MADAME HOPE GLENN has accepted a professorship of solo singing at Trinity College, London.

OBITUARY.

WITH much regret we record the death, on February 26, of the Rev. FLOOD JONES, the highly-esteemed Precentor of Westminster Abbey. He had been connected with the Abbey for thirty-eight years, becoming Deputy-Minor Canon in 1857, Minor Canon in 1859, and holding the post of Precentor since 1868. He was also subsequently appointed Priest in Ordinary to the Queen, and had been vicar of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, since 1876. In his capacity of Precentor, Mr. Flood Jones's high musical attainments enabled him to take a keen and highly beneficial practical interest in his work, his special care being bestowed upon the arrangement of the musical services and the maintenance of the admirable organisation of the voluntary evening service choir, in both of which directions he was entirely successful. The reverend gentleman died somewhat suddenly, at his residence in the Cloisters, Westminster Abbey, of an attack of influenza, followed by bronchitis, and, in accordance with an offer made on the part of the Dean and Chapter, his remains were buried in the Cloisters, thereby fulfilling the frequently expressed desire of the deceased that his body should rest in the vicinity of his beloved Abbey.

THE Rev. EDMUND VENABLES, Precentor and Canon-Residentary of Lincoln Cathedral, died at his residence, on the 5th ult., of influenza, aggravated by other complications. The deceased, who was in his seventy-sixth year, was a graduate with honours of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and enjoyed a considerable reputation as an archaeologist. He was appointed to a Canonry and the Precentorship of the Cathedral in 1867. As Precentor it was his desire to make his office a reality, and to do all in his power to raise the character of the Cathedral services.

WITH the death, on the 6th ult., of HENRY LAZARUS, another witness to English musical traditions during the earlier part of the century has passed away. He was, in the opinion of many, the most accomplished clarinetist which this country has produced, his playing being characterised by fulness and beauty of tone and an unerring technique. And these qualities he had retained to a remarkable degree when, in May, 1892, he gave his farewell concert at St. James's Hall, previous to his retirement from public life, he being then in his seventy-eighth year. Mr. Lazarus was born on New Year's Day, 1815, and at an early age began his study of the clarinet under Blizard, then bandmaster of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea; afterwards continuing under Charles Godfrey, the elder, at that time bandmaster of the Coldstream Guards. In 1838 young Lazarus was appointed second clarinet at the Sacred Harmonic Society's Concerts, and two years later, on the death of Willman, he obtained the post of principal clarinet at Her Majesty's Theatre. From that period onward he took the leading position as a clarinet player at the principal London concerts and provincial musical festivals. The deceased artist was for nearly forty years principal professor of his instrument at the Royal Academy of Music, and was also for a number of years one of the teachers at the Military School of Music at Kneller Hall.

IGNAZ LACHNER, the last surviving of the three gifted musical brothers (Franz and Vincenz being the two others), died at Hanover, on February 25, in his eighty-eighth year. He was born at Rain, in Bavaria, and at the age of fifteen obtained the post of a first violinist at the Isarthor Theatre of Munich. In 1826 he joined his brother, Franz, at Vienna, where he became organist of the Evangelical Church, and subsequently, in conjunction with his brother, a conductor at the Kärnthner Theatre. In 1831 Ignaz left the Austrian capital for Stuttgart, where he had been appointed musical director of the Court of Württemberg, a position which eleven years later he exchanged for a similar one at Munich. Having resigned the latter post in 1853, he occupied successively a first capellmeistership at the theatres of Hamburg, Stockholm, and finally at Frankfort-on-Maine, retiring into private life in 1875. Ignaz Lachner was a prolific contributor to every department of musical composition, including the operas "Der Geisterthum" and "Loreley," and some characteristic operettas or vaudevilles, written in the Swabian dialect.

ALFRED GERMAN REED died on the 10th ult., aged forty-nine. Mr. Reed was the only son of Mr. and Mrs.

German Reed, and possessed remarkable gifts as an eccentric comedian—gifts which were widely appreciated by the frequenters of St. George's Hall.

With much regret we have to announce the death of RICHARD CORNEY GRAIN, which took place on the 16th ult. Mr. Grain was born in 1845, and began life as a barrister, being called to the Bar in 1866. His musical and mimetic gifts, however, were so remarkable, that he was soon induced to become a public entertainer. His association with the German Reeds dates from 1870. Mr. Grain was as much a favourite with his friends as with the public, and his loss will long be keenly felt.

Those who are old enough to remember the magnificent Shakespearian productions of Mr. Macready, at Covent Garden, will recall with delight the grace of PRISCILLA HORTON as the "dainty spirit" Ariel—floating with the aid of invisible wires, a piece of stage mechanism quite novel at that time—and in other Shakespearian characters. The decease of this lady—known to the staid frequenters of the entertainments at St. George's Hall as Mrs. GERMAN REED—has, alas, completed the triple list of deaths in connection with the German Reed combination. Mrs. Reed passed away from the drama of life on the 18th ult., at the venerable age of seventy-seven; she had already passed from the mimic stage in 1879.

We have also to record the following deaths:—

On February 19, ERNEST BURTON, a well-known and esteemed violoncellist in the leading London orchestras. He was born at Norwich of a musical family, and studied with distinction at the Royal Academy of Music. He had only attained his thirty-third year.

Professor FERDINAND SIEBER, a well-reputed vocal teacher and composer of songs, on February 19, at Berlin, in his seventy-third year.

ALFRED TILMAN, the gifted Belgian composer of choral works, notably of a Te Deum and a Requiem, on February 20, at Brussels, aged forty-seven.

EDOUARD TRICOT, flute virtuoso, and professor of that instrument at the Brussels Conservatoire, on February 22, aged sixty-three.

PHILIPPE JOSEPH CORNÉLIS, for many years the highly-esteemed and successful professor of singing at the Brussels Conservatoire, among whose pupils were Mesdames Lemmens Sherrington and Lauters, on February 26, at Brussels. He was born at Namur in 1816, and in the earlier part of his career had obtained considerable reputation in the Concert-room as a tenor singer.

On the 4th ult., at Blackheath, WILLIAM COX BENNETT, aged seventy-four. A brother of Sir John Bennett, he was known as a writer of words for songs, one of his most important collections being "Songs for Sailors," set to music by the late J. L. Hatton.

In New York, early in February, Miss FAUSTINA HASSE HODGES, the daughter of the late Edward Hodges, Organist of Trinity Church. She was formerly organist of one of the largest churches of Philadelphia.

On the 17th ult., at his residence at Huntingdon, WILLIAM GRAVES, a gifted and promising young musician.

DANIELE BORIOLI, for many years the able impresario of the Teatro Regio, Turin, at that town, on the 9th ult.

On the 10th ult., at Windsor, FREDERICK MARRIOTT, the oldest Lay-Clerk at St. George's Chapel. He was eighty-two years of age, and had been an alto singer in the choir for about half-a-century.

in this respect; and a perusal of your account of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's recent lecture (THE MUSICAL TIMES, March, p. 164) tends to confirm that impression. But my reason for writing to you is to point out (what must be obvious to everybody who has even a slight acquaintance with German folk-music) that your correspondent is entirely in error in declaring "that Humperdinck never dreamt of taking or adapting existing melodies, but that they are absolutely his own inspiration." One example is sufficient to prove this. Gretel's charming little song at the beginning of the second "picture" (p. 60, pianoforte score)— is note for note the "Ringel-tanz," which is to be found not only in German collections of folk-music, but also in such books as Mr. Walter Crane's "The Baby's Bouquet" (p. 49), the text beginning "Es regnet auf der Brücke, und ich werd nass."—Yours, &c.,

ROBIN H. LEGGE.

P.S.—Since the above was written I have come across the following extract, translated from a paragraph in the Neue Musik-Zeitung:—"Jacques-Dalcroze's 'Janie' will hardly meet with the same success as that of another idyll, Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel.' Humperdinck has accomplished precisely what the Swiss composer has neglected. He has turned national songs, gay tunes, to the best account," &c. Thus in Germany, the native land of "Hänsel und Gretel," the same praise is awarded to Humperdinck for his choice of National folk-songs as is given by the English critics. And again, the first song in the opera is (words and music alike) an old Brandenburg folk-song which opens thus:—

Su - se, lie-be Su - se, wat ru - sch - est in't stroh?

Dät sind die le - we Gös-kens.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have only just read Mr. van der Straeten's letter in this month's MUSICAL TIMES anent "Hänsel und Gretel," and I cannot help wondering how one, usually so accurate, could have committed the grievous blunders of which this letter is full. To begin with, he says: "The opening song of 'Hänsel und Gretel' has been declared to be a reminiscence of 'Ach du lieber Augustin,'" and continues, "that it has really nothing in common with it but the first five notes." Well, for one thing, nobody who knows the old German tune can help being reminded of it on hearing that opening song; but Mr. van der Straeten apparently does not know that "Suse, liebe Suse"—the actual words and music of the song—is one of the most popular German Nursery Rhymes. If he will trouble to look into a collection of German folk-songs published by Litloff, he will find the following:—

Su - se, lie-be Su - se, &c.

which, so far from having only five notes in common with it, differs in hardly more than five notes from the opening song.

I have not had time to go thoroughly into the matter, but opening the score at random I find, on page seventy-three, in the first scene of Act ii., a song which every

CORRESPONDENCE.

"HÄNSEL UND GRETEL."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Surely your correspondent, Mr. van der Straeten, is unnecessarily perturbed in spirit by the obita dicta of those "writers and critics" who have declared that Herr Humperdinck utilized popular melodies in his beautiful opera "Hänsel und Gretel." Until I read his letter in your last issue I was under the impression that Humperdinck was eulogised rather than condemned for his action

German child that ever went to a Kindergarten or elementary school knows by heart—both words and music:

Again, the Witch's— is a well known tune, used with various words, but principally as—

Will Mr. van der Straeten still contend, I wonder, that all the melodies in "Hänsel und Gretel" are Humperdinck's own inspiration?

And now, in conclusion, may I ask one or two questions?

(1.) Can the introduction into an opera or other work of a tune which has been common property for ages past be called a plagiarism? If so, then Meyerbeer and Wagner were plagiarists when they used Luther's Chorale in their "Huguenots" and "Kaisermarsch" respectively; Schumann, when he introduced "The Marseillaise" in his "Two Grenadiers"; Flotow, when he used "The last Rose of Summer" in his "Martha." Could not such a charge be brought with much greater justice against a melody which so closely imitates another that, without being actually like it, is yet felt by everybody to have its origin in it? And, if this is so, then it is Mr. van der Straeten, and he alone, who, through his letter, stamps Humperdinck as a plagiarist.

(2.) Has anybody ever thought of blaming Humperdinck for using these well known tunes in his work? Not to my knowledge. Everybody, on the contrary, will admit that it would have been distinctly against the very spirit of his work had he attempted to set new music to lines which, with their respective melodies, have been known to, and beloved by, every German from times immemorial.

I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

14, Carlton Hill, N.W.

ORPHEUS GLEE SOCIETIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I am closely associated with the Workington Orpheus Glee Society, but although the word "Glee" is attached it has not, up to the present, any significance, because we have performed nothing but sacred works. At present the Society has Gaul's "Holy City" in hand. The composition of the Society is boys with unbroken voices, soprano and alto; young men, bass and tenors. I am very much interested to know if such a choir is in existence so constituted for the purpose of performing works such as I have named, and I would take it as a great favour if you could ascertain this fact through the columns of your valuable paper.—Faithfully yours,

March 17, 1895.

R. THEXTON.

PURCELL'S TE DEUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Will not one of our Festivals do honour to Purcell by including his Te Deum in D in its programme? When the new edition, which I have prepared from the original autograph score, is published, it will, I am sure, surprise many musicians who have hitherto thought Boyce's version was a fair representation of Purcell. Let any one refer to "We believe that Thou shalt come," if they wish to see how Boyce ventured to re-harmonise and spoil Purcell.

Yours very truly,

J. F. BRIDGE.

RECENT DISCOVERIES IN EARLY ENGLISH MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—At the last meeting of the Sussex section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, Mr. H. Davey read a paper on "The Recent Discoveries in Early English Music," and quite astonished us all by what he said. He read extracts from German musical journals telling us many things about English music, one of which was that polyphony was invented by the Englishman, John Dunstable; and also exhibited the first part of a "History of Music in England," written by a German. May I suggest that any information on this subject, whether relating to new discoveries or to known facts, would probably be most welcome to many readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES. That the Germans gave us the credit of such importance in musical history was news to me, and I think it would be news also to most English musicians.—Yours faithfully, GEORGE LANGLEY.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Notice of concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

A SUBSCRIBER.—The works most suitable for your requirements are to be found in Novello's Series of Music Primers; Ralph Dunstan, on Bases and Melodies (there is also another work on the latter subject likely to be issued before long); James Higgs, on Modulation; E. Pauer, on Musical Forms.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ASHFORD, KENT.—An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, on the 14th ult., by the choral and orchestral societies of this town, the solos being taken by the members. Dr. Wilks conducted with his usual skill.

BACUP.—Mr. Charles Nuttall gave an attractive Piano-forte Recital on the 12th ult., in the Mechanics' Hall, and played a comprehensive selection from the writings of Mendelssohn, Chopin, Raff, Rubinstein, and Liszt with much facility.

BRIGHTON.—The patriotic scheme of the Brighton and Hove Choral and Orchestral Society deserves the heartiest support. The first Concert of the proposed three, to be devoted to the works of leading English musicians, was given on the 21st ult., when the programme was entirely drawn from the writings of Dr. Hubert Parry, and consisted of "Job," the "English" Symphony, and "Blest pair of Sirens." The soloists were Mr. Edward Branscombe, Mr. Paul England, and Master Sterndale Bennett, and the choral numbers were excellently sung by the choir, under the able conductorship of Dr. Sawyer.

CAYTHORPE (NEAR GRANTHAM).—The Caythorpe and Fulbeck Choral Society gave an excellent performance, on the 15th ult., of "Elijah," in the Parish Church. The soloists were Miss Jessie Hotine, Miss Mary Willis, Mr. Dunkerton, and Mr. Charles Ackerman. Mr. H. R. Dickenson presided at the organ, Mr. S. Powell at the pianoforte, and Mr. Edmond Royds conducted.

DUNDEE.—Messrs. Paterson and Sons held the fourth and last of their present series of Scottish Orchestral Concerts on the 7th ult. The programme was entirely devoted to the works of Wagner, and included, besides the purely orchestral pieces, Wolfram's Address, Act ii., from "Tannhäuser," and Hans Sachs's Monologue from "Die Meistersinger," sung by Mr. Henschel. The Concerts have been excellent throughout, and are deservedly becoming more and more popular.—On the 8th ult. M. Siloti gave a Pianoforte Recital, and once more proved himself to be a pianist of very great ability.—A successful Chamber Concert was given on February 22, by Miss Frida Scotta, who was ably assisted by Miss Lalla Miranda (vocalist), Mr. Stirling Paterson (violinist), and Mr. Francis Gibson (pianist). Miss Scotta's playing was admirable, and deserves nothing but praise.

EASTLEIGH.—The Temperance Choral Society, assisted by the Orchestral Society, gave a miscellaneous Concert, on February 28, in the New Drill Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. W. G. Hedges. Songs were contributed by Miss C. O'Neil, Miss B. Harding, the Rev. G. Corin, and Mr. F. Read; and the part-music sung by the choir included Bishop's glees, "The cloud-capt towers" and "Foresters, sound the cheerful horn." Miss M. Chalkley was the accompanist.

GRAVESEND.—The fifty-first Concert of the Gravesend and Milton Choral Association was given at the New Public Hall, on February 26, when an interesting miscellaneous programme was performed before a crowded and enthusiastic audience. The vocalists engaged were Madame Fanny Moody, Miss Lily Moody, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Charles Manners. M. Johannes Wolff's violin solos were greatly appreciated and the chorus of the Association, 150 in number, sang some part-songs, notably Mr. Eaton Fanning's "Daybreak," in a manner that reflected the highest credit upon the Conductor, Mr. Charles R. Green. Mr. Howard Moss accompanied throughout the evening. At the next Concert, which will take place on the 24th inst., Sullivan's "Golden Legend" will be performed with a full orchestra.

HONG KONG.—Mr. C. F. A. Sangster, Organist of St. John's Cathedral, has resigned that appointment after thirty-five years' service.

HOVE.—Mr. Robert Taylor's annual Concert, which took place on February 19, in the Town Hall, was one of the most successful he has given. The programme included Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner," King's setting as a part-song of "Go, lovely rose," German's suite of dances from his music to "Henry VIII.," and Mendelssohn's Capriccio Brillante in B minor (Op. 22), the solo part of the last-named being effectively rendered by Mr. Starnes. The vocalists were Miss A. Holman, Miss E. Hands, Miss H. Taylor, Miss P. Turner, Mr. Hunnybun, and Mr. P. Cooper.

ILFRACOMBE.—A successful Concert of sacred music was given, on the 12th ult., in the Runnicleave Hall, by the Choral Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. J. T. Gardner. The principal work performed was Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," which was admirably interpreted, the solos being effectively sung by Miss K. Cherry and Mr. S. Harper. A choral march, entitled "The timbrel's sound," by Mr. A. E. Willshire, and Mr. Gardner's setting of the hymn, "O worship the King," were much admired. The orchestra gave an excellent rendering of the Symphony and lent valuable assistance in the accompaniments of Mendelssohn's work.

KING'S LYNN.—Sir Walter Parratt opened, on February 25, the fine organ in St. Margaret's Church. The original instrument, built in 1744 by Snetzler, has been as far as possible preserved, but it has now been greatly enlarged and entirely rebuilt by Messrs. Wordsworth.

KINGSTON-ON-THAMES.—An excellent rendering of Stainer's "St. Mary Magdalen" was given, on the 7th ult., by the members of the Choral Society, in All Saints' Parish Church. The soloists were Miss Marion Perrott, Miss Kirkby Lunn, Mr. W. Green, and Mr. John Sandbrook. Mr. Edwin Stephenson (Organist of Sunningdale Parish Church) presided at the organ and Mr. A. P. Alderson conducted.

KINGSTOWN (IRELAND).—Miss Corry-Tandy gave an attractive Concert on the 9th ult., in the Town Hall. Miss Corry-Tandy's brilliant pianoforte playing was a feature of the evening, and the violin performances of Mr. P. Delaney were also greatly appreciated. Songs were contributed by Miss A. Elsner, Mrs. Bewley, Mr. Cantrell, and Mr. L. E. Steele. Mr. C. Wilson was an able accompanist.

LEICESTER.—A most effective performance of Dr. Hubert Parry's Oratorio "Judith" was given, on the 14th ult., in the Temperance Hall, by the Philharmonic Society, under the able direction of Mr. H. B. Ellis. Great praise is due to the choir for the precision and intelligence with which the choruses were sung, and to the excellent orchestra led by Mr. G. H. Betjemann. Full justice was done to the solos by Madame Ella Russell, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Daniel Price, and Masters Sterndale Bennett and Victor Lawrence, and the work received a most hearty reception.

LEYTONSTONE.—On the 18th ult. the Choral Society sang Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm and other music, at a special Lenten Service, held in St. Columba's Church. Mr. Henry Ridding was the organist, and a contingent from the Leytonstone Orchestral Society accompanied.

MADRAS.—The first of a series of Pianoforte Recitals was given, on February 6, by Mr. Wallace Misquith, at the Misquith Rooms. The talented pianist was ably assisted, vocally, by Miss Misquith, Lord Douglas Compton, Colonel Fane Sewell, and Mr. Morse. The Concert attracted a select and appreciative audience, and proved a distinct and encouraging success.

MATLOCK.—The Choral Society gave its last Concert for the season on the 14th ult. The programme was miscellaneous (sacred and secular). The choir, under the direction of Mr. William Wright, displayed great efficiency and finish in its singing of Gaul's "The Singers," Gounod's matchless "Ave Verum," Sydenham's "Hail, golden morn.," and the concluding piece, Gounod's "Kermesse," from "Faust." Miss Maggie Jaques was recalled for her rendering of "With verdure clad," and the other vocalists, Miss Amy Kirk, Mr. Mercer, and Mr. Frank Kirk were equally successful. The Misses Crossley contributed harp and violin solos and duets with much acceptance.

NEWPORT.—An excellent performance of Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" was given on February 25, in the Albert Hall, by Mrs. Morris's mixed choir, which includes the popular Gwent Ladies' Choir. The accompaniments were played by an orchestra, which also performed the Overture to Handel's "Occasional" Oratorio. The solos in the cantata were sung by Mrs. Lewis, Miss K. F. James, and Mr. W. Edmonds; and in the second part of the programme able assistance was rendered by Miss L. Jones, Mr. R. Morris, and the Gwent Ladies' Quartet.

PERTH.—Two successful Concerts have been given during the past month. Mr. Richardson's Choral Society, for the Concert performance of "Maritana," engaged the services of Madame Fanny Moody, Mr. Charles Manners and party for the solos. A small but efficient orchestra, led by Mr. Daubmann, was also provided. The second Concert was that of Miss Steele's Select Choir, a party of twenty-eight voices, by whom part-songs were sung in a praiseworthy manner.

PETERBORO'.—The Orchestral Society conducted by Dr. Keaton gave a successful Concert in the Theatre Royal, on February 28. The most important works performed were Haydn's Twelfth Symphony and Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D, the solo part of the latter being rendered by Mr. G. Patman. Miss A. M. Holloway greatly pleased her audience by her violin playing, and songs were sung by Mrs. L. B. Foster and Mr. J. B. Smith.

SIDCUP.—On the 19th ult. Mr. W. H. Gill read a paper, at a meeting of the Literary and Scientific Society, entitled "Pictures from Manxland," in which he gave a most interesting account of the national music of the island. Examples were sung by Miss Dora Gill, and several dance tunes played by a small orchestra, consisting of Mr. E. H. Homan, Herr Grimm, Mr. T. Gundry, and Mr. Gill.

SOUTHAMPTON.—An interesting Ballad and Instrumental Concert was given at West Southampton, on the 12th ult., by Miss Alice Newman. Miss Ada Loaring, Miss R. Parmenter, Mr. S. Gilbert, and Herr Stoll were the vocalists. Pianoforte and violin pieces were played by Miss Winifred Walsh and Master W. Ashford.

SOVERBY BRIDGE.—A successful performance of Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was given last month in the Town Hall by the Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Gaukröger. The solos were effectively sung by Miss K. Shields, Mrs. S. Cragg, Mr. T. Buckland, and Mr. D. Billington. Mr. J. Foulds was the accompanist.

TAVISTOCK.—The Choral Society, consisting of about eighty members, under the energetic direction of the Rev. E. C. C. Wilson, gave, on February 25, in the Town Hall, a much appreciated Concert, which included a performance of Bennett's cantata "The May Queen." The principal soloists were Mrs. J. H. Mason, Miss Sims, Mr. J. D. Trotter, and Mr. W. S. Milford. Miss E. Sims and the Rev. W. H. David played the accompaniments.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—Much interest attached to the Concert given on February 26, in the Agricultural Hall, by the Festival Choral Society. The programme contained a new cantata entitled "The Black Knight," by Mr. Edward Elgar, performed on this occasion for the first time; Gade's "Psyche"; Saul's Dream from Dr. Hubert Parry's "King Saul"; and an excerpt from Dr. Heap's "Maid of Astolat." The new work, conducted by the composer, made a very favourable impression, and was effectively interpreted by a chorus and band of about 250 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Maggie Davies, Miss N. Pritchard, Mr. W. Molineaux, and Mr. Frangcon-Davies.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Caleb Guest, Organist to the Primitive Methodist Church, Shenstone, Halesowen.—Mr. A. G. B. Archer, Organist and Choirmaster to the Church of St. Peter, Pembury.—Mr. Frank Hollis, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's, Berkeley Square.—Mr. Percy Keeble, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Bartholomew's, Gray's Inn Road.—Mr. T. Hatson Wright, Organist and Choirmaster to Dundalk Parish Church.—Mr. R. Vinen Stanley, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Romford, Essex.—Mr. Louis Hamand, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Hillingdon.

CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. S. Malcolm Boyle (Tenor), to St. George's, Windsor.—Mr. Edgar Critchley, principal Alto to St. Mary Magdalene, Paddington.—Mr. Charles Hinchliff, Bass Soloist to St. Andrew's, Wells Street.—Master Turnbull Sinclair, Soprano Solo Boy to the Brompton Oratory.

STABAT MATER

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. HENSCHEL.

VOCAL SCORE, 8vo, 2s. 6d.; VOCAL PARTS, 1s. EACH.

FULL SCORE, £2 2s.; ORCHESTRAL PARTS ON HIRE.

THE TIMES.

A musicianly piece of work and altogether worthy of Mr. Henschel's high reputation.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The new "Stabat Mater" is quite worthy of a place among accepted settings of the same text, and a valuable addition to the rich store of music possessed by the Roman Catholic Church. . . . There was not a dull moment or a break in close attention, the music becoming more full of interest as it proceeded, and the climax being the close. . . . When the spring of melody began to flow, as in the "Vidit suum dulcem natum" of the "Pro peccatis," in the "Eia Mater," in the beautiful "Fac me vere," and in the most tender and plaintive "Virgo, virginum præclara," no doubt of success could be entertained.

STANDARD.

Mr. Henschel's "Stabat Mater" is beyond all question an extremely thoughtful and musical work, and the composer, who conducted, must have been well satisfied with its performance, and with the hearty reception accorded to it by the audience.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Henschel may be congratulated upon the manner in which he has realised the meaning of the words, and succeeded in producing a work which, in spite of obvious comparisons, may be accepted as an admirable musical interpretation of the beautiful hymn. . . . The Italian-like beauty of the melody and treatment of the "Eia Mater" aroused genuine enthusiasm, which was increased by the subsequent number, the duo and chorus, "Fac me vere." Other impressive portions of the music met with cordial and appreciative recognition.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Henschel has regarded the old Latin hymn from the most reverential aspect, so that it is a composition even better suited to a church congregation than to an ordinary concert audience, which cannot be affirmed of all versions, of Rossini, for example; but there is at least one section in which the pervading sombreness of tone is for a time suspended. This is the "Eia Mater," the fourth number, set as an alto solo and chorus. By lovers of flowing tune—and there are more such than some composers suppose—this number will be considered the gem of the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

It is a work of considerable originality, essentially romantic in its sentiment, and thoroughly in keeping with the ritual of the Church in the hymnology of which Giacomone's famous poem occupies so conspicuous a place.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary Parish Churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, contains the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.
PAPER BOARDS, TWO SHILLINGS. TONIC SOL-FA, NINEPENCE.
WORDS ONLY, WITH HYMN TUNES, TWOPENCE.
WORDS OF HYMNS, FIVE SHILLINGS PER HUNDRED.

(ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW)

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION AND ADAPTATION BY THE REV. DR. TROUTBECK.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Thirty-three years have elapsed since the publication of the first English edition, and faithful to its original as that edition may have been in the main, it has been felt that closer adherence to the accepted standard text is attainable, and, as far as is at all practicable, should be attained. With this view the present edition is issued. The chorales, choruses, and solos have been newly and independently translated from the original German words, and the adaptation of the narrative of the Evangelist, a task rendered perhaps somewhat less difficult and hazardous by the aid of the Revised Version of the New Testament, has been carefully reconsidered and re-arranged so as to preserve unaltered, as far as may be, the musical text of the original.

AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs

BY THE

REV. E. V. HALL, M.A.

Late Precentor of Worcester Cathedral.

Price Eightpence.
Words, with music to the Hymns, price Twopence.

This is an attempt to provide music for Lent and for Good Friday of the simplest kind, for use in country churches. The music is interspersed with well-known hymns, in which the congregation may be invited to join. The Cantata may be used at a special service on Good Friday afternoon or evening, or on any day in Lent, and requires only a solo voice and a small choir.

FIRST STEPS

AT THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FRANCESCO BERGER.

(No 45. Novello, Ewer and Co.'s Music Primers and Educational Series. Edited by Sir JOHN STAINER and Dr. C. HUBERT H. PARRY.)

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
In Paper Boards, Three Shillings.

PREFACE.

This "Elementary Primer for the Pianoforte" aims at supplying "beginners" with a "Method" to be used from end to end in the order in which it is compiled.

Although "Pianoforte Instructors" are as numerous as the sands of the sea, I claim for this one that it is quite original not only in its progressive order, but also in the language employed.

Convinced that it is worse than useless to crowd a child's mind with words which, to that child, convey no meaning, I have studiously used only such words as a child with moderate intelligence can be expected to understand.

The student must, before attempting to play, acquire a correct and unerring mental picture of the arrangement of the key-board.

Counting aloud should become a habit from the very first finger-exercises.

The customary "Household melodies" have been carefully avoided, because I confidently believe that, while engaged on a familiar melody, the student is unconsciously playing more or less "by ear," even correcting his own errors that way—instead of "reading" (deciphering every note of the Piece).

Diatonic Scales are not included. Till the student is sufficiently advanced to be taught the construction of major and minor scales, he is better without "scales" at all; and it does not come within the scope of an "Elementary Primer" to teach all that "the Scales" imply.

Some Scale-passages, however, with no necessary tonality, are included.

The so-called "English" fingering has been discarded in favour of the more universal "foreign" fingering.

PREFACE.

THE collective title given to these songs does not quite express the idea which the Composer had in view in writing them. But it was impossible to find an exact equivalent in English to the French Chansons Intimes or to the German Intime Liedchen.

In these short songs the Composer has tried to give expression to some of our deeper feelings or questionings—such songs as one might sing to oneself, when in the mood, or to some intimate friends.

The Composer is indebted to H.R.H. The Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) for the drawings representing respectively Shadow and Sunshine, graciously designed for these two Volumes by Her Royal Highness.

New Cantatas for May Day.

THE DAISY CHAIN

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

HAMILTON CLARKE.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.—The annual ceremony on the First of May, of the Installation of the Queen of the Daisy Chain, has been instituted by the Schoolmaster of the village, for the purpose of rewarding the most popular of the scholars in the girls' school. The celebration affords opportunity for an interesting display, and the author has woven into it a very ingenious and amusing plot, in which some of the most interesting characters are the Schoolmaster and Schoolmistress, a Ladies' Volunteer Ambulance Corps, commanded by Surgeon-Captain Amanda Chuckles, four other female and five male principal characters, with a chorus of schoolboys and girls. The scene is laid in the playground of the school.

SANTLEY'S SINGING MASTER

CONTAINING

ADVICE TO THE MASTER AND STUDENT, EXERCISES, VOCALIZZI, &c.

By CHARLES SANTLEY.

PART I., PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Any words emanating from such a master of vocal art as Mr. Santley are worthy of consideration and the appearance of the first instalment of a Tutor from his pen must receive attention. Mr. Santley also gives hints to teachers, his instructions with respect to the blending of the registers are well worthy of note, as are the examples illustrating the difference between good and bad methods of vocalisation."—Athenæum.

"This is a capital work, and is worthy of the attention of the studios. The exercises comprised in the work are the basis of singing, and should be invaluable to those desirous of cultivating their vocal powers."—Civil Service Gazette.

"This new and valuable volume, which has just been published, is an excellent addition to the vocalist's library. The work is one which recommends itself to all who wish to study the art of vocalisation."—Times.

"Messrs. Chappell and Co. have just published the first part of 'Santley's Singing Master,' which contains a series of more than seventy admirably graduated vocal exercises, and a preface and an introduction in which the famous baritone gives much sensible advice to both teachers and students."—Manchester Guardian.

"This new Singing Tutor, by the greatest of English baritones, is most welcome, and students and teachers will find it an exceedingly valuable book. The instructions to masters and pupils will be found of great value to both. The handbook is comprehensive and cheap, and no doubt will receive the welcome it deserves on its merits."—The Freeman's Journal.

THE BEHNKE VOICE-TRAINING METHOD.

Price, in paper covers, Two Shillings; in cloth, Three Shillings.

VOICE-TRAINING PRIMER

By MRS. EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

An easy Catechism of Vocal Physiology and Musical Theory, for the use of Vocal Students generally. This work is also intended as a Text-book for preparing Candidates for Vocal Examinations, particularly those of the Associated Board of the R.C.M. and R.A.M., the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and Trinity College, London. It contains in one volume all the information required for answering the viva voce questions of Examiners.

Sixtieth Thousand. Price, in paper covers, One Shilling and Sixpence; in cloth, Three Shillings.

VOICE-TRAINING EXERCISES

In Six separate Books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

By EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

"Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility."—Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley.

"Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen."—Sir R. P. Stewart.

"Scientific, systematic, and ingenious."—Sir John Stainer.

Third and Improved Edition. Price, in paper covers, One Shilling and Sixpence; in cloth, Three Shillings.

VOICE-TRAINING STUDIES

In Six separate Books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

By EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

"This work contains 24 Progressive Studies in different styles, and is intended as a companion or supplementary volume to 'Voice-Training Exercises.' Those of a more cantabile character are to be used as Solfeggi, the others are to be sung as Vocalises. In this Second Edition the accompaniments have been simplified. Highly favourable opinions of these Studies have been expressed by Sir John Stainer, Sir Robert Stewart, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and other eminent authorities."

"There can be little doubt that these 'Studies,' which are published in separate keys for all voices, will share the popularity of the 'Exercises.'"—Sunday Times.

"We have no doubt that the second volume will equal the first in popularity."—Morning Post.

"I am glad to find you are still going ahead in your valuable sphere of work. The 'Voice-Training Studies' are a solid and sound contribution to the repertory of teachers and students."—Sir John Stainer.

"Your new book of 'Voice-Training Studies' is admirable, and will prove of very great value to students and teachers. I like it much."—C. Vincent, Mus. Doc.

very pleasant voice, and her singing was marked throughout the evening with feeling, clear enunciation, and keen perception of the parts allotted to her. She was heard to great advantage in the recit.
'Ahi! our Immanuel,' and the aria 'Every prayer.' The recit.
teemed with accidentals, and the runs in the aria were given accurately. The duet with the tenor was beautifully sung. Miss Walker gave one of her best efforts, 'Lo! the heaven-descended prophet'; the difficult runs were given correctly, and, at its conclusion, the lady was twice called upon to bow her acknowledgments."—*Aylesbury

MISS

(SOPRANO)

SIMS REEVES, Esq., says:—"Mr. Sims Reeves can highly recommend his pupil, Miss Ada Loaring. She is a soprano of great promise, and is well acquainted with the soprano parts of all the oratorios as well as an extensive répertoire of soprano music generally."

ST. PETER'S, BROCKLEY, CHORAL SOCIETY.

"MARTYR OF ANTIOCH" (SULLIVAN).—"Miss Ada Loaring, in the central character of the steadfast young convert who rejects her powerful lover and prefers prison and death, gave unequalled delight to all, not merely by her splendid soprano of high range and brilliant tone, but by the fervid and exalted style of delivery. The impassioned fervour of the recitative at the Christian's burial place, followed by the hymn, 'For Thou didst die,' aroused enthusiasm and a storm of applause, which Miss Loaring repeatedly acknowledged. The following number, a duet with Callias (Mr. Dan Price) was very dramatic. . . . We have rarely heard a sacred rôle interpreted with such exaltation and fire as by Miss Ada Loaring on this occasion. She sang as though verily inspired."—Kentish Mercury, April 5, 1895.

A Correspondence Pupil at LAUNCESTON, who received First Lesson March 10, applies (April 8) for the third, and says: "The benefit which I have already derived from your exercises is nothing short of marvellous; I am delighted with them."

A well-known Teacher says:—

"DEAR MR. SMITH,—I can certainly endorse most heartily all Mr. Tobias Matthay says with regard to your wonderful exercises. I was absolutely astonished at the extraordinary results produced on my own fingers in a few days.

"During the past twenty years I have been giving various gymnastic exercises to my pupils in order that purely mechanical work at the piano might be reduced to a minimum. All except yours have proved more or less disappointing, and at first I feared your discovery was too good to be true. Now, however, that I have tested it, both on myself and pupils, I am convinced that it does all you claim for it, and that 'it comes as a boon and a blessing to men,' and is as great a discovery for the pianist as electricity was to commerce.

"Yours very truly,

"ALFRED E. BUTTERWORTH."

MAY 1, 1895.

THE INFLUENCE OF HENRY PURCELL ON HANDEL, TRACED IN "ACIS AND GALATEA."

By E. D. RENDALL.

I was engaged a few days ago in rehearsing the final chorus of Purcell's "Dido and Æneas" when a strange feeling of familiarity oppressed me. I seemed to know the phrases in a slightly different shape, and I searched my memory for the source from whence this impression proceeded. It suddenly flashed on my mind—"Mourn, all ye muses," in Handel's "Acis and Galatea." On turning up the chorus in question I found the apparent similarity, and yet how slight to all appearance it is. Here the passages are, side by side:—

"WITH DROOPING WINGS."

PURCELL.

Keep here, here your watch, &c.

nev-er, nev-er, nev-er. nev-er part.

Detailed description: This block contains musical notation for Purcell's piece. It features a treble and bass staff. The treble staff has a key signature of one flat (Bb) and a common time signature (C). The melody begins with a half note G4, followed by a quarter note A4, and then a series of eighth notes. The bass staff provides a harmonic accompaniment with chords and single notes. The lyrics are written below the staves.

"MOURN, ALL YE MUSES."

HANDEL.

No more, no more,

Detailed description: This block contains musical notation for Handel's piece. It features a treble and bass staff. The treble staff has a key signature of one flat (Bb) and a common time signature (C). The melody is characterized by wide intervals, starting with a half note G4 and moving to a half note E5. The bass staff provides a simple harmonic accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the staves.

I have designedly put this comparison forward before any other, because I desire to free myself from the suspicion of trying to put upon Handel any accusation of plagiarism. My intention is rather to attempt to trace the legitimate influence which English music, as summed up in the works of the greatest genius of the epoch, would naturally have on the early years of a man like Handel. It is impossible to suppose (despite his contemptuous remark in later years, "when he came to England, there were some good players, but no composers") that he did not know and revere Purcell. Consciously, or unconsciously, he assimilated something of all the great and noble work which fell in his way, and none was greater or more remarkable for its amazing originality than this which he found in the land of his adoption.

The casual likeness which my memory constructed between the choruses quoted above set me considering the subject further. Although they are in different time, and nowhere exactly parallel in harmony, there is a likeness in feeling. The detached cadences give a similar pathetic effect, and somehow it is just that key of pathos which is characteristic of Purcell and of no one else to the same extent.

Now "Acis and Galatea" is the work of all others where we should expect to find such traces. Dating, of course, from Handel's early years in England, it was a new departure for him. He had written a pastoral in Italy on exactly the same subject, but in the employment of the chorus and general dramatic treatment this work is entirely new, and from the first page to the last entirely different.

To what shall we attribute this change of style, if not to Handel's new surroundings? The essential characteristics of Purcell's secular music are its dramatic and emotional qualities. The special strength of English music has always been the chorus. Not to quote further, "Dido and Æneas" (although called an opera) is an exactly similar work to "Acis and Galatea." Both have been performed as concert serenatas, and both have been produced on the stage as operas. It would supply, therefore, just that experience of which Handel stood in need. How far this influence was actually of importance we can conjecture only from internal evidence, which is always of a most illusory character; but it is with this idea that I propose to go through "Acis and Galatea" in detail, illustrating it from parallel passages in Purcell's secular works.

The Sinfonia presents no especial feature of interest, but the opening chorus is analogous in construction, though on a far broader and more effective scale, to many of Purcell's choruses.

Handel's treatment of the words "Dance and sport" may be paralleled by the following extracts:—

"DESTRUCTION'S OUR DELIGHT" ("DIDO").

Ho! ho! . . &c.

His-sa bleeds to-night, And Carthage flames to-mor-row.

"TO WODEN'S HALL" ("KING ARTHUR").

We will dance and quaff, &c.

In fact, the chorus is of that episodic type of which the most familiar example (outside Handel) is Purcell's "In these delightful pleasant groves," consisting of a broad opening, followed by short points of close imitation, and concluded by a Coda. The ease and simplicity of the style is a great change after the elaborate German counterpoint of the choruses of Handel's Latin Church music, and yet it does not descend to that triteness of construction which the Italian desire to glorify the solo voice at all cost often rendered necessary.

Of the solos that follow there is not much to be said. Handel's broad Italian cantilene was too well established to be modified even in respect of pathos, which was Purcell's peculiar excellence, or to suit the minutiae of English verbal expression. I fancy, however, that the English composer, had he lived to see the work, would have delighted in that curious and beautiful harmony which is twice repeated at the end of "Love in her eyes"—

Set the heart on fire, . . to set the heart on fire,

Grace, no charm is want - ing, To set the heart on fire.

In the second act it is that a new Handel is most apparent. If we compare the first three numbers, "Wretched Lovers," "I rage, I melt, I burn," and "O ruddier than the cherry," with the corresponding music of the Italian "Acis," we shall see how great is the advance in dramatic feeling.

The chorus is built up on subjects drawn from different sources. The first section is founded on a theme, claimed to be Bach's, but probably a usual motive for contrapuntal treatment. The second section, "Behold the monster Polypheme," is drawn from one of his own "Hanover" chamber duets, with which the first subject fortuitously combines.

The last section, beginning with the celebrated staccato chords, "See what ample strides," is a series of dramatic episodes, which recall English influence.

The semiquaver phrases, "The mountains nod," give the same feeling of expectant horror that the little "Frost" symphony in "King Arthur" is intended to convey, although, of course, on a far smaller scale.

The second episode, "The waves run backward," has an accompaniment to which the reiterated notes give a somewhat confused effect which is especially Purcellian.

"YE BLUST'RING BRETHREN" ("KING ARTHUR").

The peculiar treatment is obviously intentional; it gives in both cases a stormy character to the music, and is continued in the opening symphony of the next recitative, which indeed resembles still more closely the actual notes of my quotation from "King Arthur."

It reminds us of his own daring use of the "Neapolitan" sixth, of which I give an example below.

Recurring to the chorus, Handel has used the old Italian device of an accompanied roudale to good dramatic purpose on the word "roars"; the agitated "harks" are, of course, frequent in all English music of the period.

In general I believe that the dramatic crisis contained in the concluding part of the chorus and recitative of Polyphemus owes much to Purcell. The furioso is just in his "Ercles" vein and, of course, in the final phrase, "In soft enchanting accents," his actual pathetic style stands for a moment confessed. The dropping note on the word "soft" is one of his most characteristic mannerisms. If we compare the recitative with the stiff and ordinary fanfare, which introduces Polyphemus in the Italian "Acis," we shall see how great is the difference between the English Handel and the Italian—and Handel was himself aware of the fact. When he re-wrote the Italian Serenata in 1732 (twelve years after the composition of the English "Acis") he took several numbers of the later work to enlarge it. For this purpose he used none of the characteristic numbers, but only the more commonplace secondary airs; the trio, and the first and last choruses. "Wretched Lovers," "Mourn, all ye muses," "O ruddier than the cherry," and the great recitative "I rage, I melt, I burn," are conspicuous by their absence.

Now it is inconceivable that Handel should not have known how effective for their purpose these numbers were, even if he did not understand how much superior they are to the music which he did take. In fact, he shows his appreciation of their excellence by employing them as material in a modified form.

Here, for example, is the re-written recitative of the second Italian "Acis"—

The musical score is written for Basses (Bassi). It consists of five systems of staves. The first system shows a single staff with a whole rest. The second system has two staves: the top staff has a whole rest, and the bottom staff begins with a melodic line. The third system has two staves, both with melodic lines. The fourth system has two staves, both with melodic lines. The fifth system has two staves, both with melodic lines. The score is labeled "POLIFEMO." and "Av - vam".

We recognise at once "I rage, I melt," but to our ear watered and despoiled of its virility. Again, he opens his third part with a rather trivial chorus for solo voices and tutti, for which he takes the middle section of "Wretched Lovers," altered and enfeebled, to form a second part—

The musical score is for a vocal part, with the lyrics "e non sa dir perchè." above the staff. It consists of two systems of staves. The first system has two staves with a melodic line on the top staff and a bass line on the bottom staff. The second system has two staves with a melodic line on the top staff and a bass line on the bottom staff.

If it were not for the hard fact that the autograph undoubtedly belongs to 1732, we should set it down for an early Italian sketch which formed the germ of our "Acis"—as such it would be interesting, but as an improvement on "Wretched Lovers" it is intolerable.

What reason can be assigned for Handel's extraordinary treatment of his finest work? Simply that he did not consider music written for English singers suitable for Italians. Such essentially original flights must be modified and brought into keeping with Italian ideas of decorum before they could find a place in an Italian Serenata. We have it on the testimony of Addison that the Italian singers could see nothing in Purcell's music. They could not understand it, and therefore would not try to sing it. Matchless as their technique was, it was strictly limited. Within its own bounds it could do almost anything, beyond them it was helpless.

Handel's experience with Corelli in Italy had taught him how hard and fast these barriers of technique were. The greatest violinist of his age protested: "But, my dear Saxon, this music is in the Italian style, and I do not understand it." And what was true of a violinist was, a fortiori, true of singers. Handel felt that the numbers in question were a new departure. They were, indeed, the first-fruits of Handel's oratorio style, the outcome of English surroundings, and a thing quite apart from the Italian opera music required from him by the exigence of the moment and demands of Italian singing craft. To attribute this advance simply to Purcell's influence would be to ignore the rapid growth of the early years of such a man as Handel was. But beyond a doubt it was in the pages of Purcell that he could find similar dramatic ideas and aspirations, and not among the Italians. To return to "Acis"—"O ruddier than the cherry," as the vocalisation of the bass of a two-part song, can be paralleled in Purcell's "Hence with your trifling deity," from "Timon." Unison passages of the kind are common in all Handel's bass songs (witness "O voi del Erebo" from the "Resurrezione"), but are usually varied with cantabile.

The roughness of this huge voice, reinforced by contrabasses in their highest register throughout, constitutes a piece of character painting as apart from the smooth and portentous execution of the Italian Polifemo as it is possible to conceive. The huge bellowing monster stands before us as he does in Purcell's "Timon."

The bass recitative and air, which follow, are in the same vein and have a superficial resemblance in detail to the Englishman's music. The little piece of measured air in the recitative is introduced exactly as in his great cantatas, and the syncopation of the theme of the aria is a favourite device of his. Passing over the next three airs, and the trio, in which the part of Polyphemus reminds us by its "Cannot, cannot bear," of Purcell's "No! No! No! No!" we come to the recitative, "Help, Galatea."

This number is developed from a similar, but longer, aria in the Italian "Acis." It will be seen how Handel has pressed the chromatic chords closer, and broken the words with inimitable pathos, in the English work—

Acis: Col san-gue len-to pal-pi-ta il mio

This sobbing, broken utterance may be paralleled in that most touching of all recita-tives, "Thy hand, my Anna," in "Dido," or, in fact, in most of Purcell's pathetic cantatas. Chromatic passages of the kind are very common with him, particularly in such a position as this occupies at a pathetic close—

"LET ME, LET ME FREEZE AGAIN TO DEATH" ("KING ARTHUR").

CODA OF OVERTURE ("BONDUCA")

Strangely enough this recitative is not used in the edition of 1732, but the earlier form re-written.

I might further point to the soft close for strings at the end of "Mourn, all ye muses," which sounds like one of Purcell's "Ecco's," or the hornpipe which accompanies "Galatea, dry thy tears"; but the quotations already made are sufficient to show the advance in Handel's style which the acquaintance with English music initiated.

The vice of Italian music—its easy, smooth, and masterly monotony—renders most of Handel's earlier compositions valueless. Is it too much to suppose that the swift hammer-strokes of Purcell's dramatic instinct, and the overmastering passion of his emotional nature, which not unfrequently leave him stuttering and stammering on the brink of a great creation, had their effect on Handel's youth? The German brought to the task of expression a far more elaborate technique, and a refined taste which rejected the crudity of false expression and harmony intolerable from its own daring, and yet knew how to seize that element of picturesqueness and character which it contained in solution.

If I have seemed to put too great a value upon Purcell's work, it is because I feel convinced that his music contains the germ of effects far beyond his power to realise, and aspirations which are only revealed to those who see and study. That Handel's insight did so see and understand, his English works seem to me to prove, and thus he was enabled to tread the path which his predecessor had in part pointed out, and to reach the goal which the dimness of the musical atmosphere of Purcell's age had made an object of hopeless aspiration.

FROM MY STUDY.

So much was recently written about the Strauss family, in connection with the jubilee of the present waltz-king, that further remark would be superfluous. The composition of dance music is, no doubt, comparatively humble work, but we should not forget that nearly all the great masters have taken part in it, and, as regards the Waltz, that the Strausses have done for that fascinating form even more Lanner had no lessons in composition. He read up the subject in theoretical books, and began work, in lowly fashion, by arranging operatic pieces, overtures, marches, &c., for a small string band. In a happy moment he turned his attention to dance music, with such results that, despite most formidable competitors, his works became widely popular. Fétis thus speaks of his achievements as a composer for the ball-room: "His works of this kind are in number more than two hundred. Lanner had than Haydn and Mozart did for the Minuet. They left the courtly dance of the last century pretty much where they found it, but the Strauss waltz is almost a distinct creation, full of beauty, poetry and passion in a measure unattained before.

Joseph Lanner, to a certain extent the rival of the Strausses, was born in 1802, at Vienna, where his father carried on business as a glove-maker. He showed, at an early age, a disposition towards music, and studied the violin with marked success, though his masters, it is said, were but humble folk in their way.

genius in the highest degree for this kind of music. He made changes alike in form, rhythm, harmony, and instrumentation. His waltzes, in particular, have very remarkable originality." Lanner composed, also, marches, potpourris for full orchestra, an overture, and music for several melodramas and pantomimes. Lanner died, April 14, 1843, at the early age of forty-one, and it is said that more than twenty thousand persons attended his funeral.

The career of Madame Vestris must be more or less well known to musical readers who have left their youth behind them. It is not for the benefit of such persons, but of their juniors that I accompany the portrait now presented with the following particulars of its subject. Lucia Elizabeth, daughter of Gaetano Bartolozzi, and grand-daughter of Francesco Bartolozzi, the famous engraver, was born early in 1797, the precise date being given by some as January 3, by others as March 2. This, however, is immaterial. When only sixteen years old, she married Armand Vestris, grandson of the Vestris, and ballet-master at the King's Theatre. By her husband's direction, probably, she took singing lessons from Corri, and made a somewhat premature at the production of Weber's "Oberon," April 12, 1826, gives her name a permanent place in musical history. Chorley wrote of this artist: "At the Italian Opera, if she had possessed musical patience and energy, she might have queened it, because she possessed (half Italian by birth) one of the most luscious of low voices, great personal beauty, an almost faultless figure, which she adorned with consummate art, and no common stage address. But a less arduous career pleased her better; so she could not—or, perhaps, would not—remain on the Italian stage."

This is not the place in which to discuss the much-debated and, it would appear, exceedingly difficult question of street music; but its revival in a section of the press has reminded me of a little book published by John Murray thirty-one years ago, and entitled "Street Music in the Metropolis. Correspondence and Observations on the existing Law, and proposed Amendments. By Michael T. Bass, M.P." In the early sixties, Mr. Bass led a parliamentary crusade against the "organ fiend" and his congeners, greatly to the satisfaction of poor John Leech and Professor Babbage, both of them well-known and conspicuous victims of the perennial nuisance. The honourable gentleman, as his book shows, had the support of large sections of society; indeed, as far as influential backing went, there seemed no reason why his agitation should not result in an adequate legislative measure. "I received letters"—this is from Mr. Bass's preface—"from persons of all classes, expressing their gratitude to me for taking up this question, and urging me to persevere. I, therefore, early debut, in 1815, as the heroine of Winter's "Il Ratto di Proserpina." Madame Vestris had, nevertheless, a certain success, due, perhaps, to youth and good looks; but it was not till 1820, and then not in lyric drama of the highest class, that she fairly conquered the English public. From that time she remained a favourite, and was invaluable in musical comedies, &c., especially when giving a "send-off" to ballad-like "Cherry ripe" and "Meet me by moonlight alone." In course of time, Madame Vestris, in association with Charles Matthews, whom she married later, started upon a managerial career, experiencing a full share of the vicissitudes incidental thereto. She died at Fulham, August 8, 1856. The fact that Madame Vestris played Fatima this session (1864) gave notice that I should move for leave to introduce a Bill for the better Regulation of Street Music in the Metropolitan Police District. This public intimation gave rise to a more varied and voluminous correspondence than I could have believed possible. Nothing but a careful perusal of their letters could convey any idea of the anxiety felt by so many persons for some effectual check to the daily increasing grievance of organ-grinders and street music. The petitions for presentation sent to myself and other Members of Parliament have been numerous signed by all the learned professions. . . . One very remarkable Memorial has been addressed to me, signed by the leading composers and professors of music in the metropolis, and supported by upwards of 200 signatures. It is headed, 'The Street Organ Nuisance,' and proceeds to state that, 'We, the undersigned Members of the Musical Profession, heartily approve of your Bill before the House of Commons, for the prevention of the above nuisance, by which our professional duties are seriously interrupted, and, should the measure be carried, it will confer an inestimable boon upon us.'"

In the opening chapter of his book, Mr. Bass stated and analysed the Sections in 2 and 3 Victoria, c. 47, applying to the subject. These are worth quoting :

belonging to the Metropolitan Police District, and for all persons whom he shall call to his assistance, to take into custody, without a warrant, any person who, within view of any such constable, shall offend in any manner against this Act, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such constable and cannot be ascertained by such constable."

The ludicrous inadequacy of this enactment—about as fine an example of "How not to do it" as ever the wisdom of Parliament supplied—made Mr. Bass's task of destructive analysis an easy one. He merely had to point out that the organ-grinder could grind with impunity in any place (forecourt, garden, &c.) not being a

MADAME VESTRIS.

"That it shall be lawful for any householder within the Metropolitan Police District personally, or by his servant, or by any police constable, to require any street musician to depart from the neighbourhood of the house of such householder on account of the illness of any inmate of such house, or for other reasonable cause, and that every person who shall sound or play upon any musical instrument in any thoroughfare near any house, after being so required to depart, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than forty shillings, and, in default of payment, to be imprisoned for any period not exceeding one month."

public thoroughfare; that he could play in any thoroughfare unless illness or other reasonable cause were alleged—the words "reasonable cause" being variously interpreted by magistrates, and not allowed to be interpreted at all by the policeman, who was instructed simply to report to his sergeant; that only a householder could put the law in motion, and that no arrest could be made unless the constable had witnessed the offence, which he was very unlikely to do. Mr. Bass's Bill for the amendment of this defective measure consisted of a single section, repealing the first of those quoted above, and enacting that any householder, personally or by deputy, may require street musicians to depart from the neighbourhood of his dwelling, and that in case of refusal the offender should be liable to arrest without warrant, and a fine not exceeding forty shillings.

"That it shall be lawful for any constable

The story of the crusade of 1864 has now been told sufficiently for appreciation of much in Mr. Bass's book which even now has weight and value. Among the letters printed by the author is one from Mark Lemon, then editor of Punch, who tells a melancholy story of a famous colleague. After mentioning that he himself had found peace in the country, Mr. Lemon went on: "A dear friend of mine . . . has not been so fortunate. He lived in Brunswick Square, and remained there until the nervous system was so seriously affected by the continual disturbance . . . that he was compelled to abandon a most desirable home, and seek a retreat at Kensington. After expending considerable sums to make his present residence convenient for his art work—placing double windows to the front of his house, &c.—he is again driven from his home by the continual visitation of street bands and organ grinders. The effect upon his health, produced, on my honour, by the causes I have named, is so serious that he is forbidden to take horse exercise, or indulge in fast walking, as a palpitation of the heart has been produced—a form of angina pectoris, I believe—and his friends are most anxiously concerned for his safety. He is ordered to Homburg, and I know that the expatriation will entail a loss of nearly £50 a week upon him just at present. I am sure I need not withhold from you the name of this poor gentleman—it is Mr. John Leech."

Among other correspondents is Mr. Alfred Wigan, who has a simple tale to tell: "Once, when I was lying dangerously ill, a neighbour of mine took a German band up into his balcony after they had been ordered off by the constable on duty, and kept them playing for about two hours." Mr. James S. Kingdon relates the incident of a fierce encounter between himself and a harmless, inoffensive grinder, who assaulted the remonstrant householder with his pole, breaking an arm. It is true that Mr. Kingdon balanced matters somewhat by knocking out a few of the Savoyard's teeth. Professor Babbage waged constant warfare with the organ men, and he, of course, is found among the correspondents of Mr. Bass, sending a list of 165 interruptions in ninety days, the offenders being six brass bands, ninety-six organ players, and sixty others. Mr. Babbage often prosecuted his tormentors in the police courts, at considerable expense, his outlay from December, 1860, to July, 1861, being £103. This was not all, nor was it the worst. As usual in such cases, the poorer classes took the offenders' part, and assailed the poor Professor with insulting epithets whenever he appeared in the streets.

Letter follows letter, from clergymen, medical men, literary men, and the professions generally; all harping on the same string; all telling the same story of physical and mental distress. I select from the mass one which has a bearing upon the question whether the poorer classes desire the presence and services of the street musician. A gentleman residing in Cleveland Terrace, Hyde Park, prepared a petition in support of Mr. Bass's Bill, and obtained numerous signatures. He wrote: "It was signed by all classes—quite as freely by the smaller householders and tradesmen as by the richer. A clergyman who has the care of one of the poorer districts in Paddington, and is well acquainted with the feelings and tastes of his numerous poor, gave it to me as his confident opinion that, if they were polled, the majority would be against street music. The argument that servants like it is not worth notice, for, surely, the law is not to be accommodated to them, to the sacrifice of those who feed, house, and pay servants." Against this may be set the testimony of a householder at Hyde Park Gate, who admitted that the retention of street music was desired, probably, by a majority of the population. If we come to counting heads, that gentleman was, no doubt, correct, and the same statement might be made at the present time unhesitatingly. But of far less weight now than in 1864 is the argument with which Hyde Park Gate disposed of the majority, as "one really of comparatively little importance." He continues: "Among those who wish that this great nuisance should be done away with, we count the scientific man, the author, the artist, and others, who labour hard for the public benefit; while that other class, the members of which find pleasure in the performances of the organ-grinder and the ballad-singer, is composed mainly of household servants and others, whose wishes cannot surely be of any importance when weighed against those of such persons as I have mentioned above." This may have been perfectly true, but was a most unfortunate argument, and could only tend, in a very obvious manner, to defeat its own purpose. Besides, it is not quite certain even now that the "better classes" are in the mass opposed to street music. I know of professional men who encourage it near their homes, and would be quick to resent interference with the pleasure which, in some mysterious way, they derive from it. The Examiner, in the course of a vigorous article against the nuisance, admitted that such folk were to be found, but argued them almost out of existence as thus: "There were people who relished the air of the graveyards crammed with putridity, and others whose noses delighted in the peculiar smell of the Thames three or four years ago, and whose only complaint was of the inconvenient appetite created. There are people who admire the marvels of art in Trafalgar Square, and even some who find grandeur and grace in the Guards' monument, with Victory playing at quoits. There is no abomination for which there is not some congenial taste, but because our neighbour likes bad music, are our necessary occupations to be unceasingly interrupted and our ears put to the torture? Our right to quiet is stronger, surely, than his to his strange, foul, and unnatural gratification." The last sentence touches the real point—one much more difficult than the smart journalist seemed to think, the best proof of which is that the problem involved still awaits solution. Were the case otherwise, it would have been settled in 1864 by a memorial addressed to Mr. Bass, and signed by a formidable number of distinguished men; written, moreover, as there appears good reason to think, by no less a person than Charles Dickens. From this remarkable document I take the following:

"Your correspondents are, all, professors and practitioners of one or other of the arts and sciences. In their devotion to their pursuits—tending to the peace and comfort of mankind—they are daily interrupted, harassed, worried, wearied, driven nearly mad, by street musicians. They are even made especial objects of persecution by brazen performers on brazen instruments, beaters of drums, grinders of organs, bangers of banjos, clashers of cymbals, worriers of fiddles, and bellowers of ballads; for no sooner does it become known to those producers of horrible sounds that any of your correspondents have particular need of quiet in their own houses, than the said houses are beleaguered by discordant hosts seeking to be bought off. Your correspondents represent to you that these pecuniary speculations in the misery they endure are far more destructive to their spirits than their pockets; and that some of them, not absolutely tied to London by their avocations, have actually fled into the country for refuge from this unmerited persecution—which is none the less grievous or hard to bear because it is absurd."

This memorial was signed by, amongst others, the following men of light and leading: Charles Dickens, Alfred Tennyson, Thomas Carlyle, Wilkie Collins, John Forster, John E. Millais, Francis Grant, J. R. Herbert, John Leech, Holman Hunt, J. E. Horsley, W. P. Frith, F. Seymour Haden, R. Doyle, Alfred Wigan, Alfred Elmore, Thomas Faed, Thomas Creswick, James Sant, E. M. Barry, Samuel Cousins, L. Stocks, Thomas Woolmer. Before the blast of such high-sounding trumpets, the organ fiend should have been driven into the Red Sea, or some other effective limbo. But he wasn't.

Mr. Bass's book shows how heartily the press joined in the crusade against street music. The Times, the Globe, the Examiner, Punch, and other journals are quoted as breathing threatenings and slaughter against the "Fiend." One paper, the Owl, dropped into poetry, with an imitation of George Canning's sapphics in the Anti-Jacobin. A Friend of Tranquillity thus addresses an Organ-Grinder:

Seedy Savoyard, wherefore art thou grinding?
Rough blows the wind; thy pipes are out of order,
Old is thy tune, thy monkey is a nuisance,
So is thy organ.

Tiresome grinder, heed'st thou not the sick ones
Who on their couches restlessly reclining,
Tortured all day, must hear thy hurdy-gurdy's
Merciless strumming?

Tell me, Savoyard, how you come to grind so;
Did some foul fiend tyrannically use you?
Why don't the beaks or beadle of the parish
Thrust you in prison?

Why can't some Babbage, for racking of his nerves, or Beer-making Bass, for his ears distracting,
Or hard-work'd lawyer straightaway pitch your little
All in a horse-pond?

Have you not read the speech of Mr. M. Bass?
Cheers of approval ringing through the Commons—
You and your chattering monkey must return to Valleys of Savoy.

To this the Organ-Grinder answers:

Savoy, Lord bless you, why should I return there?
Only last night, while grinding on my organ,
This poor old chap and monkey got eleven
Bob in an hour.

Hall-porters came up for to beg me not to Make such a row, or they'd give me into charge; I Laughed them to scorn, and asked them how they liked "The Ratcatcher's Daughter."

Babbage may rave and bluster, if he likes it,
Bass may make beer or speeches as he pleases,
I, for my part, will not budge unless you give me
Sixpence to move on.

Then the Friend of Tranquillity, irate:

I give thee sixpence! I'll see thee — first!
Wretch, whom no sense of nerve can move to pity,
Dirty, unshaven, pilfering, degraded,
Impudent outcast.

By way of finale, the Friend of Tranquillity kicks the Organ-Grinder, upsets his organ, lets loose his monkey, and exit in a transport of rage.

What came of all this agitation thirty years ago? Practically nothing. Street music is with us in more aggravated forms; the organ fiend grins more diabolically than ever before our windows, and the Leechs and Babbages of the present generation suffer equally with their forbears, being quite as helpless; which goes to suggest that there is much to be said on the other side. NEW LIGHTS UPON OLD TUNES.

NO. III.

THE EVOLUTION OF A TUNE: "THE LOW-BACKED CAR."

THE doctrine of evolution is as certainly a truth in our popular airs as in greater and more important matters. The "survival of the fittest" does not, however, necessarily follow; though in some cases this also holds good. As I write, an air heard some ten minutes ago, whistled by a boy and familiar on piano-organs, runs through my head, and furnishes a ready instance. Some 220 years ago the same musical theme was the rage of the town, as "In January last, on Mononday at morn," "Tom D'Urfey's latest—the new Scotch play-house tune." Even then it is quite probable that it was really no new thing. A hundred years later the tune became altered, and enjoyed more than a century's popularity as "Calder Fair," it had also more songs adapted to it than can be easily enumerated. To-day the air forms the chorus of a music hall ditty, and is sung and whistled by a generation totally oblivious of the fact that it has already amused their fathers, grandfathers, and ancestors up to a remote period. Many airs might thus be traced backward to an early source; for, in spite of other musical qualities, nothing is so dear to the ear as melody, and a few phrases of a taking air are never lost—they recur, either accidentally or purposely, over and over again during a long stretch of musical history. Tunes which are much sung traditionally change greatly in character—in some cases so much so as to almost lose identity. Each singer puts something of himself into the air, and so diverse renderings spring up. Of the evolution of tunes no one knows more than the seeker after traditional folk-songs.

The present article is to trace the progress of an air which in various forms has been much of a favourite.

About 1775 the English people first began to hear of George Washington, and a certain section of them were much surprised and horrified to learn that the Americans, with him at their head, had thrown off dutiful allegiance to George III. and were determined on a Government of their own. Upon this, a song in ridicule of the American army, and on what were deemed the "brags" or idle boasts of its leader, appears to have sprung up in England. Here, I must confess, I am at fault, for in spite of much search in contemporary collections of songs and in other likely places, I have been unable to unearth it. Possibly it never reached a more exalted station than on a broadside. The air survives, for I find two copies of it in a couple of musical manuscript books in my possession, one bearing the date 1791. The air, with its title, is as follows:—

"THE BRAGS OF WASHINGTON."

(From a MS. copy.)

It is more than likely that the air, as it here stands, is much earlier than Washington's time, for song writers then were very prone to write to airs which were already well known. Before the conclusion of the American war, we, in addition to our other bellicose engagements, had entered into a war with Spain, and Lord Rodney took a high naval command.

In January, 1780, his victory off Cape St. Vincent caused his name to ring through the land. The song about Washington's idle boasts (especially seeing what he had already done) soon fell into disuse, and the tune was used for a ditty in praise of Lord Rodney; this was called "To Rodney we will go." Scarcely any change was made in the air, and a copy published in Aird's third "Selection of Scotch, English, Irish, and Foreign Airs" (Glasgow, 1788), is virtually as the manuscript copy given above. The song bearing the refrain, "To Rodney we will go," along with the lively air held popular favour until Wellington's victories in the Peninsula caused him to supersede Rodney as the popular hero, and at the time of the battle of Waterloo a new song to the old air came to the front. This is the first verse out of many on a ballad sheet:—

'Twas on the eighteenth day of June
Napoleon did advance
The choicest troops that he could raise
Within the bounds of France.
Their glittering eagles shone around
And proudly looked the foe,
But the British Lion tore their wings
On the Plains of Waterloo.

CHORUS.

With Wellington we'll go, we'll go,
With Wellington we'll go;
For Wellington commanded
On the Plains of Waterloo.

While Waterloo was still fresh in people's memory an ill-advised action upon the part of the Manchester magistrates against Henry Hunt's reform demonstration in St. Peter's Fields caused the memorable "Peterloo." This was in 1819, and immediately a ballad upon the event was much sung, still to the same old tune:—

With Henry Hunt we'll go, we'll go,
With Henry Hunt we'll go;
We'll raise the cap of liberty,
In Spite of Nadin Joe.*

From this time forward the air became the vehicle for lyrics in praise of popular candidates at election time, and as lately as 1852 was so employed on behalf of Sir George Goodman (Member for Leeds). At this time, too, street singers used the tune for a comical song descriptive of the troubles of a wife who has to provide for a household on five-and-twenty shillings a week, giving a categorical list of the money spent on each article:

She reckoned up and showed him,
And the answer gave complete,
How five-and-twenty shillings
Were expended in a week.

* Joseph Nadin was the Manchester constable who held the warrant for the apprehension of Henry Hunt; it was the attempt to execute this which led to the unhappy consequences. The yeomanry cavalry, without warning, dashed among the crowd, sword in hand, causing many deaths and injuries innumerable; even artillery was brought upon the scene. Waterloo being so fresh in people's memory, the event was spoken of as the "Battle of Peterloo." A somewhat similar dispersal of a Chartist's meeting in Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1839, was called "Spitaloo"; and a song upon the same lines as the Waterloo and "Peterloo" songs was much sung. It was set to the air we are at present dealing with.

In addition to this and the political ballads spoken of, it has been used throughout English country districts, from Yorkshire to Devonshire, for a folk-song called "The Nut Girl"; or, "A-nutting we will go," and this brings us to the Irish versions of the air. Edward Bunting, in his third collection of Irish music (1840), publishes a version in 6-8 time, put to a verse of "The Jolly Ploughman," which is really an Irish copy of "The Nut Girl."

Bunting states that he noted the air in 1792 from J. Duncan (a harper), and that it is "very ancient," from which latter opinion I, with some diffidence, venture to differ:—

"THE JOLLY PLOUGHMAN."

(From Bunting's Irish airs, 1840.)

'Twas Jack the jol-ly plough-boy was ploughing in his land, Cried, yough, unto his hor-ses and boldly bid them stand;

Then Jack sat down up-on his plough and thus be-gan to sing, And Jack he sung his song so sweet, he made the vallies ring... With his too-ran-nan-nan-ty na, . . sing too-ran-nan-nan-ty na, . . . sing tooran-nan, tooran-nan, too-ran-nan, too-ran-nan, too-ran-nan-nan-ty na. . .

Beside the one adapted to "The Jolly Ploughman," a very beautiful setting of the air (and possibly an older version) was known in Ireland at the beginning of the present century as "Moll Roone." Thomas Moore, so far as I have ascertained, first published it in December, 1813, in his fifth number of the "Irish Melodies," with the words, "Farewell; but whenever you welcome the hour."

'MOLL ROONE."

(From Moore's "Irish Melodies," 1813.)

George Thomson, in 1816, gives a copy in his Irish Collection, Vol. II., as do R. A. Smith in the "Irish Minstrel," circa 1825, and J. Monro in the "Gleaner" of the same date.

Some time in the "forties," Samuel Lover was writing his excellent songs and delighting appreciative audiences by his own rendering of them. One of the number was "The Low-backed Car," still a favourite. Lover was well acquainted with his country's folk-songs and melodies, and having much natural love for, as well as some technical skill in music, he very happily adapted as well as actually composed airs for his songs. The melody of "The Low-backed Car" is generally, if not always, printed as being of Lover's own composition; but I think an attentive examination of the airs to which I have drawn attention will show that Lover did no more than arrange his air from one of these, most likely the "Jolly Ploughman," with which he no doubt had been acquainted from his youth.

THE STORY OF A SONG.

MR. DU MAURIER'S "Trilby," as any attentive student of the American papers will readily bear witness, has exerted a more potent and startling influence on the great American people than any other work written in this century. It has given rise to a veritable cult, has inspired artists, composers, and playwrights, and has temporarily submerged quite a large section of sane average humanity beneath a cataclysm of balderdash. The eccentricities and absurdities of Trilbymania, as it is called, would already fill volumes upon volumes. But even in America, where copies of the book are sold by the ton, persons are to be found who have refused to bow at the shrine of Mr. du Maurier's redoubtable heroine. And amongst these is to be reckoned Dr. Thomas Dunn English, the composer and author of "Ben Bolt," which, as readers of the novel will not fail to remember, plays so important a part in the amazing performances of La Svengali. The grounds of his grievance are complex, but are sufficiently set forth in the extremely interesting history of "Ben Bolt," which Dr. English has contributed to the New York Herald. A book has recently been published entitled "Books fatal to their authors," and if ever a companion volume was compiled on fatal songs, "Ben Bolt" would figure prominently in the list. While it was popular, Dr. English tells us, there were two vessels called the "Ben Bolt" and a racehorse was similarly named in England. But one of the vessels was wrecked, the other was blown up, while the horse was shamefully beaten in every race for which he was entered. Then there was a trotting horse also called the "Ben Bolt," but he, likewise, had little luck. As for Dr. English himself, we cannot do better than quote his own humorously pathetic words: "I never received a cent for the verses, and I shall attribute my going to an early grave—I am only in my seventy-sixth year—solely to the vexations which the revival of the verses has added to my share of the woes of life. In process of time, like all the musical favourites, the song died out. I had hoped that was the last of it, and that it would no longer overshadow, by its false glare, the better poems of my later life." But he has been doomed to bitter disappointment. In the first place, his election to the fifty-second Congress revived the song through the political prominence of the author. But then Mr. du Maurier came and went one better—or worse—for by making "Ben Bolt" a sort of key-note of his novel, he has created a sort of "Ben Bolt" craze throughout the States which has led to the most vexatious consequences. "I am daily," writes Dr. English, "in receipt of requests for autograph copies of the song, and one young lady has gone so far as to request a lock of my hair. And then I frequently receive letters asking why I wrote the song, and when and where, who Alice was, and whether the incidents are imaginary or real."

The history of "Ben Bolt," as given by Dr. English, is briefly as follows. In the summer of 1843 he was asked by the editor of the New York Mirror for a sea song, and accordingly set to work. But he soon gave it up in disgust, and tried his hand at a sentimental ballad, based on reminiscences of his own boyhood. After four stanzas and a half of the present version had been written, the inspiration gave out, so he tacked on the first four lines of the discarded sea song, and sent it off to the editor, who published it over the initials "T. D. E." How extensively the verses have been doctored in subsequent unauthorized versions may be gathered from a perusal of the first two stanzas in the original form:—

Don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt—
Sweet Alice whose hair was so brown—
Who wept with delight when you gave her a smile,
And trembled with fear at your frown?
In the old churchyard in the valley, Ben Bolt,
In a corner obscure and alone,
They have fitted a slab of the granite so grey
And Alice lies under the stone.

Under the hickory tree, Ben Bolt,
Which stood at the foot of the hill,
Together we've lain in the noonday shade,
And listened to Appleton's mill.
The mill wheel has fallen to pieces, Ben Bolt,
The rafters have tumbled in,
And a quiet which crawls round the walls as you gaze
Has followed the olden din.

The first stanza has not suffered much in the way of alterations, but the second has been completely transmogrified. The "hickory tree" was eliminated, with the result that the words, to the author's great indignation, have been claimed as the work of an Englishman, instead of a man named English. But the funniest alteration is in the fourth stanza, where the original spoke of "the shaded nook in the running brook, Where the children learned to swim." These lines were entirely altered by one publisher on the ground that "delicate young ladies would not like to sing about little boys going to swim"! The nautical tag which we have alluded to above runs as follows:

Twelvemonths twenty have passed, Ben Bolt,
Since first we were friends, yet I hail
Thy presence a blessing, thy friendship a truth—
Ben Bolt, of the salt sea gale.

Dr. English was better pleased with his verses when he saw them in print, and soon conceived the idea of wedding them to music. Several of his musical friends whom he consulted declared that it was utterly unfit for the purpose. But a young composer named May, of Washington, thought otherwise, and fitted it with "a very nice air," which, however, was never published. Then Dr. English himself tried his hand in 1844, and composed a tune which he thought expressive enough, but did not publish, in deference to the adverse opinion of the words expressed by his musical friends, until the song had become famous in the now familiar setting. This, it appears, is "an obscure German air," and was fitted to the words of "Ben Bolt" by a certain Nelson Kneass, a young man of good family who had gone into the minstrel business, and was attached to the theatre at Pittsburg. On being told that he should have a part in a melo-drama called "The Battle of Buena Vista" if he could get a new song, he asked a friend named Hunt to supply him with some words. The latter bethought him of "Ben Bolt," the words of which he wrote down in an inaccurate form from memory, and Kneass having adapted them to the German tune, introduced the song with triumphant success. Kneass died some years afterwards at a town in Missouri, where he is described on his tomb as the author of "Ben Bolt"; but according to Dr. English, who knew him, he never claimed in his lifetime to have done more than arrange the music. After this, Hunt, on the strength of having mutilated the words, claimed the authorship, until his pretensions were exposed. Meantime "Ben Bolt" had overrun the English-speaking world, and in 1848 Dr. English published his own musical setting, which is now reproduced in the columns of the New York Herald. Other settings have been made by Sinclair, Webster, and Getze, and Dr. English notes the curious fact that a well-known German violinist, when visiting America, composed and published a potpourri of American airs, including Kneass's adaptation, being apparently ignorant that he was thus assigning an American birthplace to a German melody. In conclusion, we may echo Dr. English's surprise that so accomplished a writer as Mr. du Maurier should have fallen into the error that "Ben Bolt" was of British origin. "Not only," he writes, "is 'Ben Bolt' published correctly in Griswold's 'Poets and Poetry of America,' and in divers other American collections, but it has been printed in England again and again, and is to be found, I know, with my name attached, in Beaton's great book of English poetry. . . ." The test which proves the American origin is to be found in the stanza, which is generally omitted in singing, beginning "Do you mind of the cabin of logs, Ben Bolt?" The intrinsic value of the words of "Ben Bolt" is slight. Dr. English, as we have seen, labours under no illusion on that score, nor can the melody (except, possibly, when sung by a hypnotized heroine) be considered divine. But in view of its actual and literary celebrity, Dr. English has been well advised in telling the whole story of its genesis and career, a story which only affords fresh proof of the remarkable difficulty that has always attached to the task of identifying the author of a popular ballad.

THE fifty admirable Concerts given during the last two decades by the Bach Choir have contributed so largely to bring about the present popularity of the great musician whose name the Society has adopted, that by the action of a well-known habit, which operates in such cases, we seem in danger of crediting the excellent Association in question with a greater share of the good work than is warranted by historical facts. The B minor Mass and a number of other choral works having been first introduced here by the Bach Choir, many persons appear to think that the list includes the "Matthew" Passion. This involves an injustice to those who first made that incomparable work known in England, and did so, moreover, at a time when its production must have involved considerable pecuniary risk; for, in spite of Samuel Wesley's efforts during the early part of the century, Bach remained in England more or less "caviare to the general," until about twenty-five years ago. So little indeed were the vocal works appreciated, that only three performances of the "Passion" were given between 1854 (the year of its first performance in England, by the now disbanded Bach Society, under Sterndale Bennett) and 1870, when the work was again revived at one of the "Oratorio Concerts" given by Messrs. Novello, under Mr. (now Sir Joseph) Barnby's direction, at St. James's Hall. Its publication in a cheap form shortly afterwards by that firm brought the work into larger circulation; and when, on Maunday Thursday, 1871, it was played in Westminster Abbey (again under Sir Joseph's direction), its effect on the multitude then present was so great that the event was quickly followed by performances of the work in other cathedrals and churches. The "Passion" was repeated many times at the Oratorio Concerts at St. James's Hall, Exeter Hall, and the Royal Albert Hall between 1870 and 1875; a special series of Passion week performances having been given in 1873 and 1874 at the Albert Hall, when the work was performed no less than four times consecutively in the former year (in addition to two ordinary performances) and three times in the latter year; at this period it was also performed at nearly every provincial Festival, and it is a notable fact that Mr. Edward Lloyd achieved his first great success in this work at the Gloucester Festival of 1871. In 1875 Mr. A. D. Coleridge got together a body of amateurs for the purpose of studying the B minor Mass, which was given for the first time in England, under Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, at St. James's Hall, on April 26 of the following year, and achieved such success that the temporary Association was converted into a permanent Society for the performance of choral works of the highest class under the title of "The Bach Choir."

UNDER the heading of "Grand Opera," Madame Melba contributes an article to the April number of Lippincott's Magazine, which is full of, or, perhaps, we should rather say replete with, luminous observations on the genesis and evolution of that form of musical art. For example, we read at the outset, "You can throw your tones to a much greater distance if they are pitched on a musical key. Even babies are taught this by nature. Their screams are strictly within the lines of musical notation." Here again is a saying of the utmost sagacity: "It is one thing to write an opera and quite another thing to have it staged," while Madame Melba's last words on Wagner are summed up in the phrase, "While the Music of the Future is entitled to respect, it is enough for us to occupy ourselves with the Music of the Present." But it is when dealing with the commercial aspect of the opera that Madame Melba is most worthy of attention. She draws a vivid picture of the laborious training which singers must go through before audiences will listen to them, or managers pay them handsome salaries. "There must be often a Spartan regimen, great forfeitures of social pleasures, daily and increasing study and practice—no matter at what cost of wearisome and often irksome labour." A singer may lose his or her voice in an hour. Ergo, "he or she must make hay while the sun shines. There is then nothing improper or ungraceful in the plan that the singer should sell his or her voice at the topmost price it will bring in the market. One thing is certain—no manager is going to pay more than it is worth. The measure of value is fixed by the box-offices, and these are the only standards that managers can be, and as a matter of fact are, guided by. This does not prove that art is mercenary. The labourer is everywhere worthy of his hire. Rare genius, accompanied with laborious effort, always commands and deserves large rewards; and those rewards must be in money, because money represents labour and one equivalent naturally demands another." Virtue may be its own reward, but not virtuosity.

PROFESSOR RAYMOND, of Princeton College, has published a book on Rhythm and Harmony in Poetry and Music, in which he devotes especial attention to Music as a representative Art. Under the latter head he describes a curious experiment made by Mr. Gilman, of Cambridge, Mass., in order to test by experiment "the power of music to awaken definite ideas and emotions in the listener." To this end he invited about thirty persons of both sexes to his house. Pieces were played on the pianoforte and violin and the impressions were duly recorded by the listeners. One of the works chosen was Beethoven's Prelude in F minor (No. 195 in Series 18, "Kleinere Stücke für das Pianoforte," Breitkopf and Härtel), and here are a few of the answers: "The swaying of the treetops in a moderate wind; weird songs are sung beneath the trees." "A country church appeared to me; the music formed the chimes: as it died away a funeral train seemed passing." "A hymn of thankfulness." "A workman making something by strokes, as a smith. There is also a feeling that he is in a lazy mood, as if the afternoon sun was streaming in. The work is pleasant." "A life toiling on through disappointment and struggle." "Church music; offertoire; also organ playing while waiting for a wedding party," &c. "A ship approaching end of voyage." It is only fair to add that Mr. Gilman states that the audience consisted entirely of amateurs, some of whom had no marked endowment of musical ear or memory. And yet Professor Raymond speaks of the "scientific method" of the experiment. That music does call up mental pictures no one will contest; but it is a notorious fact that the thoughts evoked in the minds of many of those who enjoy and appreciate it most are, in the literal sense of the word, ineffable—i.e., they cannot be reduced to words. As Mr. Hadow puts it in one of his essays, "music is suggestive, but not articulate."

A LEEDS correspondent, who describes himself as a "player of the sweetest of all wind instruments—the clarinet," wishes, through our columns, to raise a protest on behalf of wood-wind instruments which, he says, are unduly neglected at Chamber Concerts in nearly all the principal cities of the United Kingdom. He complains, firstly, that the music written for these instruments is too seldom afforded a hearing, and secondly, that, compared with the music written for strings, pianoforte, &c., every year, not half enough is composed for oboe, clarinet, flute, or bassoon. The complaint is not a new one, but no one who knows the facts of the case will deny that, in spite of recent efforts, it is still amply justified. Even in London the admirable performances of chamber music for wind instruments, which were started about five years ago and seemed about to establish themselves on a permanent basis, are no longer given; and at other Concerts the number of pieces played in which a wind instrument figures is very small indeed. It should in justice be said, however, that the fault lies in large measure with the great composers, whose noblest utterances in the region of music for the chamber have rarely been confided to the wind instruments. The septet of Beethoven, the octets of Mendelssohn and Schubert, the Clarinet Quintet of Mozart, and one or two others are exceptions, the enormous popularity of which proves that no prejudice exists in the public mind against the instruments on behalf of which our correspondent pleads. Excepting these few favoured works, it is impossible to overlook the fact that all the greatest pieces of chamber music extant have been written for pianoforte, or strings, or both.

THE Middlesex Courier throws out an excellent suggestion. Referring to various societies, who, in seasonable weather, have formed parties for a "Rural Ramble," dedicated chiefly to the objects for which such associations have been formed—botany, history, entomology, and so on—our contemporary says: "Another form of rambling club which we are surprised has not been more adopted is that which could be carried on in connection with choral societies and church choirs. We remember, with pleasure, rambles in rural outskirts by a band of singers, who took out a small selection of pieces suitable for singing in the open air, and who gave an al fresco concert when a convenient spot was reached—sometimes affording a treat to a rustic population, sometimes singing—as birds sing—to themselves and the cows." We cordially invite the attention of "those whom it may concern" to the benefits likely to result from a "Ramble" of the kind described. The promotion of good-fellowship is not the least among these; others, as the Middlesex Courier points out, are "the healthful pleasure, mental and physical, of the walk homewards through the fields in the gloaming of a sweet summer day to the singing of some well-known part-song, so different from the music hall rubbish . . . or other inanities that seem to be the best that a group of people can manage whenever they attempt to sing together in the open air." "With such exercise as this," adds our contemporary, "we believe there would often be far better singing in our churches and on our platforms than is now the case, for lungs would be expanded and invigorated, and singers would be more likely to get into the habit of opening their mouths." Those of our readers who are in the habit of attending the Handel Festivals—and who amongst them are not?—will recall with pleasure the delightful little gatherings of local detachments from the great army of singers who, in leafy nooks of the Palace pleasure grounds, enjoy the relaxation of singing part-songs after the weightier labours of the day.

WE learn from the New York Times that a Michigan doctor has been testing the effect produced by music upon persons in a state of hypnotic trance. The "subject" chosen was also a doctor, aged forty, and not naturally very susceptible to harmonic emotions, and the piece of music with which the experiment was made was none other than the "Walkürenritt," performed by an orchestra. The results are described as follows:—"The subject's pulse became more rapid as soon as the music began, and soon rose to 120 per minute. Meanwhile, the arterial tension was raised to a marked degree. This immediately began to decrease, but the rapidity of the heart's impulses was continued. The rate of respiration advanced from eighteen to thirty per minute, the man's face expressed great agitation, and his body was covered with profuse perspiration. When awakened, the subject said he did not remember the music as something heard, but as a general sensation, a sort of excitation produced by a furious flight through space." It is, we think, sufficiently clear from the foregoing account that the "Walkürenritt" is not a suitable piece for the operations of the Guild of St. Cecilia. But it is quite possible that some of the effect produced may have been as much due to the orchestra as the music. We can imagine, for example, that the performance of the "Walkürenritt" by a Michigan amateur orchestra might cause "great agitation" to appear upon the countenance even of a waking subject.

It is long enough since there has come under our notice a more delightful specimen of "English as She is Spoke" than is to be found in the pages of a work on singing by a certain M. de Geraudé. The author, who is, presumably, his own translator, unless he has obtained the services of a compatriot in turning his book into a sort of glorified pigeon-English, entitles it a "New Method of Singing, principally for the voice of mezzo-soprano," and adds an explanatory note to the effect that "this method is also very much suitable to the young ladies of wohn (sic) the Voice must not be tired by High Intonations." But it is not until we arrive at p. 4 that we find that the English language has capacities hitherto undreamed of by the wildest imagination. Here is a sentence that deserves the immortality that its appearance in THE MUSICAL TIMES must ensure: "In order of obtaining a better sound of Voice it is very much necessary to weary not oneself in childhood with singing songs of which the Intonations should be too much high."

A CORRESPONDENT quotes the following from Elizabeth's Prayer in "Tannhäuser"— and asks "are there not fifths pure and simple between tenor and bass?" Of course there are. He asks us further to "kindly explain" why Wagner wrote the passage in question. Without pretending to any special knowledge on the subject, we unhesitatingly reply: because he thought proper to do so—in other words, he wanted the effect produced by the "pure and simple" fifths which have attracted the attention of our correspondent's eagle eye.

A MOVEMENT IN THREE FLATS.

O MUSIC, which, of all the arts,

Men rightly call divine,

I love thee well in other parts,

Not in these rooms of mine!

Thou art at times a nuisance—that
Is when one occupies a flat.

I love thee when thy notes are played,

Or when thy notes are sung;

Yet wish the man beneath was flayed,

And all his friends were hung;

For, winter, summer, night, and day,

Eternally they sing and play.

I love thee, yet at times I wish

Thy sweetest sounds were dumb,

Or I were deaf as, say, a fish,

When ceaselessly they strum,

Allegro, presto, sad, or slow,

Some "movement" in the flat below.

I love thee in the joyful dance,

The melodies of Strauss,

But folks who caper, jump, and prance,

Should have a private house,

Not, when they're ponderous and fat,

Give all-night dances in a flat.

I love thee greatly—out of doors,

And when I'm out of bed;

But not with footsteps on the floors—

Till daybreak—overhead.

I feel it moderates my love,

That movement in the flat above.

I love thee very much indeed,

But not so much as that;

Henceforward sharp I'll take good heed

To occupy no flat.

Such movements I do not approve,

Next quarter I myself shall move.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

I READILY insert the subjoined genial effusion, which the author has been good enough to forward:—

BALLADE.

(After a performance of Handel's "The Messiah.")

Preachers may startle, or drivel and drone,

Put all "the alien armies" to rout,

Bishops assume "the episcopal tone,"

Priests at all heretics make a sour pout;

Music can scatter a hoard of cold doubt,

Dogma should pasture upon its wide ground;

Logic's dull aid it could airily scout;

Here's a health to the Kings of Sound.

Kings there have been who have well fill'd their throne,
Warriors doughty and state-mongers stout,
Whom all their enemies let well alone,
(Always excepting their liver and gout;)
Bach is far greater—(what critical lout E'er will deny it?)—and Handel renowned,
Makes witting Goupie Fame's lustiest tout;
Here's a health to the Kings of Sound.

Here's to poor Beethoven deaf as a stone;
Here's to dear Schubert, whom Fortune's harsh knout
Never could tame; here's to sweet Mendelssohn;
Now to Schumann hand the red wine about;
Haydn, Carl Weber, Gluck, Spohr, are "not out,"
Up to Time's wicket they go with a bound;
Give Palestrina a toast in this bout;
Here's a health to the Kings of Sound.

L'ENVOI.

Prince! let the mad world your loud praises shout,
Every day as the bright dawn comes round,
I with my toast can your proudest state flout;
Here's a health to the Kings of Sound.

W. E. STEBBING.

A CORRESPONDENT sends the following:—

HUMORESQUE À L'ANTIQUE, No. 2.

TO EMIL SAUER.

All the notes laugh when you play

Chords for sheer lightheartedness;

Masquerade as dancing spray

From your sparkling touch upstossed;

Lightly caught and lightly lost,

All men laugh in sympathy.

All the notes weep when you play

Tears of liquid melody;

Sweet tones very far away,

Dying breaths of harmony.

Soft as the sighs of the sea,

All men sigh in sympathy!

I LEARN, from the Berkshire Chronicle, that Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt, Lecturer in Music at the University Extension College, Reading, brought his winter series to an end on the 1st ult., with a discourse upon Mendelssohn, having special reference to the changes made in the score of "Elijah" after the Birmingham performance of that Oratorio in 1846. Armed with the results of independent research, and aided by the comparison of the two versions which appeared in this journal some fifteen years ago, Mr. Tirbutt went carefully through the work, and with such fulness, as well as clearness, that the audience must have gone away with very satisfactory knowledge of the subject. The Lecture, which excited much interest, was "illustrated" by the performance of various numbers from Mendelssohn's sacred masterpiece.

I CONTINUE to receive copies of advertisements appearing in London and provincial papers, as showing the dire straits to which teachers of music are reduced by ever-increasing numbers and lamentable lack of organisation. Before me lies a series of these, cut from the Western Daily Press. It will certainly be of interest to go through them. No. 1. Miss —, on her own showing (which I do not doubt) holds an Honours Certificate of the London College of Music, Trinity College (London), the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Victoria College of Music. This most successful student offers lessons from 7s. 6d. per quarter. No. 2. The advertiser in this case is content to say that his terms are "moderate." He gives organ lessons, and describes himself as "Certificated I.S.M.," whatever that may mean. No. 3. An "experienced teacher" is prepared to give two pianoforte lessons weekly for 5s. per quarter! No. 4. A "competent teacher" asks 10s. per quarter, but what chance has she against No. 3? No. 5. A lady receives pianoforte pupils at the rate of 6d. per hour. No. 6. Miss — (Cert. Sen. Hons. R.A.M.) is happy to do the same for 10s. 6d. per quarter.

How deplorable is all this! But it results naturally and inevitably from the action of musical colleges and other examining bodies, which, for a consideration, scatter cheap distinctions broadcast, and think, no doubt, that they are promoting the cause of art. They are much more surely degrading and impoverishing the music teacher who knows his business by putting a kind of hall-mark upon the half-educated. Something will soon have to be done in this matter, but, I regret to say, the question What? is one of exceeding difficulty.

THE musical critic of a certain provincial contemporary may be congratulated upon a not wholly unsuccessful aspiration towards distinctiveness of expression. Now-a-days, the great thing is to be striking, no matter how, and this the manner in which my country colleague achieves: "Miss Nicholson's song, 'Like the silver stars,' was imbued with a fit poetic feeling, her clarified voice being carried finely above the resonance of the accompanying violins." "Sorrow and sadness pass with the day," as also did those subtle afflictions on hearing the chorus render this song; Miss Sharpe's accompaniments running feelingly through these praiseworthy efforts." "The sunlight of life hath passed away" was sung very cleverly by Mr. Bateson, but the accompanying music was as a hand upon vibrating strings to his aspirations to perfection, the recitative, 'Like a flower she fades away,' being more adapted to a pleasing and ambitious bass voice. Mr. Smethurst then gave his tuneful answer to the immaterial problem, 'Why do summer roses fade,' after which Misses Hay and Bateson confirmed their hold upon the sympathies of the audience by their descriptive interpretation of fine words and sympathetic music, which consisted their efforts." I do not hesitate to say that my young friend (he is young, of course) bids fair to achieve distinction in the particular line he has chosen.

THE annual musical Competition established at Kendal by Miss Wakefield took place, on the 23rd, 24th, and 25th ult., with Messrs. McNaught, Somervell, and Luard Selby as adjudicators. Mr. Somervell's setting of Wordsworth's "The Power of Sound" was the principal Concert feature. These interesting gatherings should be imitated in other country districts. They give an immense impetus to the study of music.

THE Rev. Dr. Glover made a racy speech, punctuated with loud laughter, at a recent meeting of the Bristol South Nonconformist Choirs Association. I quote without comment as should always be done when comment would spoil effect:—

Sometimes a mere musician had made tunes for them, and no mere musician could make tunes for a hymn. It was beyond him, and he said this although aware that one of their church hymnals had been edited by a leading writer of comic opera music. A mere musician made Christian joy rowdy, and his Christian penitence was wretched. He could not hit it. They had too many musicians' tunes, and too few saints made tunes. There was also the disadvantages of the organ. It concealed silences; it permitted lazy people to go without singing. Sometimes it was as a steam roller crushing the congregation beneath its voice. He went in for simplicity; for good plain tunes, the air of which could be remembered and sung by the people. Complexity was the refuge of the incompetent in all directions, mechanism, tunes, sermons, and anything else. They wanted simple airs and simple harmonies. Most of their churches sang too many tunes. Many congregations to-day used 300 or more, and he made bold to say no congregation from the beginning of the world until that moment ever knew 300 tunes, and never would. But they had the organ, and nobody knew who did not know the tunes. Then there was the selection of tunes. Very few ministers dare do that. There was a general idea that the minister was responsible for the bad tunes, and the organist was to have the credit for the good ones. It was a case of "heads you win, tails I lose," for the minister. It had struck him that a committee of two might select tunes. One member should be a devout musician, who would look after the musical side of the question, the second a devout old woman who enjoyed a hymn, but who did not know much about music. Sometimes the minister might take the place of the old woman. (Loud laughter.)

I trust that when next Dr. Glover discourses on this subject some kind Bristolian will send me a report of his speech. Not that I expect him to better the suggestion that sometimes "the minister might take the place of the old woman."

At a recent organ performance in New York, Mr. S. B. Whitney achieved a tour de force which is described in an American paper as below: "Into a long prelude by Rink he cleverly interjected an improvisation of his own on Sullivan's hymn-tune for 'Onward, Christian soldiers,' so welding the two together that an unsuspecting layman, unfamiliar with the chronology of music, might easily have been misled into a literal acceptance of the programme announcement, and into the belief that the ponderous, the academic, and altogether orthodox Rink had abandoned his traditions to disport himself with Sullivan's rather rollicking processional." I am not sure that this is an example to be followed, for it strikes me as rather unfair. Sullivan would probably object to be welded with Rink, and Rink knew nothing of Sullivan. Besides, it should be the right of every man to choose his own partner. Is the Whitney process the newest form of "new reading"?

THE proprietor of a Western store sells guns and musical instruments. "Strange combination?" remarked a visitor. "It's this way," explained the proprietor, "I sell a man a cornet or banjo or fiddle or something like that, and by the time he has practised a week his neighbour comes in and buys a shot gun or revolver or something like that, and I get a profit goin' and comin'." See?

THE musical critic of an American paper, desiring to put the singing of Mr. Alvary in a favourable light without committing himself, achieved this: "Vocally, it (his Tristan) is eminently acceptable on national lines of art." It is the 'cutest example of non-committal I have ever known.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

THE annual dinner in aid of the funds of the Royal Society of Musicians took place in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hôtel Métropole, on the 22nd ult., the Earl of Derby in the chair. Donations to the amount of about £1,150 were announced by the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Cummings.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE third Concert of the Philharmonic Society, which took place on the 3rd ult., was one of the most enjoyable performances of the past month. The interpretations of Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3) and Brahms's genial and attractive Second Symphony in D were such as only an exceptionally experienced and carefully trained body of instrumentalists could give, and expressed in most enjoyable manner the many beauties of these fine works. Much interest was attached to the first performance of two short orchestral pieces by Sir Alexander Mackenzie—an Allegretto in E and a Vivace in A, entitled "From the North," a heading so perfectly appropriate as to be almost unnecessary. From this it will be gathered that the composer has permitted the spirit of his nationality to speak in no uncertain strains, and the result is music remarkable for vigorous declamation, picturesque suggestiveness, and distinct individuality. The pieces were splendidly played and gave manifest enjoyment to an appreciative audience. Mdlle. Eibenschütz marred what would otherwise have been an excellent rendering of the solo part of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto by want of intellectual control. This clever young pianist should remember that unless emotional impulse be appropriate, it hinders rather than assists expression. The vocalist was Madame Patti, who sang Rossini's "Una voce poco fa," and, for the usual extra piece, Mozart's "Voi che sapete," with great beauty of tone and phrasing. The subsequent scene enacted upon the platform by Mr. Berger and Mr. W. H. Cummings, in presenting the prima donna with the Beethoven Gold Medal of the Philharmonic Society, is to be regretted as pandering to personal sensationalism, which it should be the aim of the committee to discountenance. Such a method of presentation would only be justified in recognition of the life-work of a widely-esteemed and acknowledged composer, and, moreover, it was unkind before such an audience to dwell upon Madame Patti's "distinguished services" to the art of music.

THE BACH FESTIVAL.

AT Queen's Hall, on the evenings of the 2nd, 4th, and 6th ult., the Bach Choir performed the Passion Music according to St. Matthew, a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental works, and the B minor Mass, which was then given for the eleventh time by this Society. Professor Stanford, who directed, may be congratulated on the measure of artistic success achieved, which, when the difficulties of the task are taken into consideration, must be pronounced large. Praise cannot, however, go farther than this, for much that was done came short of the standard that exacting lovers of Bach felt justified in adopting on such an occasion. One fully appreciates the devotion of this choral body, its energy and enthusiasm; but other qualities are needed if the emotional force and full significance of Bach's music are to be made manifest, and though, at times, these qualities were shown, at others they were lacking. With regard to the soloists, the highest praise must be awarded to Mr. Bispham, whose singing in the Passion and in the beautiful cantata "O Ewigkeit du Donnerwort," then given for the first time in England, satisfied the most exigent. This admirable artist has often aroused the enthusiasm of those whose praise is best worth the having, but in this memorable work he placed himself on a still higher plane. Miss Marian McKenzie also rendered noble service, her delivery of the music allotted to Fear in the cantata just-named being worthy of the warmest praise. Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Fillunger, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. W. Shakespeare, Andrew Black, and W. H. Wing also contributed in various degrees to the success attained. Mr. Shakespeare's efforts deserve special recognition, for he sang at very short notice all the music that had been undertaken by Mr. Robert Kaufmann, who was unable to appear on account of a throat trouble. The tenor music in the Passion, to say nothing of that in the other works given, is no light matter, and Mr. Shakespeare's expressive performance, though not, perhaps, in some respects, quite in harmony with the style of Bach, probably saved the Festival from what, at one time, threatened to assume the proportions of a disaster. The miscellaneous programme of the second evening contained, besides the cantata already named, those entitled "Wachet auf" and "Now shall the Grace"; the Concerto in C for three pianofortes and orchestra, capably played by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Fanny Davies, and Mr. Borwick; the bass solo, "Gute Nacht" (Mr. Bispham); the Toccata in F for organ, played by Sir Walter Parratt; and the Violin Concerto in A minor and Sonata in G minor for violin alone, in which Dr. Joachim again asserted his pre-eminence as an interpreter of Bach. Dr. Joachim also played the violin obbligatos throughout the Festival; other obbligatos for various instruments being undertaken by Miss Hélène Dolmetsch, Messrs. W. L. Barrett, E. Ingham, H. G. Lebon, H. Smith, W. H. Malsch, E. Davies, and A. Borsdorf. Mr. H. R. Bird discharged the duties of organist with customary tact, and the orchestra was excellent, the superb performance of the high trumpet parts in the Mass by Mr. Morrow and his colleagues being especially noteworthy. Large audiences attended on each occasion, and at the end of the Festival Dr. Stanford received a well-deserved tribute of enthusiastic applause.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

THE Concert of March 30 was directed by Sir Arthur Sullivan, and as Dr. Joachim made his only appearance at the Palace on this occasion it is not to be wondered at that the attendance was much above the average. Of Dr. Joachim's rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto nothing new can be said. It remains an unrivalled interpretation of the greatest work in its class. Later on Dr. Joachim was joined by his former pupil, Miss Emily Shinner, in an admirable performance of Bach's delightful Double Concerto. The Symphony was Schumann's noble work in D, which was played carefully rather than impressively under Sir Arthur Sullivan's direction, and the orchestral portion of the programme was completed by the conductor's "Macbeth" Overture and that of Mendelssohn to "Melusina." The vocalist was Miss Agnes Janson, who sang with much effect Mr. Henschel's clever ballad "There was an ancient King" and the familiar air from "Samson et Dalila," "Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix." The conscientious announcement, "first time at these Concerts," in connection with the last-named piece reminded one of the notice on one of Artemus Ward's New York programmes: "This entertainment will open with music. The Soldier's Chorus from 'Faust.' First time in this city."

On the 6th ult. Mr. Manns made his welcome re-appearance after his long illness, and was greeted with immense enthusiasm by all present. The most notable feature in the programme, which was devoted to the works of Wagner, was a long excerpt from the "Flying Dutchman," in which Miss Ella Russell and Mr. Andrew Black divided the vocal honours. Excellent renderings were also given of the "Siegfried" Idyll and the closing scene from "Die Walküre."

Mr. Eugen d'Albert (who will be much annoyed when he learns that the Dundee Advertiser has been claiming him as a Scotchman!) appeared at the Crystal Palace in the double capacity of composer and pianist as a boy of eighteen, in April, 1882. Since then he has made Germany his home and achieved a great reputation both as a productive and reproductive artist. The Concerto in E major, introduced by Miss Ethel Sharpe at the Concert of the 13th ult., may hardly justify the encomiums passed on it by some German critics; but it proved well worth a hearing, in virtue alike of its ingenious construction and masterly treatment of the solo instrument and the orchestral accompaniment. The prototype of the condensed form adopted by the composer is traced by Mr. Barry back through Liszt's Symphonic Poems to Schubert's grand Fantasia in C, and in Mr. d'Albert's hands it is certainly a most effective vehicle for the exposition of musical thoughts which, though lacking in marked individuality, are often pleasing and nearly always interesting. The solo was admirably played by Miss Sharpe, who confirmed the favourable impression created by her chief effort in minor solos by Brahms and Chopin. Mr. Manns secured very fine renderings of Weber's "Oberon" Overture, Sterndale Bennett's graceful rather than grand Symphony in G minor, and Liszt's Symphonic Poem, "Fest-Klänge." Madame Clara Samuelli introduced a new and most effective setting, by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, of Charles Kingsley's words, "I cannot tell what you say, green leaves," which she sang with much refinement of style and expression. Her rendering of Elizabeth's Prayer from "Tannhäuser," on the other hand, was tame and unconvincing.

The rival attractions of the sunshine and the great football match at the Crystal Palace doubtless accounted for the small attendance at the twentieth and last Concert of the series, on the 20th ult. Mr. W. H. Squire made a brilliant début in Saint-Saëns's Violoncello Concerto in A (No. 1), excelling alike in the cantabile and bravura styles; and was greatly applauded later on in the afternoon for his fine playing in Popper's Hungarian Rhapsody. The orchestra, under Mr. Manns's inspiring direction, distinguished itself greatly in Schubert's immortal C major Symphony and Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture. Madame Belle Cole was the vocalist, contributing "My heart is weary," from "Nadeshda," and "O Fatima" ("Abu Hassan"), to the satisfaction of the audience.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE end of the thirty-seventh season of these entertainments can now be recorded, and remarks concerning the concluding performances need not be lengthy. On Saturday, March 23, the programme commenced with Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 99) and concluded with Haydn's Quartet in D minor (Op. 76). Mr. Emil Sauer was the pianist, and gave a very characteristic rendering of Beethoven's wonderfully spirited Sonata in C (Op. 2, No. 3), and for an encore, which he was quite unable to resist, Raff's familiar Rigaudon. Dr. Joachim played his own Notturmo in A, and Miss Mabel Berrey, a pleasant, light soprano, was the vocalist.

On the following Monday, Mr. Sauer was once more the pianist, his rendering of Schubert's Fantasia in C (Op. 15), a work which the composer was wont to declare that he could not play himself, being exceptionally brilliant; Chopin's Nocturne in F sharp was also delightfully played as an encore piece. The concerted works were Beethoven's early Quartet in G (Op. 18, No. 2), and the revised and greatly improved edition of Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in B (Op. 8). A successful début was made by a vocalist who, though English by birth, for some singular reason elects to style herself "Mlle. Sylvia Rita." She warbled French airs by Massenet and Guy d'Hardelot very sweetly.

On Saturday, March 30, there was a novelty as regards these Concerts—namely, a Pianoforte Quintet in E minor, by Christian Sinding, a Norwegian composer, born in 1856. He studied at Leipzig, Munich, and Berlin, and he seems to have devoted himself chiefly to instrumental music. This Quintet is an interesting work though not wholly original, the Andante in C showing the influence of Brahms and the Finale that of the composer's countryman, Grieg. But the themes are throughout striking and their treatment that of an excellent musician. The work was of course splendidly played by such artists as Messrs. Sauer, Arbos, Ries, Gibson, and Hugo Becker. The pianist gave a brilliant but cold reading of Chopin's Ballade in G minor (Op. 23), and the Concert concluded with Beethoven's magnificent Quintet in C (Op. 29). Madame Sapio was moderately successful in songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Berlioz.

The penultimate Monday Concert, on the 1st ult., may be dismissed with brevity. The concerted works were such familiar favourites as Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2) and Mendelssohn's Quintet in B flat (Op. 87), which opened the first Monday Popular Concert in February, 1859. Mr. Isidor Cohn played with much delicacy, though with only a moderate degree of expression, six of Chopin's Preludes, and Dr. Joachim gave his favourite Tartini Sonata, "Il Trillo del Diavolo"; Miss Fillunger sang with perfect taste Lieder by Schubert and Mendelssohn.

A Beethoven programme was offered at the last Saturday Concert, on the 6th ult., and remarkably fine performances were secured of the Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 5, No. 2), the executants being Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Hugo Becker; the tuneful Serenade Trio for strings in D (Op. 8), the Quartet in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2), and the two Romances for violin in G (Op. 40) and F (Op. 50), played, of course, by Dr. Joachim; Miss Sylvia Rita was again the vocalist.

The season came to a close on the following Monday with the customary extended programme. The concerted pieces were Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 47), Brahms's Sextet in B flat (Op. 18), Mendelssohn's Tema con variazioni in D for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 17), and Saint-Saëns's remarkably clever Variations for two pianofortes on a theme from Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3). Dr. Joachim played three of Brahms's Hungarian Dances for violin, and yielded two more in response to a double encore. Among the other artists were Miss Fanny Davies, Miss Ilona Eibenschütz, Madame Sapio, and Messrs. Leonard Borwick and David Bispham. With such an imposing array of talent it was not surprising that there was a very large audience and abundant enthusiasm. In this triumphant fashion did the thirty-seventh season of the Popular Concerts come to an end.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE annual and terminal Examinations at the Royal College of Music were concluded on March 28. The council exhibitions and other prizes were awarded as follows: Council Exhibitions—Annie J. Pitman (pianoforte), £5; Cecil H. Wybergh (organ), £10; Rosina Cerasol (pianoforte), £20; Clementina M. Pierpoint (singing), £20. The Charlotte Holmes Exhibition—Katherine M. Everett (pianoforte), £5; Helen C. Ferguson (violin), £10. The Council prize of three guineas for the best extemporizing on the organ to Ernest Dale (scholar), and the Lesley Alexander prize of £10 for composition to Samuel C. Taylor.

The Tenth Examination for Certificate of Proficiency, bearing with it the title of Associate of the Royal College of Music (A.R.C.M.), was concluded on the 5th ult. 138 candidates were examined, and the following were declared by the Examiners to have obtained the certificates:—Theory: Edith D. Elles, John A. Langdon, and John Mactaggart. Pianoforte (solo performance): Beryl O. Blyth, Maud Branwell, Mary Carpenter, Isabel M. Garside, Nina H. Gould, Gwendolyn Toms, and Ada L. Walter. Pianoforte (teaching): Arthur T. Akeroyd, Evelyn I. Baker, Theresa N. Barrett, Lilian A. S. Bindon, Lilian Ernestine Blight, Mary B. Bolam, Ethel E. Cave, Alice F. Cooke, Maggie C. Ellis, Helen C. Ferguson, Phemie Ferguson, Marion B. Flavell, Frieda F. Frames, Florence Gabriel, Clara L. Gott, Isabella M. Graham, Julia B. Greenham, Annie G. Hastings, Thomas S. Hayward, Lilian Hay, Maud B. Henry, Thomas J. Hoggett, Walter Irwin, Edith S. James, May S. Jeffery, Ethel H. Knapp, Gertrude A. Lloyd-Jones, Alexander Low, Mrs. Eleanor K. Marlow, Fanny I. M. Maud, Agnes McCowan, Grace McCowan, Bertha M. Mertens, Jessie V. Mitchell, Harriette J. Nightingale, Winifred E. Pearl, Margaret A. Read, Charlotte H. I. Reynolds, Constance Riseley, Sarah E. Russell, Emma Smith, Frank E. Swan, Edith E. Thorp, Norah M. Watt, and Alice M. J. Williamson. Singing (solo performance): John E. Burgum, Florence Chapman, Herbert Hilton, Emma F. Oxburgh, and Florence M. Power. Singing (teaching): Laura Davis, Florence M. Power, and Mary Rowe. Organ: William D. Boseley, Ernest Dale, John H. Loud, and Herbert C. Morris. Violin: Helen C. Ferguson, Kathleen A. Thomas, and Ettie Wraith. Violoncello: Lillian Littlehales and Emma Smith. Clarinet: George W. Anderson. It will be noticed that the students entering for the study of the pianoforte largely exceed those for any other branch of study.

The competition for Messrs. Challen and Son's gold medal, triennially presented to the Royal College of Music for pianoforte playing, took place on March 28, and the competitors were so far equal in merit that the examiners were unable to come to a decision until two further competitions, on the following two days, had taken place, when the medal was ultimately awarded to Miss Maud Branwell, who comes from Penzance. It is but right to say that Miss Gwendolen Toms, the other competitor in the final examination, has come out first in other competitions.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE final competition for the Mendelssohn Scholarship took place at the Royal Academy of Music on Tuesday, the 9th ult., when, of the four candidates remaining, Christopher Wilson, a student at the Royal Academy of Music, was selected by the committee. Mr. Wilson was born at Melbourne, Derbyshire, in October, 1874, and at a very early age developed a marked talent for music, both as a composer and as a performer on the pianoforte, organ, violin, and viola. In 1889 he gained the first Choral Scholarship at Derby School, and acted as honorary organist there until 1892, when he left to become a student at the Royal Academy of Music. His career at that Institution has been extremely successful. In his first year he was awarded bronze medals for harmony, sight-singing, and pianoforte; in his second year, silver medals for the same studies; and in 1894 he was bracketed equal with Miss Sybil Palliser for the Agnes Zimmermann prize. This year he was highly commended for the Messrs. Robert Cocks and Co.'s prize for pianoforte playing, and the Charles Mortimer prize for composition.

The Charles Mortimer prize (for composition) was competed for on the 6th ult. The prize was awarded to Sybil Palliser, and the examiners commended Hubert G. Oke and Christopher Wilson.

ROYAL ACADEMY LECTURES.

MR. FRANCIS KORBAY, at his third Lecture at the Royal Academy of Music, concluded his comments on the works of Liszt by reference to the songs of this composer. These songs, the lecturer said, embraced all epic and lyrical moods. Liszt stretched and raised the form of the Lied to meet the situation, and his simplest lyrics were invested with an earnestness and poetical atmosphere which fascinated intellectual perception and dominated sentiment. No less remarkable was the versatility which these songs displayed. The settings of Petrarca's sonnets suggested antiquity as much as his "Angiolin" seemed to be modern Italian. His French songs were instinct with the proverbial grace and elegance peculiar to this nation; while his German songs, although for the most part different in character and structure from the traditional Lied form, conserved that national mood which gave it a specific type. The Italian canzonetta or gondoliera, no matter how beautiful and impassioned it might be, rarely survived the charm of its own sound. It stirred and aroused while it was heard and the after-effect might occupy the senses for a while, but it rarely created a lasting mood engaging alike intellect and imagination. The French Romance or Chanson excelled in grace, elegance, and refinement, but it appealed mostly through its esprit, which, like witty and brilliant conversation, was entertaining and exhilarating at the time, but did not foster deep and great emotions and make lasting impressions. Charm was its realm. The German Lied was an entirely different product. It was an immediate and intimate lyrical exponent of the many moods which dominated human life. Its champions were Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Brahms, and Liszt. Loewe was the first to develop the Ballad into a form of art, and Liszt showed himself a master of this form in his "King of Thule." The lecturer analysed and sang several examples of Liszt's songs, which he said he had chosen as illustrative of one of Liszt's maxims: "The beautiful is the glory of truth, and art the irradiation of thought."

On the 3rd ult. Mr. Korbay discoursed upon Hungarian folk-song, a subject upon which his nationality and abilities peculiarly fitted him to speak, and which he invested with great interest. The characteristics of every national music was shown to be chiefly the result of the language. Its accents produced the musical rhythm and its poetry the melody, harmony, and form. The national songs of the Gothic, Latin, and Slav races belonging to the great Aryan family resembled or differed from each other in proportion as did their respective tongues; with the exception of where such heterogeneous influences as the Moors left in Spain, the Celtic in Ireland, Scotland, and Brittany; the Finnish in Norway and Sweden; and the Eastern in Poland, Russia, and South-Eastern Europe. There were comparatively few folk-songs of the Indo-Germanic races, the indisputable nationality of which would at once musically reveal itself without the aid of their underlying text; but unmistakable signs of national originality appeared as soon as the languages approached the East. Word and rhythm being older than song, it was necessary to analyse rhythm to trace the race characteristics of typical nationality in music. Rhythmically, French was the most elastic language. Its slight accents, easily handled, and shifted to the end syllable of a word or phrase, admitted of any amount of freedom in prosodical treatment. The German language was rhythmically the very reverse of the French. In the former the Iambus (v —) predominates, in the latter the Trochee (— v). Hence the chanson and chansonette of the French, and the Ländler and more modern waltz of the Germans. The Italian predilection for melodious sweetness in preference to dramatic truth and canonic art was equally due to their language. The Hungarian language, which belonged to the Turanian family, had nothing in common with the Indo-Germanic or Aryan languages. Metrically it was almost as rich as the classical Hellenic, and therefore lent itself with ease to all metrical combinations. Its prevailing metrical forms were, however, the Choriambic (— v v —) and Amphibrach (v — v). A distinguishing feature of the folk-songs of most nations was rhythmical sameness, but the originality of those of Hungarian origin was shown by great variety of rhythm. Every first syllable, whether short or long, had an emphasis of its own. Thus no Hungarian song could begin with an up-beat. But in certain cases every long syllable could become short, or vice versa. Every round had two distinct sounds and lengths, and their correct emphasis, length, and pronunciation determined the meaning of a word, and sometimes of a whole sentence. Accents, intonation, and even rests, scarcely noticeable to a foreign ear, were just as essential in the words as in phrasing. The language, in short, was the mirror in which could be seen the physiological causes of the rhythmical heart-beats of the song. In addition to the ancient church modes and regular diatonic major and minor scales, there was the so-called Hungarian scale, consisting of a minor third, a raised fourth, a flat sixth, and the leading seventh—a scale which, carrying in itself the chord of the augmented sixth, gave Hungarian song a unique harmonic wealth. The Hungarians came to Europe from Asia in the ninth century, an army of warriors whose historical record lived only in songs which were sung by special minstrels at all festivities. The last known minstrel of this kind was one named Tinody, who lived in the sixteenth century. The custom still remained, however, and no festive dinner in Hungary was imaginable without the people's court musicians, the gipsies, playing for them their favourite airs. The cultured classes might also delight in other music, but the peasant would only listen to the strains he knew and which appealed to his heart. The Hungarian national motto was, "Weepingly rejoices the Magyar," and unless his emotions were stirred, music had no meaning for him. For that reason he preferred pathetic airs, but they must be followed by spirited, fiery movements, that would dry up the tears. The average popular forms of the folk-music could be classified into three categories—the song proper, dance music, and what was termed the "Hallgató"—a piece to listen to. The latter was a combination of song and dance, rhapsodically constructed, and too rubato to dance to. It formed the model of Liszt's Rhapsodies. These "Hallgatók" usually contained a number of airs, without any special plan as far as musical construction was concerned, excepting that they had to begin with a slow pathetic movement, which gradually gave place to several independent melodies of more cheerful character, the tempo growing faster and faster until a brilliant Finale was reached. Hungarian bands playing by heart and knowing hundreds of their national melodies usually improvised the succession of these tunes, dwelling with special emphasis upon such which seemed to have particularly pleased some favoured listener. Each of these airs being a well known folk-song, having its own special moods and sentiments, the "Hallgato" became a species of programme music, not, however, meant to illustrate the performer's but the listener's mood. It was quite a psychological study to watch the leader of the band, how he watched the effect produced upon the listeners by every successive song, until he had hit upon the right tune. When he had found it he became inspired and played with the verve and depth of feeling of a poet, throwing himself heart and soul into the music until the crisis arrived and his listeners' eyes were filled with tears. In no other country did the lecturer know of similar occurrences, and it was specially remarkable that this music had sprung from the people unassisted by trained musicians. Mr. Korbay analysed the peculiar metrical construction and also sang several of the most popular folk-songs; and Mrs. Korbay played with much brilliancy three Rhapsodies written by her husband on the lines of "Hallgato."

MADAME ALBANI'S CONCERT.

The old-fashioned miscellaneous Concerts, of huge proportions, which were considered the finest musical entertainment in the last generation, have practically passed into desuetude; and although the programme offered by Madame Albani at the Queen's Hall, on Saturday afternoon, the 20th ult., did not include any works of magnitude, all the numbers selected were such as musicians as well as amateurs could listen to with gratification. Though scarcely in her best voice, the Canadian artist was heard to advantage in Elizabeth's Greeting from "Tannhäuser," the scena "Souvenirs de mon Enfance," from Hérold's neglected opera "Le Pré aux Clercs," which she sang in Italian, and in a new and well-written "Ave Maria," with pianoforte, organ, and violin accompaniment, by Mr. H. Lane Wilson, besides taking part with Miss Clara Butt, Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Aspinall, and Andrew Black in the beautiful Quintet from the third act of "Die Meistersinger." These artists, together with Miss Beatrice Langley, one of the best of our young violinists, and Miss Fanny Davies, whose ability as a pianist is universally acknowledged, contributed solos, but details are not required. Enough that the Concert was an artistic and popular success.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

MR. MACDONALD SMITH'S application of certain known physiological laws for the acquirement of instrumental technique promises to be of such importance, and has attracted so much attention of late in the musical world, that it was not surprising that a much larger audience than usual assembled at Trinity College on the 9th ult., when this gentleman read a paper explanatory of his method, under the title of "From Brain to Keyboard." The lecturer said that "touch," apart from expression, was merely the way of striking the keys, that it depended necessarily and solely upon the condition of the human mechanism of nerves and muscles intervening between the brain and the fingers, and that it could be taught and perfected with little trouble by pursuing the proper method. The muscles derived their nourishment entirely from the blood, and his system was based upon the physiological facts—firstly, that the nervous impulse which, by stimulating the muscle caused it to contract, produced at the same time a dilation of the small arteries leading to it, and in this way made a much larger supply of blood flow into it. Secondly, that a full contraction caused compression of the small blood-vessels in the muscle, and as any pressure upon veins caused the blood to flow towards the heart, the blood from which the goodness (so to speak) had been extracted went on its way to the revivifying lungs, and its place was taken by fresh blood from the arteries. The stronger the nervous impulse the greater the increased supply of blood; and it was on this account that the exercises of his system must be performed briskly. It was during rest that the muscle developed by feeding upon this blood left in it. The exercises, some of which were shown by the lecturer, were of a simple kind, and were designed to develop, in the required manner, the particular muscles used by the pianist. In conclusion, the following summary was given: 1. That good touch, in the general acceptance of the term, was not so entirely a natural, unteachable gift as was supposed, but might be imparted to every healthy pianist who had the taste to use it. 2. That the want of thorough, rapid, and independent command over fingers and arms was not, as had been thought, a brain difficulty, best conquerable by incessant repetition of difficult passages at the keyboard, but one of imperfection of muscular and nervous development. 3. That perfect development, and, therefore, good touch and technique, might by the exercise of full contraction of every muscle employed, and attention on the lines laid down to individual peculiarities, be readily acquired, in a degree variable, of necessity, with the constitution and store of nervous energy in the individual, but representing, nevertheless, a distinct advance effected by this latest application of science to art. Comprehension of the explanations was facilitated by a series of diagrams, thrown on a screen by means of a magic lantern, of the muscles and nerves, showing the way in which they derived their nourishment from the blood vessels.

The Trinity College Students' Orchestral Concert at Princes' Hall, on the 1st ult., had among its interesting features the first movement of a Pianoforte Concerto in G minor (not previously performed), by Mr. Albert W. Ketelbey, who played the solo portion. Bright, spontaneous, and exhibiting much constructive skill, it was exceedingly well received. Another popular work was Mr. Edward German's new "Gipsy Suite," given by desire—a series of tasteful movements that not only firmly seize attention at a first hearing, but increase in favour with further acquaintance. An "Intermezzo Pastorale," by Mr. F. Corder (who conducted throughout), also deserved well applause. These and other compositions obtained careful and spirited interpretation. Miss Annie E. Smith played Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor with point, and Maurer's Concerto for four violins was safely entrusted to Mr. Claude Stanley Fenigstein, Miss Florence Brotherhood, Miss Lilly J. P. Evans, and Master Sidney Faulks. The instrumental pieces were diversified by creditable vocal performances.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

MR. J. A. FULLER MAITLAND having been invited by the Council of the Musical Association to describe the contents and notation of the "Fitzwilliam Virginal Book," now in course of publication under his and Mr. Barclay Squire's joint-editorship, read, on the 9th ult., before the Society, an interesting paper dealing with the history and peculiarities of the famous volume. The popular and long-accepted title of "Queen Elizabeth's Virginal Book" was shown to be unjustifiable and misleading. One of the pieces, the "Ut, Re, Mi" of Sweelinck, bore the date 1612, when Elizabeth had been dead nine years; and another, entitled "D. Bull's Juell," existed in a MS. in the British Museum, where it was dated December 12, 1621. The splendid binding of the volume was, Mr. Maitland said, undoubtedly a piece of Netherlands work, and the theory of the compilation was that the actual book, bound as it was now, had been bought by Francis Tregian in the Netherlands, where he was known to have lived for some years, and that during his subsequent imprisonment in the Fleet Prison, where he was confined on a charge of recusancy, and where he died in 1619, he wrote out from manuscripts in his possession the greater part of the transcript which, in some cases, had proved the only means of their preservation. Many of the pieces occurred in other virginal books of the period, but this was the most important collection we possessed. One of the most largely represented composers was Peter Phillips, an English Catholic ecclesiastic settled in the Netherlands, and probably a connection of Morgan Phillips, one of the first professors of the Douay College, which Francis Tregian entered in 1586. Internal evidence also made it conclusive that the family of Tregian had had a great deal to do with the book. Subsequently it passed into the hands of Dr. Pepusch, at whose sale it was bought for £10 by R. Bremmer, who gave it to Lord Fitzwilliam before 1783. Owing to the strictness of the terms of Lord Fitzwilliam's will, which forbade the removal from the Museum of any part of his bequest, it at first seemed impossible to print the virginal book, since no one could be found with the requisite knowledge who also had sufficient leisure to devote to the work at Cambridge. Two years ago, however, the difficulty was surmounted through Mr. C. F. Bell, an ardent antiquarian and accomplished photographer, who undertook to photograph the entire volume on a reduced scale, so that the work of translation into ordinary notation could be carried on wherever most convenient. This task proved more difficult than was anticipated. The volume consisted of 440 pages, ruled in six-line staves. Three clefs were used, and in all possible positions; but the most common was the G clef on the fourth line from the top of the upper staff and the F clef on the third line from the top of the lower staff. This arrangement gave two lines for middle C, and it was observable that the use of the different staves for the middle parts foreshadowed the present custom of confining each staff to the right and left hand respectively. Very little regard was paid to the player's convenience in the arrangement of the parts, and the tails of the notes were frequently joined without reference to the rhythmic divisions of the bar. The notation, indeed, showed the transition from the old music to the new. Bars were only used in a most casual way, and there was scarcely a piece of respectable length that preserved throughout the same value of its bars. The time signature had very little to do with the actual value of the contents of the bars, and the relative time value of the notes could often only be determined by reference and research. The laws of musica ficta were also so generally understood by musicians, at the end of the sixteenth century, that all who sang in part-music could be trusted to put in the required sharps and flats for themselves. In early days the progression of the parts was everything, and the sequence of harmonies mattered very little, and nothing was more certain than from constantly hearing what we called "false relations" in vocal music, people's ears had become so accustomed to them that they were in no way obnoxious. They were also far from being disagreeable in just intonation, and were less noticeable in the evanescent tones of the virginal than when played on a modern pianoforte. Thus the transcriber of virginal music had to exercise great care to avoid doing despite to the spirit of this music. Many other difficulties presented themselves, such as the mistakes of the original copyists and the similarity of signs used for opposite purposes.

The illustrations, played by Mr. Fuller Maitland, with one exception, on a fine specimen of a sixteenth century Italian virginal lent by Mr. Dolmetsch, included transcriptions of madrigals by Luca Marenzio and Thomas Morley, and a remarkable piece by Dr. Bull, consisting of a series of repetitions of the six notes of the hexachord through the twelve keys, which suggested some rough kind of equal temperament being in use for instrumental music at this date. Further information of much interest concerning ancient music was elicited during the discussion, Mr. E. F. Jacques exhibiting the copy of a collection of virginal pieces by Radino, an Italian composer of the sixteenth century, about to be published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.

MUSICAL GUILD.

At the fourth and last Concert of the twelfth series of this Society, on the 2nd ult., Mr. Ferdinand Weist-Hill, a son of the late Principal of the Guildhall School of Music and a pupil of M. Ysaÿe, created a marked impression by his fine playing of the Prelude and Fugue in G minor by Bach, an impassioned Romance by Mynheer Kes, and one of Brahms's Hungarian Dances. The young artist produces a big, noble tone, his style and technique are masterly, and he plays with much of the passion and abandon for which his teacher is famous and which are doubly welcome in an Englishman. Very good performances were given of Beethoven's String Quartet in C (Op. 59) and Haydn's in D (Op. 20, No. 4), great pains having evidently been taken at rehearsals. Mr. Arthur Bent led both works in excellent style, his able associates being Messrs. W. Sutcliffe, A. Hobday, and Paul Ludwig. Rubinstein's Sonata for pianoforte and viola (Op. 49), a work in which much that is very beautiful is to be found side by side with not a little that is tedious, received a thoroughly artistic interpretation at the hands of Miss Ethel Sharpe and Mr. Alfred Hobday, two of the best native performers on their respective instruments. Madame Alice Gomez sang songs by Bohm, Brahms, and Miss Maude Valérie White in her well known manner.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

It is to be hoped that the Orchestral Concert given by the Highbury Philharmonic Society on the 2nd ult., at the Highbury Athenaeum, will prove the first of many more in this neighbourhood, for so able a body of executants afford a means for spreading a knowledge and love of orchestral music that it is highly desirable should be utilised. Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, Bizet's "L'Arlésienne" Suite, Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre," and the Overtures to Auber's "Crown Diamonds" and Gounod's "Mirella" all received most praiseworthy interpretations, the attack and intelligence of the players indicating abilities capable, by judicious development, of attaining a high standard of excellence. An effective rendering was also given of L. Maurer's cleverly-written Concerto for four violins and orchestra in A (Op. 55), the solo executants of which were Mr. G. H. Betjemann, Miss G. Wood, Mr. P. Nau, and Mr. L. V. Smith. Much applause was worthily elicited by the first-named gentleman's rendering of the violin solo part of Saint-Saëns's brilliant "Introduction et Rondo Capriccioso" (Op. 28), and the singing of vocal excerpts from works by Mozart, Mendelssohn, and Goring Thomas, by Madame Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners, was greatly appreciated. Mr. G. H. Betjemann and Mr. G. R. Betjemann were the Conductors.

STRATFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE proceedings in connection with this annual Festival, founded in 1883, occupied five days, beginning at the local Town Hall on March 28 and terminating on the 4th ult. with a Concert by the prize-winners, and the distribution of the prizes and certificates by Mr. Joseph Bennett. The competitors are restricted to the E. and N.E. postal districts of London and all places in Essex, thus representing a population of about two millions. Established with the view of offering inducements to the diligent study of music and of interesting the public in the resources of the district, the success of the Festival has steadily increased. This year the entries for over thirty classes of musical subjects numbered about 400, but, thanks to the excellent arrangements of the council, presided over by Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, and the secretary and manager, Mr. John Graham, not a hitch occurred throughout. The judges included Messrs. W. G. McNaught, Cowley, Cummings, Banister, O'Leary, and Betjemann, Dr. Creser, and Miss Kate Robinson. For the choral societies' class, perhaps the most important of the gathering, the sum of £15 was offered in prizes. Three choirs entered, each singing Henry Smart's "Lady, rise, sweet morn's awaking," and a piece of its own choice. Mr. Cummings awarded the first prize to the Eastern Divisional Select Choir of the London Sunday School Choir (Conductor, Mr. J. Merritt), and the second prize to the Woodford Choral Society (Conductor, Mr. J. F. W. Goodwin). There were two entries in the Church Choirs competition, but at the last moment one was withdrawn. Dr. Creser, after hearing the St. Paul's (Stratford) choir (Conductor, Mr. W. G. Puttick) sing Gadsby's anthem, "Among the gods," and a hymn-tune by Dr. Mann, "Go thou in life's fair morning," felt justified in awarding it the prize. In the School Choirs competition,

Mr. McNaught decided that Monteith Road, North Bow (Conductor, Mr. E. A. Price) and Malmesbury Road, Bow (Conductor, Mr. H. F. E. Dawson) were entitled to first and second honours respectively.

Before distributing the 172 prizes and certificates, on the 4th ult., Mr. Joseph Bennett referred to contests elsewhere, stating that it used to be said the Englishman would not equal the Welshman in musical capacity, but a great improvement had of late years been effected. The Stratford annual meeting was an event on which the East of London was to be congratulated and of which it had a right to boast. The position of the young people before him was an enviable one. The difficulties of learning music in the forties, when he was young, were great. Then, men had to struggle for a knowledge of music, but for young people of the present day everything had been done. Men like the late Mr. Curwen, his most worthy son, and others who had been associated with them in the Tonic Sol-fa movement, acted as engineers, and now the young people could go on with the utmost ease. Mr. Bennett ended by counselling his hearers respecting the use to which they should put the musical talents they had developed.
